Hayden recommends tax cuts

State officers applaud Governor Mike Hayden before his State of the State address to legislators. Among Hayden's topics were tax cuts and the Margin of Excellence plan.

Governor offers support for faculty salary hikes

By Erwin Seba Government Editor

TOPEKA - Gov. Mike Hayden endorsed the Margin of Excellence proposal for state universities only as far as it increases faculty salaries during his State of the State Address to the Kansas Legislature Tuesday.

Hayden's speech explained to the Legislature his budget proposals for fiscal year 1989, which begins July Hayden also added his support for the Qualifed Admissions policy recommended by the Kansas Board of Regents.

"I laud the regents for their courage for taking this step and urge the Legislature to act on a plan for qualified admissions," Hayden said.

In the first night session in the history of the Legislature, Hayden congratulated his administration for improving the state government's fiscal balances during his first year in office.

Hayden drew a round of applause from state senators and representatives assembled in the Kansas House chamber when he recommended "the most significant tax cuts in state history.

During a news conference before his address, Hayden said he removed $5.7 million from the regents' original Margin of Excellence proposal.

"Their total request for the Margin was $47 million. Our comparable number is $41.3 million. So we're essentially putting into higher education an additional $41.3 million. That's next year alone," Hayden said.

State Sen. Michael L. Johnston, senate minority leader, in the Democratic response to the governor's speech, said Hayden's proposal on Margin of Excellence did not go far enough.

"I am pleased that the governor's budget includes funding for part of this plan; however, I am disappointed that the governor did not go further and recommend implementation of the entire proposal," Johnston said.

Hayden said the most important element in the original proposal was the faculty salary increase request.

"What this budget does is it takes the Margin recommendation, recognizing that faculty salaries are the highest priority in (the proposal), and it fully funds the salary increase recommended in the Margin for teaching faculty," Hayden said at the news conference.

Hayden's budget report to the Legislature, released Tuesday, states that the average salary increase for faculty members at regents' universities would average 8.5 percent.

Faculty at Emporia State University and the University of Kansas will receive the lowest increase of 7.8 percent under Hayden's budget, while faculty at Fort Hays State University and The Wichita State University would receive the highest of 10.2 percent.

K-State faculty would receive a salary increase of 7.9 percent if Hayden's Margin of Excellence budget is passed by the Legislature without significant change.

Urging the Qualified Admissions policy on the Legislature, Hayden said reform of high school preparation of college-bound students must be considered "with freshman dropout rates of between 20 to 25 percent and millions of dollars dedicated to remedial education."

As recommended by the regents, Kansas high school graduates would be required to earn a 2.0 grade point average in a prescribed curriculum, or earn an an American Collegiate Testing score of 23 or graduate in the top one-third of their high school class to be admitted to a state university.

Johnston criticized Hayden for recommending a revision of the long-standing state law admitting residents who graduate from a Kansas high school to all state dard deductions for families and universities.

"At a time when we are asking all of you to make an increased financial commitment to higher education," Johnston said in his televised statement, "I don't believe that you want to hear that some of your sons or daughters may not have the opportunity to attend the university of their choice."

Introducing increases in the stan-personal taxpayers, Hayden said he followed the recommendations of his bi-partisan task force on tax reform. Hayden's budget report calls for Kansas deductions to increase from the current maximum deduction of $2,800 for married couples to $5,000 for tax year 1988.The deduction for single taxpayers

Sub-zero temps let Kansans 'chill out'

By Janet Swanson Campus Editor

Kansas has always been known for its unpredictable weather, but the latest round of sub-zero wind chills has set new standards.

"It looks like Manhattan is getting as bad as it's going to get right now,' said Ron Crandell, meteorologist for the National Weather Service's office in Topeka, Tuesday.

At 1 p.m. Tuesday, the Manhattan Municipal Airport registered with the service a temperature of 21 degrees and wind at 23 mph. 'That's a wind chill of 11 below zero or the same as a calm day with temperatures at 11 below," Crandell

Wind chill measures the amount of heat the human body loses while

"Be sure to minimize all skin exposure," Crandell said. "Wear a hat - the greatest amount of heat is lost through the head."

During January, Topeka averages a high temperature of 36 degrees and a low of 16. Snowfall for January averages 5.8 inches.

Despite the below-normal temperatures, no one in Manhattan has contacted Manhattan's American Red Cross office seeking shelter, said Lois Cowan, administrative assistant.

"I really thought we would be getting kind of busy. Maybe people are helping each other more than before," Cowan said.

Richard Gray, owner of Gray's Westloop Service, said business in his repair shop has increased slightly during the winter season.

"At this point, it's like the horse that was let out of the barn. Checking antifreeze is obvious, but you need to be sure to check alternator belts and battery connections," he said.

In addition, faults in brake lines become more apparent in cold weather. More drivers seem to prefer automobiles with front-wheel drive and all-season radial tires this winter than last, Gray said.

"All-season (tires) are more popular (than snow tires), because with them, you get better traction on four tires rather than two," Gray said.

In extremely cold weather, drivers should start their automobile at least every other day and let it run for 15 to 20 minutes, said Loren Thomas, mechanic for C & M Auto Care Cen-

"The main thing to watch and check is your antifreeze," he said.

'Woefully inadequate' salaries plague co-op

By Deron Johnson Campus Editor

Salaries below the nation's poverty level are forcing instructors to leave K-State's Childcare Cooperative, and co-op officials have turned to the administration and Student Senate for help.

An additional $100,000 per year in funding is needed to reverse the tide of exiting teachers, co-op officials say. Not one teacher that was hired when the co-op opened in 1985 is still with the center, and average tenure is seven or eight months. "Our problem is we are paying the poverty level for our teachers," said Dawn Peters, chairwoman of the co-op's board of directors. Lead teachers, who are expected to have a bachelor's degree, are paid $4.50 an hour, and assistants receive $3,50 an hour.

Peters believes an additional $100,000 annually would solve the co-op's problems. Faculty Senate at its meeting Tuesday voted in favor of a draft resolution requesting the $100,000.

"With that we could raise our teacher salaries to acceptable levels," Peters said.

Tammy Rankin is about to call the co-op quits./Page 8

Target salaries for a 12-month contract are $15,000 for lead teachers with degrees, $12,000 for leads without degrees and $10,000 for assistant teachers, Peters said.

Currently, lead teachers on a nine-month contract receive $7,128, excluding layoff periods, which are common. If laid off for one month - such as at Christmas or spring breaks, when demand for the cooperative nitely amiss," the memo stated.

decreases — the pay is $6,336. Assistants receive $5,544 for nine months, and $4,928 if laid off for a month.

The national poverty line for a family of two is $7,240.

"What our lead and assistant teachers receive is woefully inadequate," wrote Barry and Aruna Michie, members of the co-op's personnel committee, in an Oct. 8, 1987, memo to the co-op's board of directors. The Michies are also faculty members who have a son in the co-op. In the memo, the Michies wrote that 13 of the co-op's 17 teachers left during 1986-87, five of them specifically because of inadequate income. "When qualified, dedicated staff leave ... because they can make more money working for tips and waiting tables, something is defi-

Peters said she believes the salaries exploit the teachers, particularly because the majority of them are women.

"It's clearly exploitation of those teachers," she said. "This community has a problem with that. There a lot of professional women with degrees who are unable to find jobs in their field. We're really taking advantage of that."

A shaky past

The problems of "teacher flight" come about a year after the co-op regained its financial footing after nearly closing.

"We were about to go under," Peters said of the period before the cooperative went under the Department of Housing's umbrella.

In December 1986, the department assumed all of the co-op's fiscal and managerial responsibilities after it was discovered the cooperative was nearly $30,000 in debt. A K-State task force made the recommendation that the cooperative's fiscal obligations be turned over to the housing department.

Thomas Frith, director of the Department of Housing, said that although the cooperative has had some months in the red during the past year, the co-op has run generally in the black. However, he said, an increase in money is necessary for the co-op to break

"Right now, we are in the process of evaluating the cost of the services," Frith said. "We need to change (the user fees) for these

Man sentenced for deserting son

HEBRON, Neb. - A man who left the body of his young son in a frozen roadside ditch two years ago to "let God take care of him" was sentenced Monday to 18 months in prison.

Eli Stutzman, 37, pleaded guilty in Thayer County Court to misdemeanor charges of abandoning a body and concealing the death of his 9-year-old son, Danny.

A motorist found Danny's body, clad only in blue pajamas, near Chester the day before Christmas 1985. The body was not claimed and residents collected money to bury him.

Danny was identified only last month and his name was added to the tombstone. Stutzman was arrested in Azle, Texas, by authorities acting on a tip.

After Stutzman pleaded guilty to the misdemeanor charges, County Attorney Dan Werner asked the judge to dismiss a more serious charge of felony child abuse. However, Werner said no plea bargain was involved. In court, Stutzman calmly told of his son's death the night of Dec. 14, 1985, as they were driving from Wyoming to Werner said autopsy results were inconclusive and that the state could prove no specific reason for why Danny died. Defense lawyer J. William Gallup said one pathologist said Danny apparently died of natural causes, while on the stand, Stutzman denied having killed the child.

Sandinistas charge Illinois man

MANAGUA, Nicaragua - The Sandinista government Tuesday charged a jailed Illinois farmer with violating public order and security and accused him of having ties to "the war of aggression" waged by the Contra rebels.

Government prosecutor Julio Cabrera delivered the papers to a revolutionary court in Managua. Cabrera declined to read the charges but told reporters that James Denby, 58, was linked to the "war of aggression" by the U.S.-supported rebels and he was charged with violating public order and security and criminal association.

Conviction on the charges carries a jail term of up to 30

Schoolteacher dies at age 114

PHILADELPHIA - Florence Knapp, a schoolteacher who marched for women's suffrage in 1919, retired in 1935 and lived in the same house for 110 years, has died at the age of 114, two weeks after she officially became the world's oldest person.

"I think she could never understand why she was allowed to live so long," her niece, Ruth Oberholtzer, said Tuesday. "One time she said that she feels like she might have been bad and this was God's way of punishing her."

But then, she recalled, Miss Knapp laughed and with a twinkle in her eye talked about how she was going to marry a younger man - her 75-year-old physician.

She graduated from college more than 90 years ago and was a staunch Democrat who exercised the right to vote until she was over 100, said Oberholtzer.

Miss Knapp died Monday in a suburban nursing home. Her predecessor as the oldest authenticated person had been Anna Eliza Williams, of Swansea, Wales, who died Dec. 27 at 114 years and 209 days.

Black bears part after 17 years

BUNKER HILL, Kan. - Gertrude is in bear heaven, Alice is in retirement at an exotic animal ranch and Bunker Hill is a little sadder.

Gertrude and Alice, two female black bears, drew tourists off Interstate 70 to the Bear House Truck Stop and Cafe for 17 years. But last September, Gertrude became ill, said Sheila Kuntzsch, whose husband manages the truck stop.

Not even the skills of K-State veterinarians could save her; Gertrude was put to sleep. Alice was given to a Bennett exotic

One of the Bear House's owners, Ron Ross, said he might have kept Alice, and perhaps even replaced Gertrude, if it hadn't been for insurance costs.

Over the past several years, the bears have nipped two people even though signs were posted and mesh was installed over the cages. People, Ross said, persisted in sticking their arms

The insurance companies told Ross that if he wanted to continue to have liability insurance, the bears would have to go. The bears had never been that friendly, said Ross.

"They're wild animals," he said. "The smaller one would jump at you."

Baby gets international care

TORONTO - Oriana Pais touched her baby daughter for the first time only after the infant cleared customs.

Baby Stephanie was flown to a Buffalo, N.Y., hospital on Jan. 2 because there weren't enough special nurses to care for her at Toronto's Hospital for Sick Children.

The child was born 11 weeks premature and was critically ill when she was flown to the Buffalo Sick Children's Hospital a few hours after Ms. Pais, 23, of Toronto, gave birth.

Stephanie came home Monday in an incubator aboard a Ministry of Health helicopter. It touched down at the Toronto Island Airport, so customs agents could make a quick check, and then flew on to the hospital. Gifts of stuffed toys and hair bows from the Buffalo hospital accompanied her.

"It was exciting," Ms. Pais said after touching Stephanie in the newborn intensive care unit Monday night. "I'd only seen her in pictures before, but I'm so glad she's doing well."

Doctors were eager to have Stephanie and her parents reunited as soon as possible so all could recover faster, said Dr. Barry Smith, head of neonatology.

Instructor, student pilot killed

MOUNTAIN HOME, Idaho - An Air Force fighter jet crashed after takeoff during a training flight Tuesday, killing an instructor and a student pilot, authorities said.

Lt. Steve Solomonson, information officer, said the dead were Capt. Frederick A. Gerhart, 31, of Lolo, Mont., an instructor pilot with the 389th Tactical Fighter Training Squadron, and Capt. Robert A. Meyer Jr., 27, a student pilot. Meyer was born in Ohio, but no information on his hometown was available Tuesday night, authorities said.

Both were pronounced dead at the scene by an Air Force doctor. Solomonson said.

Solomonson said the F-111A fighter jet crashed about 2:20 p.m. Tuesday, in a desert area about three miles west of the air base near here.

3 K-State cows take honors

Three cows from K-State's breeding program were recognized by the American Hereford Association for superior performance among all registered Hereford cows in the nation.

The cows are now listed in the AHA's Total Performance Records Most Efficient Cow Report, which represents less than one-half of 1 percent of all registered Hereford cows in the United States.

For the cows to be recognized in the report, they were required to be four years of age or older, they must have had their first calf no later than at 25 months of age, they must have had no more than a 370-day calving interval and they must have had calves that were weaned at least 5 percent above the herd average.

Aggieville riot prevention costly

By Jackie Brazzle Staff Writer

The age of the riot seems to be over, but at what cost? For the Riley County Police Department, the cost of preventing a riot in Aggieville was close to $30,000.

According to Alvan Johnson, RCPD director, as much as $30,000 was spent on preventing another riot in Aggieville after the K-State-University of Kansas football game Nov. 7, 1987.

"This cost was absorbed into the budget fund of the RCPD," Johnson said.

The money came from the $35,000 to $40,000 in the police officers' professional insurance fund. He said the cutback in this area was not harmful.

"We will still pay for professional insurance, but we will just have to do it later," Johnson said.

RCPD estimates $30,000

State police chief, campus police spent $1,800 toward the effort to prevent a riot in Aggieville.

Although the $1,800 allocation caused a cutback in campus police materials and vehicle maintenance, it has not affected vital services, he

"There were no special allocations planned for (the Aggieville effort). There was some impact because of what we could have used that money for, but it has not affected other important services," Beckom said.

The K-State Police Department had 12 officers who participated. All officers received regular overtime pay for the duty.

Johnson said 60-70 police officers, including administrators, were used in Aggieville. He said these officers included not only RCPD, but officers from K-State, KU, Wichita and the Kansas Highway Patrol.

Johnson said similar protection for Aggieville will be used in two years when K-State hosts KU again. The only change will be the use of fewer police officers, he said. "We could have gotten by with fewer officers, but we would still have had enough men to handle any problems," Johnson said.

Beckom said the K-State Police Department will cooperate again in two years.

"We are almost committed to helping in two years because any disturbance during that time has a strong detrimental effect on the University," Beckom said.

Mike Conduff, city manager, said Beckom said.

a repeat of this effort would depend on recommendations from the people involved. We need to fine tune some areas and we hope to adapt to any local conditions at that time," Conduff "I think we were highly successful," he said. "We had very few arrests and virtually no incidents of vandalism." Johnson termed the Aggieville effort a success. The reason for the success, he said, was the officers' prevention of open containers being brought into the area. Beckom also had a positive attitude about the effort.

"I thought it went very well,"

Selective admissions will not solve problem

Gov. Mike Hayden supported qualified admissions for all the regents universities. He said a 25 percent drop-out rate is too high, and students need to be better prepared for college.

The proposed policy was drawn up by the Board of Regents. It limits the freshman class to those who scored a 23 on their American Collegiate Testing exam, or received a 2.0 GPA in a specific high school curriculum, or graduated in the top third of their high school class.

The class will also consist of people who did not meet the criteria but were allowed in the 15 percent "window." Each school would be allowed to admit 15 percent of its new student enrollment even though those students did not meet state requirements.

The high drop-out rate does reflect the fact that students are not prepared for college, but that fact reflects a more serious problem. When high school graduates have trouble coping with Composition I and Introduction to Speech, they will likely have trouble outside of college as well.

The state has an obligation to teach all high school students - not just the college bound. If most cannot survive the first two years of college, it is not likely they will ever become productive citizens.

The state should shift its concern for better education from potential college students to all high school students. Qualified admissions could leave behind high school sophomores who think they cannot or will not attend college.

To meet the curriculum standards, students must plan early. Two years of foreign languages, four years of English, three years of math, three years of social studies and three years of natural sciences are required. Freshmen and sophomores are forced to decide whether they want to attend college. The risks are high that potentially successful college students will decide not to attend college when they are 17 years old.

Students can win places in freshman classes in other ways, but it is not likely they will score a 23 on their ACT tests when they have not taken the proper classes. The state's average is 18. And to rely on being in the top third of the class is risky.

Not only will qualified admissions mean discouraging potentially successful college students, it also takes the responsibility to teach out of the school's hands and places it into the hands of the students, who must decide what they want when they are 15 years old to 18 years old.

And yet another semester. The season of peace and good will toward all is over. It's time to hit the books once again.

Like last semester, each and every Collegian will contain an editorial page filled with letters, cartoons, editorials and columns. Since it can be difficult to tell which is which, this seems the perfect time to explain the differences for future reference.

The only element on the page that the Collegian staff has control over is the editorials. Editorials are run every day on the left-hand side of the page in larger print than the other

A group of people called the Editorial Board meets on Mondays and Thursdays to decide the issues on which the paper should publish an opinion. When the group reaches a consensus on an opinion, one of the members is assigned to write it, and an editorial is born.

Editorials are the only elements over which the staff has control, and unfortunately, they have been the weakest elements. They have often been sketchy and naive. A number of excuses could be made, but they would not be of much use now.

Since I'm relatively young and it's a new year, I'm confident - more or less - the editorials can be stronger. They will concentrate more on campus and area issues and will be supported with more than "this is the way we see it."

But if, for whatever reason, you find the editorials are still weak and unimpressive, I invite you to express your displeasure in a letter. To ensure your opinion is printed unabridged, it should be brief and to the point. About one typed page, doubledspaced, is the maximum that can be allowed. Longer letters may be printed, but they are likely to be edited.

Commentary

CHRISTINE DOLL Editorial Page

Letters are not limited to rebutting editorials. All letters are welcomed. Since one of the page's objectives is to stimulate debate, letters are a necessity. Otherwise, readers would always hear from the same writers who probably have not changed the way they think or write.

Editor

Letters provide new arguments to old news and new issues to a monotonous paper. They are also an efficient way to keep the paper responsible to its public. Journalists, as a general rule, do not like to read in their own newspaper how they messed up.

On the other hand, letters will not be published if they are unsigned or fallacious. The paper is not a sounding board for the coward or the uninformed.

Another element the Collegian staff has no control over is the columns. Indeed, it is often wondered whether anyone has control over them. The editor of the paper hires columnists, and then the columnists are on their own. They have sole responsibility for what they write. Any subject, any statement, any slam is free of Collegian staff influence. The only control I have as the editorial page editor is writing their headlines, which reflect the

It could be argued the editors hire columnists who are sympathetic to their own beliefs. It is a plausible argument, but not applicable this semester. The eight columnists hired this semester are certainly not homogenous in their philosophies nor in what they want to write about.

One thing all columnists do have in common is their dislike for a maximum column length. The length is not short - a little longer than this column - but they feel it inhibits them. After all, some of the best writing is found in books where it can fully develop, they tell me. As if readers wanted to read a book every day.

Maximum length rules have come and gone. Instead of inhibiting, the rules help narrow an argument to a digestible scope, and readers will have more interest in the writing when they do not have to take notes to remember it all.

Besides the regular columnists, guest columnists often are granted space to express their views. These usually begin as letters that are too long to be published but are wellwritten and make interesting points. The maximum length for guest columns is three doubled-spaced pages.

The last element - cartoons - will be a bit different this semester. Richard Broadfoot and Matt Chrispen will each produce editorial cartoons.

For the first time, the page will feature local cartoons that have the caricatures and brazenness of international and national cartoons - but with a local flavor.

So, it is time to put away the mistletoe and the ideals of peace on earth and to get out a new scorecard for this semester's editorial

In an effort to further enforce drunk driving laws, Gov. Mike Hayden and Attorney General Robert increase in funds and may reduce Stephan proposed new legislation on traffic fatalities, the American Civil Jan. 6.

One measure included in the proposal would allow a police officer to take a driver's license from an individual arrested for DUI until a hearing is held.

The legislation is partly in response to a recent rise in traffic deaths due to accidents involving alcohol. Traffic fatalities caused by drunk driving on Kansas highways rose from 155 in 1985 to 224 in 1986.

Another reason for the new law is the 50 percent increase in federal funds for which Kansas would be eligible if the law is passed. The increase would total more than $800,000 a year, the governor said. This would be used for alcohol and drug education programs.

Although the proposal, if passed, will make Kansas eligible for an Liberties Union of Kansas and Western Missouri said the proposal is unconstitutional.

It is an individual's right to a fair trial and to be considered innocent before proven guilty. If a police officer is allowed to take away an individual's license before that person's trial or conviction, the individual will be denied the right promised to individuals in the Constitution — the right to due process of the Drunk driving does need to be stopped, and every effort to reduce the number of fatalities caused by drunk driving is necessary, but lawmakers should not push aside the Constitution in their zeal to stop this national tragedy.

Time to make pledges, plans

Welcome back for the start of a new year and a fresh semester. The spring semester of college perpetually brings forth three resolutions from students. They want to lose weight, study harder (or at least make better grades) and not visit Aggieville as much.

A new year offers us a clean slate and a chance to correct those habits of ours which we perceive to be character flaws. For example, you might resolve to lose that 10 pounds of weight that your mom so generously gave you for Christmas. Or, you might resolve to apologize to your hometown friends who attend KU for making fun of their student government's distribution of condoms at registration.

There is an old adage that says: "The more things change, the more things stay the same." This is usually true of the changes we resolve to make from year to year that we never really seem to make.

However, motivated by a fear of not being "hip," I felt that I should make my own resolutions as a columnist, hoping that my readers will provide the incentive for me to keep them.

Here are my resolutions as a Collegian columnist:

I resolve never to attach more than five superlatives to the proper noun "United States." I realize that such mindless, negative rambling accomplishes little or nothing. For example, "the imperialistic, fascist, destabilCommentary izing, unethical, capitalistic, terroristic United States." If I ever do, you can call me "the imperialistic, fascist...

I resolve not to write columns that judge the social worth of different rock groups, for I believe that music is a matter of taste and opinion. Besides, it is not worth using valuable newpaper space to slam groups such as AC/DC, whose guitarist, Angus Young, might become distraught at the prospect of having to learn a fourth chord so the group can produce more complex music.

I resolve never to write letters to myself in my columns. This will be my hardest one to Like most college seniors, I have been swamped with junk mail from coffee clubs, credit cards and Ed McMahon's sweepstakes. However, I never receive "real" mail. "Real" mail is defined as a personal letter that is written specifically to the person receiving the letter. Even my mother has sent me only one letter during four years of college.

It would probably help if I were to write more letters myself ("real" letters, that is), but I'm not the writing type. With a little perseverance, I think I can handle this one.

I resolve to use as few acronyms as possible. For those of you who have been working on crossword puzzles during lectures and never took the time to figure out what the clue was asking for when it wanted an acronym, it is an abbreviation using the first letter from each word of a title, such as MASH standing for Mobile Army Surgical Hospital.

I feel that the DOD (Department of Defense), basketball analyst Dick Vitale, and other columnists use enough acronyms without my compounding the problem.

The average person never knows what they mean. I can imagine the millions of people who lie awake at night wondering if FHA stands for the Farmers Home Administration, the Federal Housing Authority or the Future Homemakers of America.

Imagine the twisted ideas that someone could get by thinking of the Future Homemakers of America when reading a story about the Farmers Home Administration.

"The FHA has announced a policy of evaluating its members based on their achieving high feed conversion efficiency and rate of gain achieved." A scary thought indeed.

City considers annexing Fairmont

By Chad L. Sanborn Staff Writer

Manhattan City Commissioners decided Tuesday to study annexation of the Fairmont community before supplying it with water.

Both the Riley County commission and residents of the community located southeast of downtown Manhattan across the Kansas River - have asked the city commission to consider supplying water to the area. Many residents claim the water, although not necessarily dangerous, is undrinkable due to foul odor and

"We need to look at the larger issue of annexation," said Commissioner Richard Hayter. "If an area develops in a certain way, when it is annexed the city is stuck with it."

City Manager Mike Conduff said if the city did supply the water, it would be on the stipulation that when it came time for Manhattan to annex the community, the residents would not oppose the move.

There has been talk in the past of Gene Klingler said if annexation was in the future for the Fairmont community he would be even more open to the possibility of Manhattan providing the water. However, Klingler said providing water to an unannexed area raises certain problems for the city.

"This (the issue) raises two problems," Klingler said. "Do we hold to past commissions' philosophy (concerning using land around Manhattan) and can we provide service to an area not in the city limits."

Another issue, brought up by Commissioner Kent Glasscock, is the possiblity the city, if it did provide service, would be obligated to pay public utilities already in the

There are three water services in the Fairmont area: Crestline, which is not public only because it serves less than 10 people; another well which serves the Fairmont Trailer Court; and Fairmont Heights, which owner Everett Stilley said has about 115 customers.

City Attorney William Frost said it annexing the district, and Mayor is possible the city would have to provide compensation of public utilities in the area. However, he stressed this was only speculation, and he was not admitting the city would have to Stilley, who told the commission he has been held up as a bad guy concerning the water in the Fairmont community, said he was happy with their decision.

"They (the commissioners) are doing a good job of looking into (the issue). They need the full information," he said. Some of the residents claim Stilley's company is supplying bad water. However, he maintains it is good.

"I keep telling them it is not contaminated. The state health department says it is not."

After the commission finished discussing the issue, Katie Smith, chairwoman of the Fairmont Community Task Force, said although she wished the commission would have committed to supplying the water, she was glad they were at least considering it.

"I'm glad they didn't shut the door in our faces. I don't think they will turn their backs on the people."

During the meeting, Smith showed the commission four jars of water, each with a brownish tint. from different private wells in the Fairmont area. She told the commission she hates to see children having to drink the water.

"I would hate to see anything happen to the children down the road because we wouldn't take the time to do something," she said.

Klingler said the commission would begin looking at the possibility of annexing the area but it will not be done in two meetings.

"It would not be fair to say there is no chance or there is a guarantee they will get water within the year," he said.

The commission also decided to wait until a future legislative meeting to debate whether to create a committee to oversee appropriations of funds to local social agencies.

Although it could be on the agenda Tuesday, Jan. 19, Conduff said it might have to wait until the Feb. 16 meeting. The Jan. 19 agenda is already set.

Rochester tops researchers' list of healthy areas

By The Associated Press

PORTLAND, Ore. - It may come as a shock to people who think of Pittsburgh as a smokebelching steel city with a fuelpolluted river, but a pair of Oregon researchers say it's among the 10 healthiest areas to live in the nation.

Carl Abbott, a professor of urban studies and planning at Portland State University, and Joan Starker, an urban studies graduate student, will publish the results of their study in the March issue of Health Magazine, a magazine for the fitnessconscious with a circulation of 800,000.

Abbott and Starker, who did not visit the cities they surveyed, relied on statistics from the U.S.

Bureau of Census, federal health agencies and private health organizations.

They weighed various factors to compile their Top 10 list, such as alcohol consumption, legislation that limits smoking in public places, the opportunity for regular exercise, air quality, pollen count, access to the outdoors, cancer rates, the rate of violent crime, traffic deaths and accidental deaths, the availability of hospital beds and the number of physicians per capita.

Pittsburgh ranked fourth in the top 10 in parts because of its strict regulations on smoking in public. Seattle made it into the top 10 - it came in ninth place - partly because 25 percent of its residents are trained in emergency cardiopulmonary resuscitation, or CPR.

K-State to share $1.8 million grant

By The Associated Press

WICHITA - The Wesley Foundation has announced a $1.8 million grant to recruit and train cancer researchers at the University of Kansas, the KU School of Medicine in Kansas City and K-

The money will be used by 34 senior cancer researchers at the three schools to hire post-doctoral fellows as assistants, Wesley Foundation president Duane Dyer said Monday.

Dyer said the grant will pay the salaries of the Wesley Foundation Scholars, as the assistants would be called, and some minor administrative and communications costs of the program for two

The cancer research financed by the grant will focus on three areas: molecular biology and cell growth regulation; anti-cancer drugs and multiple drug resistance; and tumor immunology and resistance to cancer.

"The goal is to attract the best young minds available to Kansas to continue their training in basic and clinical cancer research," Dyer said.

may come after landfill closes Waste

By Chad L. Sanborn Staff Writer

Riley County commissioners signed a five-county agreement last week which could possibly lead the participating counties to deal collectively with solid waste management.

However, the recommendations for the management plan may come months after the Riley County land-

Clay, Geary, Marshall, Pottawatomie and Riley counties signed the agreement Jan. 4 in an effort to improve solid waste management in each county. The agreement also includes Fort Riley, the Jeffery Energy Center, located five miles north of St. Marys, and K-State.

The Big Lakes Regional Council, an association that helps coordinate activities between local governments in northcentral Kansas, will administer the plan.

The plan, which will be published Jan. 15, directs the Council to hire a solid waste management consultant to evaluate each county's solid waste disposal system and to make recommendations for improvements.

The regional agreement was proposed by the Riley County representatives on the Council and was reached after studying waste plans in similar geographic regions in New Hampshire, Iowa and Utah, said Ron Radil, Council director.

"We were mostly interested in the time it took to develop and implement this type of plan," Radil said.

He said the plan is scheduled to be complete by the end of December 1989, at which time the counties will decide whether to act upon the recommendations.

"We'll have to see what unfolds as we look at the project. We may have to have some sort of interim or transfer station."

-Monty Wedel

However, the Kansas Department of Health and Environment ordered the Riley County Landfill closed by mid-1989. Riley County commissioners filed for an extension of the closure date, but to date, KDHE has not granted the request.

No one seems to know what Riley County will do with its waste from the time the landfill closes to implementation of the consultant's recommendations, said Monty Wedel, Riley County director of planning.

"We'll have to see what unfolds as we look at the project. We may have to have some sort of interim or transfer station," he said. "Who knows? Maybe we can work with the state to keep the landfill open. They might be willing to give an extension if we

In addition to evaluating current waste systems, Radil said the Council wants the consultant - a firm with experience in solid waste technology or planning — to investigate possible alternatives to existing solid waste landfills, such as incineration or recycling.

"Everything is an option," Wedel said.

The consultant may recommend anything from building a waste facility in one county which would serve all five counties, Wedel said, to recommending each county "do their own thing." Radil said the Council will also ask the consultant to look at existing and possible future federal, state and local laws regulating solid waste. This will help to avoid obstacles that may arise after recommendations are made.

Although legal obstacles could block implementation of the consultant's recommendation, cost could be another barrier to the recommendations.

Radil said there is no way of knowing what it may cost to implement a recommendation in an area encompassing five counties.

Another obstacle could be a coun- County."

ty withdrawing from the plan, especially if the consultant recommends a single waste facility, Radil said. However, he said he believes this is

"Everyone has agreed to work together so far," he said. "I don't see (anyone withdrawing). All the counties operate landfills and know the problems which can develop. So all counties are ready to participate." Radil said a county would probably be uncooperative only if it disagreed with the recommendations.

However, Wedel pledged Riley

County's allegiance to the plan. "Riley County is not looking to export its waste to other counties," he said. "We hope to build an energy recovery facility, and if one is built it will probably be built in Riley

Costa Rica's president advises Nicaragua to remove foreigners involved in violent activities

By The Associated Press

SAN JOSE, Costa Rica - President Oscar Arias on Tuesday told leaders of the Contra rebels that they will have to leave Costa Rica if they do not give up their support for the armed fight against leftist Nicaragua.

Arias said in a letter to the leaders of the Nicaraguan Resistance that he had advised government authorities that foreigners involved in political activities supporting violence and war should be forced out of the

"It pains me to adopt a decision of this nature, but the supreme interests of Costa Rica - in this case of peace - will always be first," Arias said in

"It pains me above all because I have developed a friendship with you through the years," he said.

The letter was sent to Alfonso Robelo, Alfredo Cesar and Pedro Joaquin Chamorro, political leaders of the Nicaraguan Resistance, which is the umbrella organization for the Contra rebels.

The three leaders, who reside in Costa Rica, could not be reached at their office or homes for comment.

Arias' letter - his strongest to date to the rebels - was delivered just days before five Central American presidents are to meet in San Jose, the capital of Costa Rica.

The peace plan was drawn up by Arias. It calls for cease-fires in the region's wars, general amnesties, greater democracy, an end to outside aid to insurgents and a halt to the use of any country's territory as a staging area for attacks on another nation.

Dole states Iran-Contra not 'real issue anymore'

By The Associated Press

Republican presidential rivals George Bush and Bob Dole declared a truce of sorts on Tuesday in their bickering over the Iran-Contra affair, while Democratic Sen. Paul Simon defended his vote in Congress for across-the-board spending cuts.

A mid-winter blizzard disrupted Iowa campaign plans, but Bush and Dole both told New Hampshire voters they wanted to change the focus of their rivalry for the GOP nomination.

"I don't think Iran-Contra is a real issue anymore," Dole said in Somersworth.

"It's kind of died on the vine," added the Kansas senator, who has demanded for the past several days that the vice president disclose his role in the developments of the arms-for-hostages deals.

Bush, who answered questions under oath from Iran-Contra prosecutors on Monday, refused to divulge what he told them. But he said he believed he had made a mistake in responding last week to a series of attacks from Dole.

"I want to stay with the high road and not respond to some other candidate, keep it on the issues as much as I can, keep my cool as much as I can and absorb whatever shots come my way," he said.

"I want to revert back to the old George Bush," he said, joking, "It's less interesting."

ry the catch of the day

By Renee Shephard

Features Editor

Good morning! It's back to school, back to the grind, back to your own cooking and dirty dishes. Whatever happened to the three weeks of Mom's cooking? Forget it, it will only make you cry.

Now that you're thoroughly depressed, let me brighten your day a bit. You see, I know you're sitting there thinking you will never be able to cook anything that doesn't contain either tuna or peanut butter. That's all right. I'll help

Take your ordinary can of tuna fish. Everybody has at least one. It's on the back shelf of the cabinet, next to the 12 packages of noodles which cost a

Be brave. Take that can of tuna down from the shelf, open it up, and we'll have a feast. With this one little can of pressed fish, you can easily create casseroles, spaghetti, curried tuna and yes, even sandwiches. Don't take my word for it. Read on, try it out, experiment.

Tuna Spaghetti

- 1 package (7 oz.) thin spaghetti
- 2 cloves garlic, finely chopped
- 1/4 cup margarine or butter
- % cup half-and-half 1 teaspoon dried basil leaves
- 1/4 teaspoon dried oregano leaves
- 1 can (91/4 oz.) tuna, drained
- 1/2 cup sliced, pimiento-stuffed olives
- 1/4 cup grated Parmesan cheese

Cook spaghetti as directed on package; drain. Cook garlic in margarine in 2-quart saucepan until garlic is golden brown. Stir in half-and-half, basil and oregano. Heat to boiling. Stir in tuna, olives and cheese. Boil and stir 1 minute. Pour over hot spaghetti. Sprinkle with snipped parsley if desired.

Makes 5 servings; 375 calories per serving.

Curried Tuna

- 1/4 cup margarine or butter
- 2 teaspoons curry powder
- 2 green onions (with tops), thinly sliced
- 3 cups cooked rice 1/4 cup hot water
- 1/2 teaspoon salt teaspoon ground ginger
- 1/4 teaspoon garlic powder

1 tablespoon snipped parsley

- 1/4 teaspoon ground red pepper
- 1 can (121/2 oz.) tuna in water, drained hard-cooked egg, chopped medium heat until margarine is melted. Stir in rice, water, salt, ginger, garlic powder, red pepper and tuna. Cook and stir until tuna is hot, about 5 minutes. Sprinkle with egg and parsley. Serve with chutney, if desired.

To microwave, place margarine, curry powder and onions in 2-quart microwaveable casserole dish. Cover tightly and microwave on high until margarine is melted, 1 to 2 minutes. Omit water. Stir rice, salt, ginger, garlic powder, red pepper and tuna into casserole. Cover tightly and microwave until tuna is hot, 3 to 5 minutes.

Makes 6 servings; 290 calories per serving.

Creamy Tuna Casserole

- 8 ounces uncooked noodles
- can (121/2 oz.) tuna; drained
- 1 can (4 oz.) sliced mushrooms, drained jar (2 oz.) sliced pimientos, drained
- 11/2 cups dairy sour cream
- 3/4 cup milk
- teaspoon salt
- 1/4 teaspoon pepper
- cup dry bread crumbs
- 1/4 cup grated Parmesan cheese
- 2 tablespoons margarine or butter, melted Snipped parsley

Cook noodles as directed; drain. Mix noodles, tuna, mushrooms, pimientos, sour cream, milk, salt and pepper in 2-quart casserole dish. Mix bread crumbs, cheese and margarine; sprinkle over tuna mixture.

Bake uncovered in 350-degree oven until hot and bubbly, 35 to 40 minutes.

Sprinkle with parsley. To microwave, decrease milk to 3/2 cup. Mix noodles, tuna, mushrooms, pimientos, sour cream, milk, salt and pepper in 2-quart microwaveable casserole. Cover tightly and microwave on medium for 10 minutes; stir. Mix bread crumbs, cheese and margarine; sprinkle over tuna mixture. Microwave uncovered until hot and bubbly, 4 to 7 minutes longer. Makes 6 servings; 430 calories per serving.

Baked Tuna Slices

- 11/4 cups buttermilk baking mix 1/4 cup mayonnaise or salad dressing
- cups shredded Cheddar cheese (8 oz.)
- can (61/2 oz.) tuna, drained
- 1/4 cup chopped onion
- cup sliced celery
- tablespoons lemon juice 1/2 -pound loaf French bread cut lengthwise into halves or 6 slices bread Heat oven to 450 degrees. Mix baking mix, mayonnaise and egg. Stir in remaining ingredients except bread. Spread about 11/2 cups of mixture evenly on cut sides of French bread or spread about 1/2 cup of mixture on each slice Bake on ungreased cookie sheet until puffy and golden brown, 10 to 15 minutes. Cut each half of French bread crosswise into thirds. Serve

Makes 6 servings; 570 calories per serving.

Tuna Patty Sandwiches

- 1 egg, slightly beaten
- 1 can (91/4 oz.) tuna, drained 4 green onions (with tops), chopped
- ¼ cup cracker crumbs
- 1 tablespoon lemon juice
- 1/2 teaspoon salt
- ¼ teaspoon pepper
- 2 tablespoons margarine or butter 4 hamburger buns, split and toasted
- 4 slices process American cheese
- Lettuce leaves
- 1 tomato, sliced
- 1/4 cup tartar sauce
- Mix egg, tuna, onions, cracker crumbs, lemon juice, salt and pepper. Shape into 4 patties, each about 1/2 -inch thick. Heat margarine in 10-inch skillet over medium heat until melted. Cook patties in margarine until golden brown, about 5 minutes on each side.
- Place a patty on each of 4 bun halves. Top each with cheese slice, lettuce, tomato, tartar sauce and remaining bun half. Makes 4 sandwiches; 505 calories per serving.

Cold Tuna Salad

- 1 can (121/2 oz.) tuna, packed in water, drained
- 1 package corkscrew noodles 1/2 cup green onions, chopped
- ¼ cup pimientos, chopped
- 1 cup frozen peas, thawed
- 1 cup frozen carrot bits, thawed
- 1/2 cup mayonnaise Prepare noodles by package directions, drain and cool. Put in large salad bowl. Flake tuna into bowl. Add onions, pimientos, peas and carrots. Add mayonnaise and blend. Blend until formed. Chill and serve.

Tuna Sandwiches

- Tuna, drained
- Sliced bread
- Mayonnaise
- Place tuna in bowl. Add mayonnaise until thickened. Spread on bread slices. Make into sandwich. Enjoy!

K-State childcare employees request increased funding

By Deron Johnson Campus Editor

Call Tammy Rankin dedicated, but don't call her rich. Or a fool.

Rankin, a lead instructor at K-State's Childcare Cooperative, has a $4.50-an-hour job to show for her bachelor's degree in elementary education. Rankin has worked at the coop for nine months, and she says that's just about enough.

"It's time now to start looking for elementary jobs," she said. Her ly," she said. That high opinion of the search comes after such a short stint at the co-op because she knows another employer can give her more money — from $6,000 to $9,000 a year more.

"If I got offered a job in an elementary school, I'd be crazy not to take it," she said. "It is a definite disappointment that you go through four years of college and you get paid only $4.50 an hour.'

That wage is why Rankin supports the request from the co-op that funding be increased by at least $100,000 a year. Co-op officials have approached the administration and Student Senate for help.

"In order to keep good teachers, you need to pay them," she said.

When Rankin took the job, which she did because "it was what I had to do at the time," she knew it would be only temporary. Some of the instructors don't last as long as she has.

"I was thinking of (the job) as (lasting in) the year range and then trying to see what I could get next fall," she said. "When I think I could be making $6,000 to $9,000 more...."

Despite what she considers to be sub-par salaries, Rankin believes the co-op serves its purpose well.

"It's helped me a lot professionalcooperative is why Rankin would like to see better salaries implemented.

"If I got an increase, taking a position elsewhere next year would be a much harder decision," she said. "It wouldn't be based on money."

She believes the other teachers at the co-op share her view.

"In order for total job satisfaction, they'd be much more satisfied with the center if they were paid better," she said.

The one thing Rankin said she wants people to understand is that the requests for higher salaries are motivated by need - not greed.

"We're not trying to get rich or anything," she said.

Faculty Senate backs cooperative

By Alison Neely Staff Writer

Major debate at Tuesday's Faculty Senate meeting centered on an increase in the pay for KSU Childcare Cooperative employees.

Management of the cooperative petitioned the Faculty Senate for more money to raise the pay scale for its employees. The cooperative provides part- and full-time child care for children of K-State faculty/staff and students.

After debating the advantages versus disadvantages for additional financial support to the child care cooperative, senate adopted the resolution. The amount of support will be determined in later meetings.

"It is an attractive fringe benefit to potential faculty; also, older students are more likely to be attracted to K-State," said David Vruwink, assistant professor of accounting.

Michael Finnegan, professor of sociology, anthropology and social work, provided the major opposition to the resolution.

"We could pay our faculty rather than provide those sorts of things (child care) which actually benefit a very small segment of both the faculty/staff and the students."

Also brought up at the meeting was a proposal for increasing faculty salaries.

NRC may discipline Wolf Creek officials

By The Associated Press

BURLINGTON - A decision by the Nuclear Regulatory Commission on whether to discipline managers of the Wolf Creek nuclear power plant for a series of safety problems could be four or five weeks away.

Nuclear Regulatory Commission spokesman Joe Gilliland said regulators met for nearly two hours Monday in Arlington, Texas, with seven executives of the plant and its main owners, Kansas Gas & Electric Co. of Wichita and the Kansas City Power & Light

Gilliland said he did not know what progress regulatory officials and utility executives might have made toward resolving problems that occurred from late September through early January during refueling.

The federal agency said the problems raised concerns about the effectiveness of management control.

Inspections made after the problems were reported showed some violations of federal safety rules, Gilliland said. The violations were in the second least severe category among five danger levels, he said.

a solid personnel base in order to guarantee quality programs and care," the Michies stated in their memo.

A number of problems result when teacher turnover is constant. The most serious of these, say co-op officials, is the adverse effect on the children.

"There is a period of adjustment to a new teacher; it has an affect on the child," Peters said. "The child is more anxious.

"I think stability is very important to a child."

The Michies agreed.

"The lack of continuity — the revolving door with new people breaking in, plus the continual change of faces and personalities — adversely affects the children who continually have to adjust to new people," they wrote in the memo. "This problem is one to which many of us personally can attest."

Aruna Michie said their son has had to adjust to four different lead teachers during the past year.

In addition to being frustrating for the children, teacher turnover frustrates parents as well, said Nancy Bolsen, director of the cooperative.

"When a parent has to experience visiting with a variety of people throughout the year about their child, it makes it difficult," Bolsen said.

Another casualty of instructor turnover is staff morale. The first step in building morale, Aruna Michie said, is reducing turnover.

"If you want to really build up a staff, you have to have continuity," she said.

Increased usage

Despite the problems facing the cooperative, the co-op's usage has increased over last semester, Bolsen said.

"Interestingly enough, we're growing," she said. "We started last semester around the low 190s (in enrollment), and our projected number of children for January is 206. I think that kind of data demonstrates, certainly, growth and it demonstrates need."

A frequent response to remedying the problem, co-op officials say, is to increase user fees. However, nearly all with the co-op agree that would be counter-productive and potentially harmful to those using the cooperative.

"We would like to provide even better rates to students," Peters said. "We really want to help make child care affordable for everyone — students especially. We can't do that without money."

For some parents, Aruna Michie said, the current rates are too high—especially if they have more than one child enrolled in the co-op.

"I know of faculty members who have had to take their child out (because they couldn't afford the care)," she said. "We can't raise the rates any more."

In light of the desire not to raise rates, the co-op, which receives no funding from the University, has approached the administration and Student Senate for the money. Although Aruna Michie wouldn't predict the chances of the administration coming through, she does believe it wants to help.

"There is the good will," she said.
"There is the recognition that (the coop) is a good service."

But how that value will translate when it comes to allocations is unclear.

The chances of getting money from Senate, at least, appear slim.

"We're still trying to find support within student government," Peters said. "But they haven't given us a whole lot of encouragement that we can get that."

Sally Routson, coordinator of Student Activities and adviser to Senate, said the money can only come from a fee increase for students.

"There's no way they could get the kind of money they want or need without an increase in fees," Routson said, adding that she suggested the co-op make up a request and present it to Senate's finance committee for consideration. However, even if senators are sympathetic to the co-op's problems, Routson said an increase in fees never goes down easy.

"I think students are reluctant to pass a new fee. I think at this time no one wants to increase fees," she said. "Whenever we increase fees it's a tough row to hoe."

However, Aruna Michie emphasized that since more students are relying on the co-op, the allocation of student fees is justified.

"SGA needs to recognize that there are more and more students who need this kind of facility," she said, adding that 50 percent of the coop's users are students.

She is skeptical of the co-op's future if it doesn't get the funding increase it has requested.

"One of the things we are trying to achieve is simplicity," Hayden said. "If the Legislature adopts our recommendations regarding the individual tax cuts and reform, it is estimated that nearly two-thirds of the taxpayers of our state will be able to file their state income tax on one sheet with nine lines on it."

Hayden said the amount of the personal exemption would be increased from $1,000 to $1,950 this year and from that level to $2,000 for the following year.

For the past 20 years, Kansas has alternated between periods of large financial reserves and small financial reserves, Hayden said.

"Every time there has been a precipitous decline in the balances in the last 20 years, it has been followed in short order by a significant tax increase," he said.

Avoiding tax increases or a cutback such as the one he was required to make last year were his dual goals in preparing this budget, Hayden said.

During his address, Hayden picked up a book titled "Deeds and Deficits: The Story of Alfred M. Landon" from the podium and said he had borrowed from the past.

"I hold in my hand the story of Governor Alf Landon's stewardship of Kansas during a period of great economic turbulence," Hayden said.

"In the tradition of Alf Landon, I am recommending to you tonight a balanced budget," he said.

Youth brutally kills mother, self

NEWARK, N.J. — In November, Thomas Sullivan Jr.'s Catholic school teacher assigned students to research other religions. The studious 14-year-old did his paper on Hinduism, but police say he became more interested in the subject that earned friends an A: satanism.

Within weeks, the all-American neighborhood paperboy became a defiant, hostile teen buried in library books on the occult and listening to heavy metal rock music.

His teachers noticed the transformation and warned his mother last Thursday. By Saturday night, mother and son were dead.

and son were dead.
Police say Sullivan was entranced by the occult as he stabbed his mother at least 12 times and tried to kill his father and 10-year-old brother by setting fire to their house. Then he slit his throat and wrists with a Boy Scout knife, slumping dead on bloody snow in a neighbor's back yard.

Word of the murder-suicide and the hint of cult worship among other youngsters left this rural 45-squaremile township in northwestern New Jersey searching for answers to questions few ever imagined asking.

"I'm willing to bet there's got to be more involved," Mayor Fran Slayton said. "There's just something that's bothering me about this situation. It bothers me that a good kid like that can go in two weeks." Counselors are working with Sullivan's classmates at the Rev. George A. Brown Memorial School and the mayor said a town meeting has been scheduled for next week to help concerned parents.

"I want fathers and mothers to come and even children to make sure something like this never happens again. Not in Jefferson Township or anywhere. It doesn't hit home until it happens in your back yard," she said.

Thomas Sullivan Sr. is burying his wife and son in private. But he has spoken to some reporters, recalling how his namesake's obsession turned from model airplanes to the occult and urging parents to heed such changes in their children.

Sullivan told the New York Daily

News that all last week his son had been singing a song "about blood and killing your mother."

He said his son had told a friend of a vision in which Satan came to him, wearing his face, and urged him to kill his family and preach satanism.

"The rest, I think, is history," Sullivan told New Jersey Nightly News.
"I'm surprised I'm still here."

Investigators said the boy indicated in a suicide note that the murder and suicide were planned and influenced by his interest in the occult. They also said the teen-ager argued with his, mother before the

Road proves tough

Lady Cats drop two of three

By Chase Clark Sports Writer

After going 2-3 during the Christmas break, K-State's women's basketball team has learned quickly this season there are no pushovers - both in and out of the Big Eight Conference.

The Lady Cats opened up the conference season Tuesday night in Stillwater, Oklahoma against Oklahoma State with a 87-64 loss. K-State's record dropped to 7-6 overall and 0-1 in the Big Eight.

"What we got tonight was a good ole country whipping," K-State coach Matilda Mossman said. "Oklahoma State had a five-minute scoring spurt in the first half that got the team intimidated.

"Oklahoma State showed respect for our kids tonight. The last couple of minutes of the game they kept pressuring us. We kept coming at them and there's not a kid on the bench that ever gave up," she added.

Janet Madsen led the team with 18 points and 8 rebounds. Amy Davidson, with 10 points, was the only other Lady Cat to score in double figures. Diana Miller also collected 8 boards.

In the final game of a three-game holiday road trip, K-State fell 57-58 to Oral Roberts on Jan. 8 in Tulsa, Oklahoma. The game was nip and tuck throughout, as neither squad was able to build and maintain a substantial lead. The score was knotted, 25-25, at halftime.

Madsen led the Lady Cats with 15 points and 8 rebounds. Stacey Boyle was the only other member to pass the single-digit barrier on offense, as she scored 12 points and 5 rebounds. Miller collected 16 rebounds.

A lack of leadership has hampered the team throughout the season and may have been a factor in the game.

"Somebody on our team has to establish themselves and emerge as a leader," Mossman said. "We've had five different players lead us in scoring, six different players lead us in rebounding and four different players lead us in assists. Somebody has to step to the front and take charge."

K-State started the new year by splitting two games during a two-game road trip to Arizona.

The Lady Cats suffered a close defeat to Arizona State, Jan. 4 in Tempe, Arizona. The Sun Devil's Shamona Mosley connected on a lay-up with two seconds left in the game to give Arizona State a 75-73

Madsen led K-State with a career high 23 points and 9 rebounds. Stacey Boyle was the only other Lady Cat to score in double figures, with 12 points and 6 rebounds.

The loss didn't really surprise Mossman, though, because K-State has been an upand-down team so far this year,

"We're the kind of team that can play great on one night," Mossman said. "But some nights we've shown we can't beat anyone.

"At home, we play like we can beat anyone. On the road, we're intimidated," she added. "We play to keep from getting beat. We need to find a security blanket on the

The Lady Tigers scored first and last in the second stanza, but the rest of the half belonged to K-State. The Lady Cats led by as much as 15 points before tallying the final score.

Three Lady Cats scored in double figures in the contest. Miller led the team with 16 points.

'Cats' record falls during holidays

By Tom Morris Sports Writer

Two last-second losses to the University of Southern Mississippi and a lesson in hardnosed basketball from Big Ten Conference member Purdue University dropped the K-State men's basketball team's record to 7-4 during the semester break.

Even with Tuesday night's 91-89 overtime loss to Southern Mississippi in Hattiesburg, Miss., the Wildcats have shown marked improvement since a three-game losing streak in December.

In the latest game against USM, the 'Cats climbed back from a 16-point deficit with 11:52 left in the game to tie the score in the closing seconds. Southern Mississippi had a four-point lead with three seconds left, but an intentional foul on Derrek Hamilton gave K-State two free throws and the ball. Sophomore guard Steve Henson nailed the charity shots, his only points of the night, and center Fred McCoy - who had a career high 26 points and led the team in rebounding with 16 - made the field goal, sending the game into overtime.

"Derrek just made a mistake in judgement. He knows it. I know it," said M.K. Turk, Southern Mississippi head coach.

In the exta period, USM's John White scored nine of his team-leading 25 points to ensure the win for the Golden Eagles.

"We need to win some of those games," said K-State assistant coach Dana Altman. "We've lost three two-point games and those can be the difference between going to the NCAA or the NIT. We're playing with confidence, but letting them slip through our hands."

Senior forward Charles Bledsoe tied his career-high performance with 18 points, but it wasn't enough to offset 12 missed free throw attempts by the Wildcats.

Against Marquette Jan. 3 at Kemper Arena in Kansas City, Mo., Coach Lon Kruger saw signs of his team "starting to realize their roles" as K-State dumped the Warriors, 78-57, in front of 8,500 fans and a regionally televised audience.

Four Wildcats scored in double figures, led by Mitch Richmond's 24, as K-State led by as many as 24 points in the contest. The 'Cats shot 60.5 percent from the field, and were six of nine from three-point range. 'They are a wonderful team," said Marquette Coach Bob Dukiet. "They are going to win a lot of ball games. I wish we could have given them a better game."

K-State put an end to a frustrating December by recording an 81-69 win against Utah State, Dec. 31 at Logan, Utah.

"We just needed the win," Kruger said. "At moments it was good. At moments it wasn't so good. For the most part what we wanted to do coming in was get our transition baskets and take theirs away from them.'

But it wasn't easy for the 'Cats. Utah State pulled to within eight points with just more than five minutes remaining and blew several chances to pull closer, thanks mainly to 25 K-State turnovers.

Richmond led K-State with 25 points and guard William Scott had 17 points and regained his three-point shooting form with a three-for-three performance from that area.

Big Eight Conference teams have not been too successful against Big Ten opponents this season, and it was no different Dec. 20 at West Lafeyette, Ind., as Purdue - ranked No. 8 in the nation - pounded the 'Cats,

"Purdue played awfully well. They were pretty much in control the whole way," Kruger said. "When you get whipped that badly, you can't be satisfied by many things."

K-State had 24 turnovers in the game and couldn't stop Purdue inside as the Boilermakers converted 54.9 percent of their shots. Richmond and McCoy tied for 'Cat scoring honors with 14 points apiece. Against Southern Mississippi Dec. 17 at Ahearn Field House, the Golden Eagles ranked 34th in the Associated Press' poll squeaked out a 71-69 win.

USM's Casey Fisher made the winning layup with four seconds left in the game. Richmond paced the 'Cats with 23 points.

NCAA votes to keep scholarships at 25

By The Associated Press

NASHVILLE, Tenn. - Big Eight officials wore big smiles and congratulated one another Tuesday after a last-minute compromise strategy held initial football scholarship limits at 30.

"Nice going," Kansas State Athletic Director Larry Travis said to Big Eight Commissioner Carl James after the vote was announced at the 82nd annual NCAA convention.

NCAA schools had voted a year ago to cut the first-year limit from 30 to 25 while keeping the overall lid at 95. Viewed by many as nothing but a political maneuver to head off possibly deeper cuts, the move sent up howls of protest from many Big Eight coaches.

The Big Eight came to this convention sponsoring an amendment to restore the initial limit to 30. But faced with growing opposition, the Big Eight decided to compromise. The limit of 30 will be retained just for the current recruiting season. The maximum in the next recruiting season is to be dropped to 25.

"But I'm sure there will be a proposal next January regarding the scholarship limit,"

NCAA Notes

"What we got today was fair. The 1987 convention also voted to cut basketball scholarships from 15 to 13, but those two were restored last summer at the special convention. It wouldn't have been fair to the football coaches to restore basketball only," he said.

Travis said there were many reasons some schools were opposed to restoring to 30.

"I think a lot of people are worried it will encourage runoff," he said of the fear that some athletes would be encouraged to leave school to free their scholarships. "But that simply is not the case. Attrition occurs in all programs. But we're very pleased with the way things came out today."

New semester time for fresh starts, action

JENNY CHAULK Sports Editor

I'm not going to say "Welcome back," or extend wishes hoping everyone had a great Christmas break. I'm sure people have heard enough of these salutations to last a lifetime.

So let's get on with it. It's a new semester - a time for new beginnings and fresh starts. So, in keeping with this spirit, some changes are going to be occurring on the sports page. Nothing dramatic, mind you. Just some subtle alterations which will hopefully enhance the page and give readers more of what they want.

The Collegian has a great tradition of covering K-State sports to the fullest extent of its capacities. Note the word K-STATE. Granted, the Collegian is a student newspaper and its greatest responsibility lies in presenting news about the University.

But sometimes being part of a University is like being on a deserted island. Isolation from the "outside world" is a feeling that more than likely almost every student has experienced in relation to college.

Last semester, Collegian editors conducted a survey about what readers liked, disliked and wanted more of. It was learned over half of those surveyed read only the Collegian for a news source. It was also learned that the sports page is not perfect.

What? Not perfect? Well, nothing is perfect, so this did not come as too big of a shock. The problem with the page goes back to that feeling of isolation. Readers of college papers do not have to feel isolated. And readers of the sports page spoke up and said they wanted to see more stories of national interest.

So, more stories of this caliber will make their way into the Collegian. National scores, Top 20 rankings and issues of a wider scope will appear regularly. A column - Around the Big Eight - will also appear regularly chronicling happenings at K-State's Conference schools.

not be lessened. Most of our athletic programs are young and developing and keeping abreast of their progress is important. Ideally, papers want to print all the news they can about their immediate vicinity.

But the days of printing something just because it's about K-State are over. Merit and news value will determine what readers see.

Speaking of new beginnings, it's time Kansas took a closer look at one of its statutes pertaining to higher education athletic scholarships.

An article in the Wichita Eagle-Beacon on Sunday said the chairman of a legislative committee controlling state aid to Kansas' 19 community colleges is considering asking Attorney General Bob Stephan for a legal opinion on Kansas statute No. 71-203.

The statute, passed in 1969, defines the restrictions placed on community college scholarships. The last sentence of the statute says: "Athletic scholarships shall not be granted to non-residents of the state of Kansas."

It's no secret recruiting athletes

Coverage of K-State events will from other states with promises of athletic scholarships has helped put Kansas at the top of community college athletic programs nationally. According to the Eagle-Beacon, more than 180 athletes from outside the state signed agreements to play for community colleges last year.

The conflict of interest in this issue is enormous. Community college athletes from outside the state are getting scholarships, which appears to be directly against what the statute

Ambiguity about the statute apparently has also existed since it was first passed. Jim Maag, Dodge City, was a member of the Kansas House serving on the education committee when the law went into effect in 1969. Maag told the Eagle-Beacon there were "great debates" on the issue. "I think the prevailing philosophy of the time was that community colleges ought to recruit from their own areas. But, in the end, I think nobody really thought this thing would be strictly enforced."

Nobody thought the law would be strictly enforced? No wonder so many people don't trust politicians. It is precisely this type of legislation which fosters a bad public image for elected officials. An unenforceable statute serves no purpose. And this statute has obviously proven to be just that.

The time has come to enforce the statute or repeal it. Enforcing it is almost impossible. Community colleges are not required to document athletic program expenditures, so there is no way to know if they are following the law. And consider the expense and manpower it would take to try to verify expenditures. The legislative battle to fund and staff such an effort would be timeconsuming and probably not effective.

Repealing the statute is a much more viable solution and one that is warranted. Like it or not, athletics are as much a part of community colleges as they are of National Collegiate Athletic Association division one universities.

The statute is outdated and discriminatory. If the legislature once wasted time discussing and passing an unenforceable law, it should at least take the time to correct the mistake.

Shuffling of checks Cost of group living goes up

Tuition fees often travel many paths

By Christine Doll Editorial Page Editor

From the students' standpoint, tuition is simple. They pay fees at the beginning of the semester and then wait for the check to clear the bank. But what happens to the undergraduates' $665.65 checks after registration is anything but simple.

K-State collects about $20 million during registration and deposits it in an account at one of the four Manhattan banks. In order not to favor one bank over the others, the account is rotated every two years among the banks, said Warren Strauss, University controller.

Although the University has only one account at the bank, the controller's office separates the money on paper to keep track of the special fees collected.

According to Kansas law, the state is responsible for all the money collected at regents schools. For that reason, the money is transferred by wire from the bank to the state treasurer's office in Topeka.

The University then issues checks against the balance held by the treasurer's office. For instance, when a user group wants to spend part of its special fee allowance, the request must be approved by Strauss. Strauss then subtracts the amount from the group's balance and sends the request to the treasurer's office. In the end, the check is issued from the state and not from the University.

Users of the special fee range from the groups in Student Governing Association to the K-State Union and Recreational Services. Student Senate decides the amount of special fees collected and how much each group will receive.

Regardless of the amount of shuffling done with the money, none of it is dealt to the state, Strauss said. "What we collect stays here and is spent by the University," he said. However, the state controls K-State's budget because the tuition collected from the students makes up 26 percent of the total educational cost, said Thomas Schellhardt, assistant vice president for administration and finance. For fiscal year 1987-88, the state contributed $88.5 million, while student fees made up about $21 million.

The amount the state contributes is based on the number of students at the University. The formula takes into consideration enrollment fluctuations, cost of education per credit hour and the class rankings of

The money allocated for the current fiscal year, in which enrollment increased by 2.5 percent, was based on the enrollment figures of 1984-85 when enrollment was dropping. The budget decreased by $762,055 from the previous year, but at the same time was expected to educate 376 additional students.

To make up the difference, the University will petition the state to release $300,000 of the fees, Strauss said. A fee release is a one-time allocation granted by the Kansas Legislature to make up for enrollment

Beginning with the 1988 summer semester, the cost for students living in double-occupancy residence housing will increase by $40 each semester.

The Kansas Board of Regents approved the 4 percent increase during their December meeting. Along with the K-State increase, the regents also approved increase of 4.9 percent for the University of Kansas and 9.3 percent for The Wichita State University.

Despite the increase, K-State's housing costs still rank the lowest in the Big Eight and among regent's schools.

"We operate on a break-even budget. We're not out to make a profit, or to undercut anyone. We're just providing a service as efficiently as possible," said Thomas Frith, director of housing.

According to statistics compiled by the Department of Housing, the consumer price index has risen from 100 in 1967 to 346 in 1988. During that same time period, residence hall's rates have risen from 100 in 1967 to 270 in 1988.

According to Frith, the largest single expense for the department is employee salaries. The cost of food ranks second and price of utilities third.

The K-State Housing Council requested the increase.

"Evening papers in metropolitan areas just can't compete," Daly said.

"In 1984 there were 406 morning papers in the United States, which was only 23 percent of all papers, but they had 47 percent of the total circulation," he said. "There were 1,280 evening papers in 1984, which was about 75 percent of all the papers, but they only accounted for about 42 percent of the circulation.

"The question has to be: Does this signal the death knell for The Star?" Predictably, some are upset by the

S cases up 14 percent Reported All

By The Collegian Staff

The state's number of reported AIDS cases increased at a moderate rate in 1987, according to estimates released by the Kansas Department of Health and Environment.

Barb Gillmore, AIDS information specialist with KDHE, said six more cases of acquired immune deficiency syndrome were reported in 1987 than 1986 — a 14 percent increase.

Thirty-eight cases in Kansas were verified by the Centers for Disease Control in 1986, and that number rose to 44 last year.

Since KDHE began keeping records of AIDS cases in 1982, 103 have been confirmed in the state.

Only four Kansas counties -Johnson, Wyandotte, Sedgwick and Shawnee - have recorded more than 10 cases since 1982, Gillmore said. Those counties' cumulative AIDS cases are 25, 22, 17 and 13, respectively.

Riley County remains among the 99 Kansas counties that have yet to record their tenth AIDS case since

As awareness about the deadly virus and education about how it may be avoided spreads, Gillmore said a subsequent drop in AIDS cases can be expected.

Of the 38 AIDS cases diagnosed in 1986, 28 of the patients - or 74 percent - have died, Gillmore said. Twenty-four of the 44 cases diagnosed in 1987 have died, equaling a 55 percent mortality rate.

Since 1982, 70 of the 103 patients diagnosed with AIDS - or 68 percent - have died, Gillmore said, adding Kansas' mortality rate is "somewhat higher than what we see nationwide." Nationally, the case fatality rate is 57 percent.

Cable TV system expands services for local viewers

By Becky Howard Staff Writer

Many Manhattan residents are enjoying additional cable television channels, as 60 percent of cable customers have already obtained converters to receive the new services, said Daniel Hebert, regional manager of Manhattan Cable Television.

"Everything is going smoothly. About 7,500 people have picked up their converters," Hebert said. "We expect to have the converters distributed and the converter store shut down by Jan. 31."

It was announced in November that basic program services would be expanded to 26 channels on Feb. 1, and that customers would be able to receive part of the channels during December and January.

New channels added to the basic program line-up include ESPN-Entertainment and Sports Programming Network, CNN-Cable News Network, MTV-Music Television, CBN-Christian Broadcasting Network, Cable Value Package and the Nickelodeon. Movie channels, such as Cinemax and Showtime, are still offered at an additional charge. With an increase in the cost of operation, the monthly rate was increased $2.95. The new basic lineup cost will increase to $14.50 per month in February.

In order to receive the new services, customers need to obtain converters unless they have cable ready/compatible television sets. A temporary store has been set up at 210 N. 4th St. to obtain the converters.

People have been getting their converters according to an alphabetical schedule, Hebert said. Students who live in the residence halls are also picking up their converters. A letter was sent informing them of the additional channels.

Positive feedback has been received from those who have started getting the services, Hebert said.

KU distributes condoms

By The Associated Press

LAWRENCE - Students who wanted them got more than the usual fee cards and lists of classes when they registered for second semester classes at the University of Kansas Monday — "safer sex" packets containing a condom were distributed by the Student Senate.

Reaction was mixed, with lots of

"That makes me sick," said one student, and outside the Kansas Union members of the Free Methodist Church distributed material urging students not to engage in premarital sex. One person carried a sign reading, "Are you playing condom roulette?"

he passed out literature asking, "What should you wear for safe sex?" and including an illustration of two interlocking wedding bands. "Actually, what they're doing here is advertising that it's all right to have sex as long as you protect yourself and that's not our feeling."

The packets, meant to increase awareness of the dangers of AIDS, or acquired immune deficiency syndrome, contained several pieces of literature as well as the condom.

In December, the senate voted to allocate $4,325 from the student activity fund for the project, and officials had 10,000 packets to distribute Monday and Tuesday.

Few violations seen after implementing new pet ordinances

By Jackie Brazzle Staff Writer

No major violations of new pet ordinances have been reported since Jan. 1, when new regulations went into effect for Riley County, said City Clerk Heide Clark.

Under the new ordinances, pet owners are required to get a license if they have five or more pets living on their property.

Fees for licensing non-neutered cats and dogs has increased from $5 to $10. The fee for neutered pets is still $5.

Another ordinance, covering cats, will be effective Feb. 1, when a new animal shelter is completed.

"Until the animal shelter is completed, we cannot take any cats," Clark said.

Even though the ordinances have been widely publicized, there are few people coming in for pet licenses, Clark said.

Clark said the ordinances were adopted because the new animal shelter would be able to keep cats, and the licensing of cats could not be enforced without an ordinance.

"We cannot enforce anything unless it is regulated by an ordinance," Clark said.

Currently, the ordinances are being enforced by the Riley County-Manhattan Health Department and the Riley County Police Department. But after Feb. 1 enforcement will be taken over by health department wardens and the animal shelter.

Chuck Murphy, health department director, said police officers and citizens can still make a complaint or formal charge.

"We are trying to consolidate all the enforcement under one agency," Murphy said. "But any individual or officer can charge a violation of these ordinances."

Murphy said all complaints and reports of violations will be referred to the city attorney, who will determine the nature of the violation. The city attorney will then give notice to the violator and decide whether that person will appear in court.

Murphy said the health department is developing inspection forms for kennels. These forms will be used as an enforcement measure, he said.

Treasure hunters find pork on boat

By The Associated Press

INDEPENDENCE, Mo. - A group of Independence treasure hunters found a sunken riverboat beneath a soybean field in Boonville last week, but they did not find the bounty they had envisioned.

Instead of a cargo of gold or silver, it appears the wrecked steamboat was carrying salt pork.

searching in the sand and gravel about 800 feet from the current Missouri River channel at Boonville for the riverboat that sank in 1820. The river's course has changed and the site is now below bottomland in Howard County.

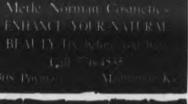

Last week, diggers found a ship's boiler and steam engine at the bottom

Delta Research workers had been they said the ship, about 120 feet long and 24 feet wide, apparently was not the craft they were seeking. Few of the items found on board had any

> "You hope on these digs for a good one," said Greg Hawley, one of the leaders of the effort. "This one, however, was a bad one."

Hawley said he was still excited of a 35-foot-deep excavation. But about being able to use the excavating equipment and complete the dig. Company officials hope what they learned at the Boonville site will help them next winter, when they seek to recover the remains of the sunken Arabia, near Parkville.

The Arabia, which sank in the mid-1800s, reportedly carried immigrants up river, and contained whiskey, chinaware, rifles and possibly gold and silver.

First test-tube quintuplets born in U.S.

By The Associated Press

ROYAL OAK, Mich. - A woman gave birth to quintuplets conceived through in-vitro fertilization, apparently the nation's first set of test-tube quintuplets, and all were doing well, a hospital spokeswoman said Tuesday.

"They're beautiful," Michele L'Esperance, 34, said at a news conference Tuesday. Her husband Raymond said he was relieved the delivery was over.

The babies, four girls and a boy, were born Monday by Caesarean section between 10:34 p.m. and 10:38 p.m., said Deb Mero, a spokeswoman for William Beaumont Hospital.

A London woman gave birth to five test-tube babies in March 1986.

They are doing well," Mero said. "We don't have an official condition on them, but none of them is on a respirator.'

Two of the babies, however, were having "respiratory distress" and were receiving oxygen, she said.

No further details were available immediately. Conditions are not assigned to newborn infants because they change hourly and are inaccurate, said Valerie Mahaczek, another hospital spokeswoman.

The babies, born two months premature, have a 90 percent to 95 percent chance of survival, said Dr.

Enrollment program to aid new students

By Chuck Horner Staff Writer

Before the ink is dry on their diplomas, even before they open their graduation gifts from mom and dad, high school seniors across Kansas are looking ahead to attending K-State.

The 1988 Orientation and Enrollment Program for new students begins June 10, said Marilyn Trotter, director of new student programs.

The one-day program brings new students and their parents to campus to take care of administrative matters and to get them acquainted with the University, she said.

Admission applications can be received from high school guidance counselors and K-State admissions representatives, or by requesting one from the Office of Admissions.

Upon receiving applications, prospective students begin receiving information from K-State, including a mail-back card to establish when they want to participate in the program, Trotter said. Trotter said the dates for the 1988 program are: Freshman: June 10, 14-18,

21-23, 25, 28-30 and July 1. Transfer and nontraditional students: June 11 and Non-traditional students are generally defined as older than 25. However, single parents and those working full-time jobs may also be considered non-traditional students, Trotter said.

A fee is charged to participate in the program.

"The cost for the 1988 program has not yet been determined, but the program will offer the new students something of value," Trotter said.

"Students who previously participated in the program are more confident when they return for classes," she added.

New students will enroll and will have their class schedules before they leave, she said.

Lafene plans renovation, closes in-patient center

By Janet Swanson Campus Editor

Despite a reduction in services at Lafene Student Health Center, Dr. Robert Tout, director of the center, doesn't believe the average student will notice the cutbacks.

"The changes that have and will be made are not going to be noticed the average student isn't going to notice them at all," Tout said.

The major change, Tout said, was the closure of the in-patient area. However, 24-hour observation rooms are still available for patients.

"The observation area is primarily for that person who is being given medication and whom we want to observe. The in-patient area was for more serious illnesses," he said.

During the eight months the hospital area was open in 1987, it served more than 90 patients, who averaged two-day stays. The center was closed during the summer, as it was the previous year.

Staffing at Lafene has been reduced by three registered nurses because of the closure of the inpatient area, Tout said. But, he expects a staffing increase at the LaFemme Clinic.

The out-patient area did not suffer any cutbacks and remains open 24

The changes were prompted by the center's loss of profits during the past three years, Tout said. Funded solely through student fees, the center operates on a more than $2-million budget.

"We are non-profit," Tout said. "But, the hospital area is a service that can only be offered if the money is there. If we don't have that money, services must be reduced. (The inpatient area) never was costeffective, but we try to offer everything we can."

He added that improved outpatient and medical techniques will reduce any negative impact the area's closure may create.

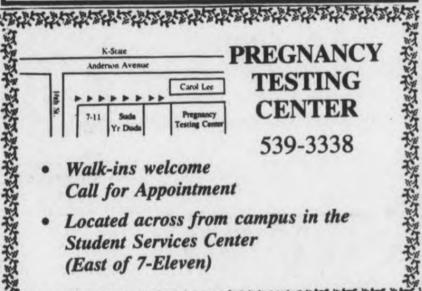

Plans are being designed to remodel the closed area on Lafene's second floor to accommodate the Counseling Center once Holton Hall closes for renovation in June.

The $84,000 construction is scheduled to begin March 1 and is expected to be completed by the end of May.

Holton Hall's $890,000 construction is expected to take six to nine months. Temporary locations for the offices in Holton, with the exception of the Counseling Center, have not been determined, said Larry Garvin, director of facilities planning.

Payment for the $1.069 million total renovation package with student fees was approved by Student Senate in October 1987.

Glasnost loosens iron grip on Soviets Stalin years critically viewed | Gorbachev defends reforms

By The Associated Press

MOSCOW - Soviet media, theater and literature are taking a critical look at Josef Stalin 35 years after his death as Mikhail S. Gorbachev carefully tries to break his predecessor's grip on the country.

Stalin, who ruled the Soviet Union from 1924 until he died in 1953, remains popular among those who yearn for an orderly society forged by strict discipline. He was idolized by millions even while he directed the execution and imprisonment of their friends and relatives in a series of purges.

Others blame him for social repression that affects even today's young. Gorbachev is trying to overcome the bureaucracy that has stifled the Soviet economy, the arts and other areas of life since Stalin's time.

the tone for much of the new criticism, Gorbachev defended Stalin's crash industrialization program as the only way to prepare the country for World War II. The Soviet leader also defended collectivization of agriculture, a policy that caused widespread famine and millions of deaths as peasants were forced to work on state farms.

So far, no one has crossed Gorbachev's line to criticize those policies that formed the basis of the Soviet

Some Soviet intellectuals suggest that politically Gorbachev could not have gone further in denouncing Stalin because many Soviets still must justify their own suffering by believing it was necessary for their country to survive.

In a new play by Mikhail Shatrov

But in a Nov. 2 speech, which set reviewing 70 years of Soviet history, Stalin stubbornly remains on stage with Soviet founder Vladimir I. Lenin as the curtain goes down, an acknowledgement that the Soviet Union still is struggling with his MOSCOW - Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev defended his reforms against critics on the right and left, and promised that a June party conference will consider electoral and judicial reforms, Tass said Tuesday.

Gorbachev told writers and artists in a meeting at the Communist Party Central Committee on Friday that proponents of "ultra-perestroika" such as former Moscow party leader Boris N. Yeltsin proved incapable of leadership.

He charged that his conservative opponents were against greater democracy in Soviet life.

Gorbachev's comments were released Tuesday by the official Tass news agency.

Yeltsin, a proponent of Gorbachev's effort to restructure and open up Soviet society, was sacked as Moscow party leader in mid-November after he criticized the party leadership and pace of reform at an October meeting of the Communist Party Central Committee.

Referring to that session, Gorbachev said "the ultra-perestroika phraseology proved to be helpless. Representatives of the 'revolutionary' phrase have neither composure, nor readiness to assume responsibility, the onus of stubborn and lengthy work in order to move our society to new frontiers.'

Gorbachev acknowledged that the sacking of Yeltsin "was viewed by party of the intellectuals, especially the young people, as a blow to perestroika. This is the greatest delusion," the Soviet Communist Party general secretary said.

Turning to critics who claim his reforms are undermining the foundations of Soviet socialism, Gorbachev asked, "By what are they being undermined? By people's movement, by their activity aimed at handling more confidently the affairs in the country where they are the

The party conference, a rare gathering of party leaders between the party congresses that are held every five years, is expected to give Gorbachev a greater chance to put his stamp on the Communist Party leadership and its program.

The Tass text provided no details of what specific reforms might be implemented, but Soviet officials already have implemented some electoral changes and are working on judicial reforms.

Overboard' plot strikes happy medium

By Jeff Schrag Collegian Reviewer

Goldie Hawn plays Joanne Styllman. She is awfully rich, awfully pretty and awfully bored. She is aware of the first two, but not of the third. Kurt Russell is Dean Proffitt. He is aware of all three. Thus begins the movie "Overboard," a romantic comedy which fortunately does not live up to its title.

Goldie Hawn is the epitome of a wealthy, spoiled brat. She meets Kurt Russell's character when he is hired to build additional closet space for shoes on her yacht. (No, the film is not a parody of the lives of Ferdinand and Imelda Marcos.) She considers his work unsatisfactory and thus does not pay him for the project.

Movie Review

However, after a fall overboard (hence the title), which results in amnesia, she is abandoned by her husband. Russell sees this as a way to get his money's worth. He claims Hawn is his wife and the mother of his four undisciplined sons.

What follows is somewhat predictable, but quite enjoyable. She can do none of the domestic chores which are supposedly her wifely duties: cooking, cleaning and mothering. Eventually, though, she manages to learn them very well and turns an unorganized, undisciplined household into the model of yuppie efficiency. In the process, she becomes very fond of Russell, his children and his lifestyle.

Thus, the movie is set up, designed to leave the audience wondering if Hawn's husband will return and, if he does, which lifestyle she will choose one with fulfillment or one with money. And once that choice is made, who, if anyone, will live happily ever after.

This movie continues a trend in movie making, a pause in the typical boy-meets-girl plot. And in that pause, there is the usual introduction of the next component in most heterosexual relationships - some Several movies of the season, like 'Three Men and a Baby" and "Baby Boom," involve main characters whose lives are greatly complicated by the introduction of children. However, throughout the movie, the audience sees the ease with which the character is able to adapt successfully to life with children. It's Parenthood 101 - Hollywood style.

"Overboard" was not designed to place the audience on the edge of its seat or to stump anyone with dramatic, unpredictable events. It never pretends to. "Overboard" does have its doubtful moments, like Joanne's extreme prima donna behavior in the beginning, or the success of Dean's plan to make her a live-in maid during her period of amnesia. But all of the underlying emotions in the show are real.

One can always sympathize with Russell's character, a single parent, who would rather be a pal to his boys than a disciplinarian. The character always means well, and Russell's portrayal effectively brings that across. His language, mannerisms and lifestyle never lead one to doubt the motive behind his actions. Hawn's characterization is more of a love/hate nature. Her character, as horrible as she starts out, enjoys a unique oppurtunity — the chance to step out her own life and experience the world from another perspective. price of admission.

She learns from her chance. Her portrayal allows the audience to watch the growth of an individual from irresponsible to responsible. Hawn does that, as well as play some of her famous nothing-ever-goes-right comedy, very well.

The film continually strikes a happy medium - some laughs, some romance and some meaning. It never lulls, it never lags. It generally leaves one with a pleasant feeling.

I give it an "A-". It wasn't a blockbuster, but it entertained me without ever forcing me to say, "It was so stupid it was funny." And considering the trends in modern comedy, that refreshing change alone is worth the Past violence leads to cabbies' fear

Precautions not needed. official says

By Nancy Chartrand Staff Writer

It has been one year since Chuck Primm, driver for Bell Taxi Transportation, was victim to a brutal stabbing that several months later took his life.

Since that incident, however, the company has not considered it necessary to take precautions that may protect its cab drivers from further assault, Glenn Puett, president and general manager of Bell Taxi, said.

"A situation like that, you don't know what could be done," Puett said. "If you save one life, it is worthwhile...but if they want to get at that driver they will find a way." Primm's stabbing was only the second incident of violence that Bell Taxi has had in 15 years, Puett said. About five years ago a driver was shot twice, but lived.

On Jan. 4, 1987, between 8 p.m. and 9 p.m., Primm picked up two fares in Aggieville and drove them to Whiskey Lake Road, about a mile north of the Interstate 70-Kansas Highway 18 exit, where the attack took place. The two assailants stabbed Primm 32 times.

Primm died May 24 at the University of Kansas Medical Center in Kansas City, Kan., from injuries he sustained.

Less that $300 was stolen during the attack. Primm was carrying two billfolds with him at the time, one still had money in it when he was found, police said.

was sentenced to life in prison after pleading guilty to charges of firstdegree murder and conspiracy to commit aggravated robbery.

Jerry Thomas Odell, also of Manhattan, was sentenced to 15 years to life for second-degree murder. Odell was a minor at the time of the stabbing, but was 18 years old by the time of the trial in Geary County.

"It (the stabbing) sends fear through anyone who drives a cab, especially at night," Puett said.

According to Puett, cab drivers always have some sort of fear of what could happen to them when they pick up a fare. He said that on one occasion, a passenger asked to be driven down a road at night that he knew had nothing on it.

"I just told him to get out of the cab," Puett said.

Despite this fear, Puett indicated that Bell Taxi has not had drivers quit and has not experienced any problems hiring new ones.

Puett said 'bullet-proof screens could be installed so that passengers could not get into the front seat. However, because the assault seems to have been an isolated incident, he has not installed them. Such devices are used in the larger cities such as New York City.

"I hope that we don't live in that kind of environment here in the Midwest," he said.

Beech to construct cargo plane doors

By The Associated Press

WICHITA - Beech Aircraft Corp. has landed its second major subcontract in less than a year, this one to build landing-gear doors for the Air Force's new C-17 cargo plane.

The contract calls for Beech to design and build the doors, which would involve about 1,000 pounds of composite structures per aircraft, company spokesmen said Monday.

The initial contract award includes engineering work and six sets of gear doors.

The Air Force ultimately plans to buy as many as 210 C-17s, which would result in subcontract work for Beech through 2000.

Broadcast causes FCC to take action

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Federal Communications Commission on Tuesday began its first-ever enforcement action against a television station for broadcasting an allegedly indecent movie during prime-time viewing hours.

The FCC said the broadcast by KZKC-TV, Kansas City, of the movie "Private Lessons" may have violated the law because it contained explicit sex and was aired at a time when children may have been in the audience.

The action was the first the commission has taken to enforce tough new indecency standards it adopted last April, and the first time the agency has targeted the programming of a TV station.

"The law prohibits the broadcast of certain sexually explicit programming to children on radio and television," FCC Chairman Dennis Patrick said, promising "full enforcement of the law in accordance with the guidelines provided by the Supreme

"Private Lessons" was broadcast by KZKC-TV, an independent UHF station, on May 26 beginning at 8 p.m., according to a complaint investigated by the FCC.

The movie is about the seduction of an adolescent male by a female maid and includes "nudity in a sexual context," said FCC spokesman John

The film, made in 1980, carried an R rating, which means that in movie theaters no one under 17 was admitted without a parent or guardian, according to the Motion Picture Association of America Inc.

by the TV station, however, may not have been the same version as shown in theaters. Movies are often cut before they are aired on television.

Morton Kent, chairman of the board of Media Central Inc. in Chattanooga, Tenn., general partner of KZKC, said neither the station nor Media Central had received the FCC's letter detailing the complaint against the station.

"Company policy does not allow The version allegedly broadcast for showing...indecent programming," he said, but he said it would be "inappropriate" to comment on the specific allegations until he had seen the letter.

He said he has never seen "Private Lessons."

The FCC's letter, addressed to station licensee Kansas City Television Ltd., did not specify any scenes or language that may be considered indecent, but Kamp said the commission decided to begin the action

"based on explicit depictions of sex that they thought may be patently offensive.'

He added that the FCC "has not made a decision that it's indecent, only that the complainant has made out a case that indicates all the necessary elements."

The FCC defines indecency using a 1978 Supreme Court decision that indecent material is "language or material that depicts or describes, in terms patently offensive as measured by contemporary community standards for the broadcast medium, sexual or excretory activities or organs."

The commission has said indecent material may be aired only when there is a reasonable risk that children are not in the audience. In a ruling last November, the FCC said it would consider that children were not likely to be in the audience after midnight.

The FCC gave the station 30 days to respond to the complaint.

When Mark and I decided to spend the weekend at his mother's house, I never imagined I would be walking into a mouse's nightmare. There were cats everywhere.

Cat plaques, cat statues, cat clocks, even a cat mat. I couldn't begin to duplicate her collection of kitty litter if I spent a year at a garage sale. Conspicuously absent, however, was a real cat. Strange, I thought, and began to fear that a weekend with cat woman could be a lot less than purr-fect. But then she came home, and Mark introduced her. She was dressed surprisingly well-no leopard pants. In fact, you could say she was the cat's meow, but I'd rather not.

She offered me a cup of Dutch Chocolate Mint. Now that was something I could relate to. Then she brought it out in the most beautiful, distinctly unfeline china I'd ever seen. As we sipped, I found out that Mrs. Campbell has my same weakness for chocolate, loves the theater as much as I do, but, incredibly, never saw "Cats." So Mark and I are taking her next month.

Union secretary wins $20,000

Frito Lay chooses ad jingle

By Deron Johnson Campus Editor

For Jean Akin, the first time was the charm.

Akin, a secretary in Union Concessions, recently won $20,000 in a contest sponsored by Frito-Lay Inc. The contest, which the snack-food giant sponsored as a 20thanniversary promotion, was the first Akin entered.

Her task: to derive, in 50 words or less, a jingle about Frito-Lay's products. The contest was open to vendors, operators and employees who distribute the product.

Akin entered two jingles in the contest, and she said they were the top two chosen at the National Automatic Merchandising Association's October convention in Philadelphia. However, the entry that was chosen as the winner wasn't the one she probably would have

"I thought the other one might wasn't as smoothly rhyming as the (winner)."

The $20,000 winner: Old Mother Hubbard Walked past the cupboard, Straight to a vending machine. Picked out Frito-Lay To brighten her day Made her feel wonderfully keen. Jalapenos so hot Just hit the spot, Luscious, outside to core. Cookies, crackers and chips, Taste-tempted her lips, Please make them 20 years more! What clinched the championship, Akin believes, is that she mentioned as many products as possible and wrote about the company's 20-year anniversary. However, the victory wasn't a piece of cake - or, perhaps more appropriately, a package of Grandma's cookies.

"It took me quite a little while," she said. "I've never done anything quite like that."

To Akin's knowledge, the jingle was for the 20th-anniversary promotion only and won't be used in any I had to call my family, and, of national advertising outside of Frito-Lay's publications.

Staff/Rob Squires

Jean Akin, secretary in Union Concessions, won $20,000 from Frito-Lay Inc. in a contest to write a new jingle. Akin's jingle describes the company's products in honor of their 20th anniversary.

"When the fellow called, I was calm and cool because it hadn't soaked in yet," she said. "Of course, course, my family couldn't believe

Once the money was won, about $6,000 went immediately for taxes. Akin, who has been employed by the Union since 1975, said she distributed the remaining money in several areas.

"First I felt it was a blessing from the Lord. I wanted to return some of it to him and give him his share, which I've done," she said.

Committee analyzes admissions proposal

By Jeff Schrag Collegian Reporter

TOPEKA - A joint committee of the Kansas Board of Regents and the State Board of Education discussed on Wednesday the effect of the regents' Qualified Admissions proposal on high school budgets.

During the informal session, members of both boards began the process of making Qualified Admissions a functional policy.

One area of the proposal that generated the most debate at the meeting was requiring smaller high schools to change the emphasis of their curriculums to a college preparatory program.

Smaller school districts may be forced to hire more teachers to provide all elements of the regents' required curriculum, said Bill Musick, chairman of the State Board of Education, despite the current trend for teachers to become qualified in two areas of instruction.

"A math teacher, when you get him certified, can teach all the (math) subjects. But if that school has one science teacher, he is probably certified to teach biology and chemistry, or biology and physics, but not biology and chemistry and physics," Musick said.

Districts must either find additional sources of revenue or be more efficient, or a combination of both, to meet the required curriculum, Regent Richard Reinhardt said.

Dale Dennis, assistant commissioner of education for finance and support services, reported to the committee that 20 school districts in the state have high schools with less than 50 students. He then added that smaller school districts are equal or better to the larger school districts in the percentage of graduates who go on to seek higher education. The state average is between 50 and 60 percent, he said.

Musick questioned the justification behind the proposal's foreign language requirement.

He questioned the regents' requirement of having high school students study a foreign language when they do not require it for all college degrees.

Reinhardt said the requirement is a result of living in an international society.

"You can go anywhere in the world speaking English, and buy anything you want. But if you want to sell your product, you better speak their language," Reinhardt said.

Musick said that both boards are moving toward the same goal of providing better education for all Kansans, but they are simply approaching it from different points of view. He praised the meeting as a good opportunity for both sides to air and explain their views.

Journalism department proposes name change

By Jeffrey J. Bielser News Editor

The last campus hurdle was cleared Tuesday by the Department of Journalism and Mass Communications in its attempt to formally become a school.

A proposal to change the designation has already been passed by the Arts and Sciences Curriculum Committee and the Arts and Sciences faculty. Faculty Senate voted in favor of the change at its meeting Tuesday.

The department's next step is to seek approval from the Board of Regents, beginning with the Council of Chief Academic Officers. The decision to seek a change in status comes eight months after the department lost its accreditation.

"With accreditation denied, it would be a good time to do it," said Carol Oukrop, professor of journalism and mass communications and department head. After being accredited for 40 years, the department lost the designation last May.

Discussions with University administration about the reaccreditation denial spawned the idea for the change, and as a result it was included in the department's plan to regain its accreditation, Oukrop said. In addition to regaining accreditation, the proposal submitted to Faculty Senate stated that the change would "provide the strongest impetus for fund raising" and "give the department an identity that would help in program development and enrollment growth."

"It's more convincing in a fund drive to be a school. Most students and parents think of it as a school," Oukrop said, adding the department should "make it official (since that's) what everybody calls us anyhow."

Supreme Court votes 5-3 on Hazelwood

Decision broadens censorship

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - The Supreme Court on Wednesday gave public school officials broad, new authority to censor student newspapers and other forms of student expression.

The court, by a 5-3 vote, ruled that a Hazelwood, Mo., high school principal did not violate students' freespeech rights by ordering two pages deleted from an issue of a studentproduced, school-sponsored newspaper.

"A school need not tolerate student speech that is inconsistent with its basic educational mission even though the government could not censor similar speech outside the school," Justice Byron R. White wrote for the court.

He said judicial intervention to protect students' free-speech rights is censor a school-sponsored publication, theatrical production or other vehicle of student expression has no valid educational purpose."

The dissenting justices accused life. the court of condoning "thought control," adding, "Such unthinking conintolerable."

The Missouri controversy arose in spring 1983 when Robert Reynolds, principal of Hazelwood East High School, refused to permit publication of two articles in the Spectrum, a school-sponsored newspaper produced by students in a journalism

One of the articles dealt with teenage pregnancy, and consisted of personal accounts by three Hazelwood East students who became pregnant. Their names were changed in an

The second article dealt with the effect of divorce on children, and tempt for individual rights is quoted from interviews with students.

School policy required that the principal review each issue of the Spectrum before publication. Reynolds objected to the two articles, and the pages on which they appeared were deleted.

Journalism students Cathy Kuhlmeier, Lee Ann Tippett-West and Leslie Smart sued Reynolds and other school officials, contending their freedom of speech had been

Press' freedoms could change By Alison Neely

Staff Writer

A Supreme Court ruling Wednesday against a St. Louis high school newspaper may signal the deterioration of student press freedom at every level, said Dave Adams, associate professor of journalism and mass communications.

What is very sad about this is that with the problems teen-agers face today - drugs, alcohol, sex, AIDS - now more than ever they should have a way to discuss these things through the school newspaper," Adams said. "They will not be able to if their principal finds (such issues) objectionable."

It was just such an objection that prompted the current controversy. Robert Reynolds, principal of Hazelwood East High School, found what ial in a spring 1983 issue of the Spectrum, the student newspaper.

Two articles dealing with teen-age pregnancy and the effects of divorce on children were censored when Reynolds decided they were unsuitable for publication. Board of Education policy stated that Spectrum staff members had to submit the schoolsponsored newspaper to the principal prior to publication.

Upon viewing the articles, Reynolds pulled two pages of the newspaper.

"Civil libertarians all over the United States should be very concerned about this case," said Adams, one of 12 individuals involved with high school press freedom invited to attend the Court hearings that were held in mid-October. "It looks as if this case has rewrit-he deemed to be objectionable mater- ten Tinker," he said, referring to the 1969 case Tinker vs. Des Moines Independent Community School District. In that case, the Court ruled that students do not shed their rights at the school house gate.

> Prior to the Kuhlmeier case, it was assumed that basic First Amendment protections were applied to high school publications.

> Although the potential impact on high school newspapers is clear, how the Kuhlmeier case will affect college newspapers isn't as certain, Adams said.

> "(The Court) isn't saying whether (the decision) does or doesn't include college-level, lab-based newspapers," Adams said.

Two Filipinos injured in raid

MANAMA, Bahrain - Iranian gunboats attacked a Liberianregistered tanker at dawn Thursday in the southern Persian Gulf, and two Filipino crewmen were reported injured, shipping executives said.

The executives, who spoke on condition of anonymity, identified the ship as the 35,731-ton Petrobulk and said the attack took place at 4:55 a.m. (7:55 p.m. Wednesday EST) off the coast of the United Arab Emirates port of Dubai. It was the first strike of the year in the southern gulf.

The executives reported no fire on the vessel, which was empty, and said it was steaming toward Dubai for repairs.

The ship had been traveling north through the gulf toward Saudi Arabia when it was hit less than 20 miles off the Dubai

The executives said gulf shippers had anticipated an Iranian raid since Iraq attacked an Iranian supertanker Sunday, shattering a nine-day lull in the Iran-Iraq tanker war.

Another Iraqi attack Monday damaged the Greek-owned United Venture. Two Filipino sailors were killed in the attack and another six crewman were missing.

Bill to require testing for drugs

TOPEKA - Sen. Ross Doyen, R-Concordia, Wednesday introduced a bill intended to determine the number of accidental deaths involving alcohol or drugs.

The bill would require that blood tests be performed on the victims of fatal accidents to determine the presence of either alcohol and drugs. The drugs would be performed on people killed in any accident involving cars, airplanes or boats.

"The results of the analysis required by this section may be used by state and local officials only for statistical purposes that do not reveal the identity of the deceased person," the proposed legislation says.

AIDS blood tests would be mandatory for people convicted of incest or aggravated incest under one of several bills introduced in the House.

The bill would require one AIDS test after a person's conviction and another six months later if the first test was negative. Positive test results would be reported to both the state Department of Health and Environment and the victims, but the results would otherwise be kept confidential.

Waste site proposal questioned

LINCOLN, Neb. - An official of the company that will develop a low-level radioactive waste dump in Nebraska said he questions legislative proposals for local elections to approve the site.

"I don't know if a referendum is the appropriate way of really dealing with the issue fairly," said Rich Paton, special assistant to the president of US Ecology, Inc. of Louisville, Ky.

"People have elected officials," he said Wednesday. "They elect those officials to make decisions and I think that's the process that we would like to work with - working with those elected officials."

Two bills now before the Legislature would require voters in the county proposed as the site to approve the location.

Gov. Kay Orr has insisted that the facility will not be built in a community that doesn't want it, but has not endorsed the concept of an election. But she has said that the perception she is against an election "may be premature."

Attack aimed at cocaine boss

MEDELLIN, Colombia - A car bomb killed two security guards Wednesday and blasted a crater in front of a luxury apartment building owned by Pablo Escobar Gaviria, Colombia's reputed billionaire cocaine czar, authorities said.

The attack apparently was aimed at Escobar, said Mayor William Jaramillo Gomez. Two groups, one previously unknown, claimed responsibility, saying they had launched a war on drug trafficking.

Five people in neighboring buildings were injured in the 5:15 a.m. explosion, which tore open water mains and inflicted damage as much as a half-mile away in the city's fashionable El Poblado district, police said.

Police said the bomb, in a jeep parked outside the building, contained more than 40 pounds of dynamite.

Only members of Escobar's family lived in the eight-story building dubbed "Monaco," which houses millions of dollars worth of art treasures and classic motor vehicles, said the mayor's wife, Luz Elena Jaramillo.

Stars unable to make planets

AUSTIN, Texas — The universe may be a more lonely place than once believed because many stars thought capable of producing planets are actually unable to do so, a scientist said Wednesday.

Frederick M. Walter, a University of Colorado astronomer, said he has found that most young sunlike stars appear to lack the clouds of gas and dust thought essential for the formation of planets, the cradle of evolving life.

"This could mean that the number of solar-like stars that could develop planets is smaller than many believe," said Walter. He emphasized that this is only speculation because "nobody really knows how disks (the star clouds) collapse into

Unique triplets born Wednesday

LOS ANGELES - A woman gave birth Wednesday to what are believed to be the world's first triplets born from frozen embryos, including two babies born from the same embryo, according to the doctor who supervised the procedure.

The triplets, a girl and two identical boys, were born 21/4 months premature to a 35-year-old California woman who has asked that she remain anonymous, said Dr. Richard J. Paulson, director of in-vitro fertilization at the California Medical Center's California Reproductive Health Institute.

"The uniqueness about this is that first it is triplets born from frozen embryos," Paulson said. "The other part is that you've got three babies out of two. There have been instances of identical twins from frozen embryos, but not of triplets."

The world's first frozen embryo birth was in 1984 in Austra-. lia; and the first authenticated case of frozen embryo twins was also reported in that country the following year.

The first frozen embryo child born in the United States was a boy born in June 1986 in Santa Barbara.

Paulson said the triplets were in stable condition and their mother was in good condition. Their location, at a Southern California hospital, was being kept under wraps.

"All three are on respirators, which is standard in a birth of this sort," he said.

The two boys, born at 6:53 a.m. and 6:56 a.m., weighed 1 pound, 14 ounces and 2 pounds 3 ounces, respectively. The girl, born at 6:55 a.m., weighed 2 pounds, 4 ounces.

Campus Briefly

Donnert to receive Navy honor

Hermann Donnert, professor of nuclear engineering, will receive a Letter of Commendation next week from U.S. Navy Rear Admiral M.C. Colley in Kansas City, Mo. The letter is in recognition of Donnert's "outstanding assistance and support of U.S. Navy nuclear propulsion programs." Navy officials said Donnert has allowed Navy nuclear officers to speak to his classes and that he is responsible for contributing 10 nuclear propulsion officer candidates in the last three years.

Professor receives dual awards

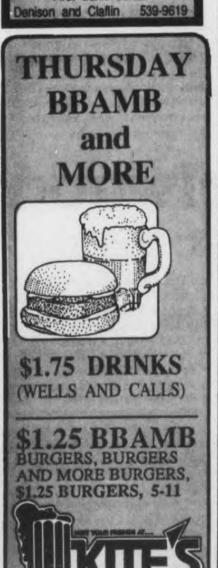

A K-State history professor has been selected to study during 1988-89 at the Institute for Advanced Studies in Princeton, N.J. In addition, Albert Hamscher has been awarded a National Endowment for the Humanities fellowship for university teachers to support his research. Hamscher, a specialist in early modern French history, has been a K-State faculty member since 1972. The prestigious NEH grant will be worth up to $27,500.

Ag College offers scholarships

K-State's College of Agriculture is offering more than $200,000 to students for the 1988-89 academic year. Both the agriculture scholarship application and the K-State scholarship application must be returned by Feb. 1. Selection of recipients is based primarily on ACT scores and grades, Larry Erpelding, associate director of resident instruction, said. The ACT Family Financial Statement must be compiled by March 15, 1988 for the awards based on financial need.

Taiwan's president dies

Successor promotes unification

By The Associated Press

TAIPEI, Taiwan - President Chiang Ching-kuo, the son of nationalist Chinese leader Chiang Kai-shek, died of a heart attack Wednesday.

He has been succeeded by a native Taiwanese who is expected to continue Chiang's push for liberalization.

Chiang's death at age 77 ended the six-decade dynasty that led the Nationalist Party to victory and defeat in China and prosperity in Taiwan, an island nation of 19.5 million people off China's coast.

Vice President Lee Teng-hui was sworn in to succeed Chiang in accordance with the constitution after an emergency meeting of the party's Central Standing Committee.

Lee, a 64-year-old Christian and the first native Taiwanese to become president, is expected to continue easing the nationalists' authoritarian grip on the island they have governed since 1949.

But, the reforms pushed by the charismatic Chiang may slow because Taiwan is likely to move toward a more consultative leadership.

"We have lost a capable leader," said Premier Yu Kuo-hwa, fighting back tears, as he announced Chiang's death on national television Wednesday evening.

Lee urged the nation to unite and fulfill the mission of Chiang and his father to unite Taiwan with China under the nationalists.

Chiang Kai-shek came to power on the mainland in 1926. He led the nationalists when Japan was defeated in China in World War II but was forced to retreat to Taiwan in 1949 when his troops were defeated by Communist forces led by Mao Tse-tung. About 2 million Chinese followed him to the island.

Chiang Ching-kuo became president three years after his father's death in 1975.

The rival Chinese governments technically are at war and the Taiwan military canceled all leave Wednesday, but China was not expected to make any military moves toward Taiwan. Beijing announced Chiang's death but had no immediate comment.

In Washington, State Department spokesman Charles Redman called Chiang a "respected leader" and said the American people offer their condolences.

Chiang, a diabetic who was confined to a wheelchair, had orchestrated a new era of liberalization.

In September 1986, he allowed the first opposition party since 1949, the Democratic Progressive Party. Most of the members are native Taiwanese, who have complained of domination by the nationalists from the mainland.

In July, Chiang lifted 38 years of martial law. In October, he allowed Taiwan residents to return to the mainland to visit relatives left behind in the civil war, a change in the nationalist policy of no contact with the Communists.

Lee rarely has demonstrated his stand on public issues. But when he has spoken, he usually has reflected Chiang's views.

Parliament member Eddie Tseng, who is based in Hong Kong, said the government would continue the move toward reforms.

Cancer center receives grant: part of $1.8 million package

By The Collegian Staff

K-State's Center for Basic Cancer research received a grant for more than $700,000 Tuesday from the Wesley Foundation in Topeka.

The grant is part of a $1.8 million package awarded to K-State, the University of Kansas and the University of Kansas School of Medicine.

"It (the grant) will combine the talents of each of the laboratories from Lawrence, Kansas City and Manhattan. The labs will become even better by recruiting talent throughout the nation," said Terry Johnson, director of the division of biology and the Center for Basic Cancer research.

Funding will begin immediately and be in full operation by January

The grant will fund three main areas of cancer research: molecular biology and cell growth regulation, anti-cancer drugs and multiple drug resistance, and tumor immunology and host resistance.

A major asset to the program is the chance for collaboration between established researchers, Johnson

"We have selected 34 reserachers who are well established in their areas for the project," he said. "It is a two-year period and will support the very exciting and unusual chance. And, it will provide economic development for the area since some of largest one ever given by the the researchers will be moving to Manhattan."

The grant will be distributed over a recruiting of graduate and postdoctorate fellows to Kansas. It is the Foundation.

Negotiators stand firm on Star Wars

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - American negotiators are under instruction to take a firm stand on the U.S. Star Wars program when a new round of nuclear arms talks opens today with the Soviet Union.

The negotiators will tell their Soviet counterparts in Geneva that President Reagan is determined to proceed with development and testing of a space-based shield against nuclear ballistic missiles and aim for eventual deployment, a U.S. official said Wednesday.

The negotiators received their instructions last week in a meeting with Secretary of State George P.

The main goal in the new round is to work out a 50 percent cutback in U.S. and Soviet long-range bombers, land-based missiles and nuclear submarines.

The idea is to have a treaty ready for signing when Reagan and Soviet Communist Party General Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev hold their next summit meeting in Moscow, probably in June. The two leaders reaffirmed their commitment to cut their arsenals when they met here last month. They also were able to clear away a number of secondary issues.

American verification experts are working on a monitoring system to ensure Soviet compliance with any accord that might emerge at the Moscow summit.

But there was no agreement between Reagan and Gorbachev on Star Wars. Known formally as the Strategic Defense Initiative, the program contemplates using nuclear weapons and advanced technology in space to defeat a ballistic missile attack.

The U.S. official, who discussed the Geneva arms talks only on a condition of anonymity, said the American delegation would take a hard line on Star Wars even though Soviet intentions were not clear.

After objecting to the program, the Soviets agreed last year to sign a treaty to eliminate all intermediate-range nuclear missiles with a range of 315 to 3,125 miles.

The question on American minds now is whether the Soviets would be willing to complete a treaty on strategic nuclear weapons despite Star Wars or slow down negotiations in an effort to constrain the program.

Hearings on the medium-range missile treaty are due to begin next week in the Senate. A number of conservative Republicans have indicated they will try to block ratification.

Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., in a letter Tuesday to President Reagan, raised questions about the photographs the Soviets provided of their SS-20 and SS-23 missiles, which would be banned under the accord.

A congressional source said Tuesday the missile depicted was about 3 feet shorter than in the data.

Greed controls holidays' importance

Just when you thought you had seen the last of the holidays. No more suffering from seeing cheap holiday decorations in the department stores until next year. Then IT

Valentine's Day, the next big moneymaking holiday for merchants. Stores are flooded with glossy red hearts and cheap chocolate-covered calories. The vibrant promotional displays of remantic couples and rosy-cheeked cupids stand next to the discount bins where abandoned Christmas and New Year's Eve partywear are tossed like dirty socks. I suppose we really should give Valentine's Day some credit. After all, at least the decorations for this event waited until after New Year's to be put into place, unlike the greedy Christmas which had plastic Santas on display before the Halloween candy was set out.

This commercialization of holidays has determined what the largest holidays will be and how the American public will celebrate them. Sure, the president can proclaim a national holiday, but if the salespeople cannot think of a good money-making promotion, like Easter dresses or Valentine's Day chocolates, the day receives little social recognition.

Seriously, have you purchased your Martin Luther King Jr. Day cards yet? Does it concern you only because it takes a day away from Easter break? Have you thought of any plans on how to celebrate, aside from sleeping late in honor of this great leader?

The greed of holiday promoters has cheapened major national holidays and made some less profitable holidays so obscure that few people even know about them. Just consider all of the poor holidays in January alone which slip by unnoticed and uncelebrated by the masses. January, which is by the way National Hobby Month, National Oatmeal Month, National Soup Month, and National Prune Breakfast Month, contains a multitude of holidays, many of which could be more enjoyable to celebrate than the big traditional

Just think, on Jan. 1, instead of celebrating the New Year like everyone else, you could be celebrating Z Day, a special day set aside to honor those people whose last names start with the letter Z. If you don't know anyone whose last name starts with Z, you could wait until Jan. 4, and celebrate National Trivia Day. This is a good time to wipe the dust off of the old trivial pursuit game and honor the know-it-all in your midst.

Or perhaps you're in the mood to celebrate this weekend. In that case, drag out your favorite hat because Hat Day is Friday. If this sounds like too much of a celebration, you can wait until Sunday and observe the death of Thomas Crapper, the primary developer of the flushing toilet.

As previously mentioned, Monday is Martin Luther King Jr. Day. However, the day is also National Clean Off Your Desk Day. Which holiday came first I'm not sure, but I doubt we'd get out of school just to clean off our desks.

Not to be forgotten in this muddle of holidays is Jan. 19, which is National Printing Ink Day. This day is set aside to celebrate the contribution ink has made to the dissemination of information, advancement of culture, and to the dirtiness of hands after reading this

Another important day this month is Jan. 23. On that day, you can either celebrate National Handwriting Day or observe National Pie Day. Between the two of them, I think the pie day is going to get a bigger

For the music lovers, Jan. 28 is National Kazoo Day. Break out the kazoos and celebrate their value as a musical instrument. It's rather obvious why this never became a major national holiday. Hopefully you'll be done celebrating the kazoos in time for the 31st, which is National Popcom Day.

Now I know there are a lot of dates to remember here, especially since they aren't well-publicized. So, to help those who have trouble remembering specific dates, there are a few bigger holidays which span an entire week. Hopefully you'll be able to fit celebrating in there at some time.

For example, this week is National Man-Watchers Week, in honor of the sport of watching men who are well worth watching. Don't miss out on this one, girls. You have two more days to participate in this week, as if you haven't been secretly participating all

For the more artistic minded there is Cuckoo Dancing Week from the 13th until the 19th. No, this doesn't celebrate the tiny little birds that like to screech repeatedly on the hour. Instead, it commemorates Laurel and Hardy, affectionately named, the dancing cuckoos. This could be a good week to rent some old movies and sit back and enjoy. Pcssibly you could combine your celebration of this week with the overlapping National Pizza Week which lasts from the 17th to the

Some of you probably think this whole idea of celebrating so many holidays is ridiculous - and it is. However, everyone should observe Jan. 16, which is national Nothing Day. A day set aside for Americans to just sit around not honoring, celebrating, commemorating, observing or participating in anything. Not a bad idea; it could catch on. The only problem is how to promote it so it can be sold to the masses for millions in

Co-op should concern senate, administration

The KSU Childcare Cooperative is quickly running out of options.

Only a year after the co-op teetered on the brink of bankruptcy, it is now faced with a continually revolving door of unsatisfied instructors who are leaving. The reason? Embarrassingly low salaries.

Actually, embarrassing isn't the word; pitiful is more apropos. Lead instructors at the co-op, who are expected to have a four-year degree, earn only $4.50 an hour.

Assistants earn a dollar an hour less. Under the current pay structure, neither group is eligible for a raise.

The negative effects of such paltry salaries virtually go without saying. Staff morale is low, parents who have to constantly adjust to a new instructor are frustrated, and children are upset. Co-op officials agree not bad, isn't what it could be.

In an attempt to remedy the problem, co-op officials have asked the University administration and Student Senate for an additional $100,000 per year. Both groups should seriously consider the public discussion. At the university level, where innovations are comimperative.

But for a center to become excellent, it must first attract excellent teachers. That's almost impossible with salaries that are below the nation's poverty line.

If acceptable child care at this University is to become a priority, the obligations facing the admithat the learning experience, though nistration and Student Senate are health of a university. They inject more money into the university and keep it moving forward. But in Kansas, the rejuvenation comes only after some hardship.

The budget the Legislature makes for the regents schools is based on the enrollment figures two years previous to the current year. For K-State, this means surviving now on a budget that reflects dropping enrollment when enrollment is actually increasing.

Since fiscal years 1985-86, K-State enrollment has risen 2.5 percent. That means the budget must cover about 350 more students than planned. The extra students need classrooms and teachers.

To make up the difference, schools can request a fee release from the Legislature. It is a one-time allocation from the state to universities whose enrollments have dramatically increased. K-State has petitioned for $300,000 for fiscal year

In his budget report this month,

Enrollment increases bolster the Gov. Mike Hayden recommended that requests from K-State, Emporia State University, The Wichita State University and the University of Kansas should be at least partially filled. He recommended a total of $999,881 for all four schools. KU's and K-State's requests together make up more than three-fourths of the amount recommended by the

> And now it is up to the Legislature to decide how much to allot. Of course, they will bicker about which school needs the most and which needs none. If K-State is not granted enough, the University will have to cut back in other areas to provide enough classes and teachers for the increase of students.

> The Legislature should realize the plight of universities that must operate on insufficient funds and of the students who have to put up with it. This is particularly true concerning K-State. The University had to battle dropping enrollments and now has to pay for the win.

Reality conquers optimistic idea

With Christmas a day away, my family piled out of the car and into my grandparents' front room, where relatives covered the floor, and grandma sat on a couch near the back of the room.

A few months ago she was diagnosed as having cancer. She had an operation and now takes chemotherapy treatments. If anyone asks if you want chemotherapy, say no.

Until the operation, she sewed all day. She was a steamstress. Now she wears a wig and sits and sleeps instead of sewing. She should recover; the chemotherapy is only a precaution. She needs rest, but my dad and her other children went to her house this Christmas to make sure they saw her, just in case.

She needs rest, but we want to see her so she does not get any. Such is the way love works.

She kept asking, "When are we going to have Christmas?" She could not understand why we said, "You mean, when are we going to open gifts?'

I hoped I would be able to say, "That last Christmas was the best. We didn't blow our chance." That unrealistic expectation was doomed to disappoinment.

Each Christmas is like a wrapped gift while it is still wrapped it has the chance of containing final, real happiness. The happiness we could die in peace after having experienced.

Holiday depression comes from unwrapping Christmas gifts and finding dress socks as my dad did four times this year.

My family was invited to turkey dinner at my mom's sister's the Saturday after Christmas. The family reunion for my grandma's side was also that day. Neither side would give in.

Grandma all but said, "You'd better humor me while I'm still here. This may be my last reunion." Such is the way love works.

Dad wanted the reunion - mom the turkey. For a while they wanted us kids to choose sides. They cruelly wanted us to say, "No, I like them better than you and will therefore visit them and not you."

In the end, Dad went to the reunion, and the rest of us were mercifully forced to eat turkey.

We drove back to my grandparents' house. Grandma cooked instead of sitting and could not have slept over the noise of 19 relatives. We usually ate in shifts.

Each relative asked, "So, college boy, how's K-State?"

We fought through cousins to reach the bathroom as if we were chopping a path through a rain forest in search of a lost city.

An uncle videotaped everything. We lived half of the time and watched ourselves live the other half. A 5-year-old cousin has his whole life on tape. Grandma has no photos of herself before her wedding.

An aunt pointed to a room full of bodies recovering from basketball and said, "Look, grandpa, how many people wouldn't be here if you had died at 18?"

No one would smile during the Grandchildren Photo, so one uncle stood up in front and lifted up his shirt and slapped his potbelly and said, "Hey guys! Look at this!"

He played a few religious ballads on his guitar. He then loaned it to another uncle who played "A Hard Day's Night".

When we left, I shook hands with the males and hugged the females, Grandma last. She hugged my dad last, and he had to ask her if she was OK.

We piled in the car, and grandpa came out for a last good-bye. Dad asked if we owed them anything, "You know, for food, or for keeping us here." Grandpa said no, we didn't owe them anything. Such is the way love works.

Qualified admissions policy creates stir

By Erwin Seba Government Editor

Even though a qualified admissions policy approved by the Kansas Board of Regents may not be in place until 1992, the effect of the regents' Dec. 17 endorsement is already being felt, a K-State official said.

"We are already getting questions from prospective seniors who think the policy is in effect for next fall semester," said Pat Bosco, associate vice president for institutional advancement and dean of student

Kansas legislators will have to change the current law providing open admissions for Kansas high school graduates to all six regents universities before a qualified admissions policy can be implemented.

As recommended by the regents, applicants to state universities would have to have completed a prescribed curriculum with at least a 2.0 grade point average, or have an American Collegiate Testing score of 23, or graduate in the top one-third of their high school class to be admitted.

The curriculum would require high school students to complete four years of English, three years each of mathematics, social studies and natural sciences, and two years of foreign language instruction.

A task force of faculty members from regents universities and state high schools will report to the board by May 1990 on which specific high school courses meet the requirements.

Bosco said the cost of following the new guidelines would be $200,000 the first year and $100,000 "We are having to spend time for each year after that, mostly for Resident applicants completing 24 hours at an accredited college or university with a minimum GPA of 2.0 may be admitted to a regents university.

Bosco said Kansas community colleges would benefit from this proposal.

"I would predict a bonanza for community colleges in the state," he said.

Also, the selective admissions proposal would allow an additional group of students, equivalent to 15 percent of the entering class for each university, who do not meet the proposed admission requirements to be admitted to regents universities.

Bosco said minority applicants and athletes would benefit from this 'admissions window."

Open admissions would be mainor older who have graduated from an accredited Kansas high school or have earned a GED with an overall score of 50.

Residents fight plant expansion

The Board of Zoning Appeals Wednesday granted the city another 30 days to study options regarding the expansion of the Manhattan Water Treatment Plant on property located at the north end of Goodnow Park.

Residents of the Goodnow Park area came to the public hearing armed with signs and buttons refusing to give up their fight to save the park.

"We're not discouraged at all," said Brenda Oppert, graduate in biochemistry and resident of 425 Thurston St. "We'll leave our signs and lights on for another 30 days."

The board tabled the motion after Director of City Planning Larry McCallum said the city would look seriously at a few of the proposals, but even Upton agreed that each proposed option would cost the city more money.

"The cost falls on all of us to change it," McCallum said, adding that there have already been three rate increases in anticipation of the $6 million proposed expansion.

"We have a target," he said. "We know our most economical plan and everything else would be extremely expensive."

The plant, which occupies approximately 3.1 acres, will be expanded to include two more treatment basins. If the existing proposal passed, the park would still have a playground and a softball diamond.

Local experts skeptical about DUI proposal

From Staff and Wire Reports

A Manhattan law enforcement official and a civil rights activist expressed little knowledge about legislation proposed by Gov. Mike Hayden and Attorney General Robert T. Stephan Jan. 6, which would strengthen the state's laws against drunk driving.

The proposed law would authorize police to take a driver's license from an individual arrested for DUI until a hearing is held.

"It certainly puts a great deal of responsibility on that police officer's judgment," Riley County Attorney Bill Kennedy said.

Dick Kurtenbach, executive director of the American Civil Liberties Union of Kansas and Western Mis- a taking to jail."

souri, said the proposal is unconstitutional.

"Americans have a pretty basic constitutional right to a presumption of innocence. That has meant in the past that you couldn't punish a person until he or she was proven guilty," Kurtenbach said.

Kennedy said it should be remembered that police officers already possess a great deal of authority.

"A police officer has the authority to arrest on probable cause," he said. "The authority to arrest means the authority to jail. To take a person's license is a whole lot less taking than

Those two measures, Hayden said, would make Kansas eligible for a 50-percent increase in federal funds from the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration. That increase would total more than $800,000 a year and would be used for alcohol and drug education programs, Hayden said.

Stephan said 224 of the 500 traffic fatalities in Kansas in 1986 involved alcohol. The previous year, 155 of

He added that under current law, a judge can order a person convicted of DUI to pay restitution if that person was involved in an accident, but frequently judges do not. The new law would require judges to order victim

Hayden said the proposed legislation is not the final word on controlling drunk drivers.

"I simply see it as a good first step," he said. "We would be up at the forefront with the other states."

The governor predicted the proposal would be widely embraced by legislators in their current session.

Stephan said the public's attitude toward driving while intoxicated has changed in recent years.

"For a long time, we used to have weak DUI laws because everyone thought, 'There, but for the grace of God, go I," the attorney general said.

According to KPL officials, the recent cuts bring the total amount of reductions in electricity costs alone to $40 million in the past year - a savings of more than $80 a year for the typical residential customer who receives electricity.

Beginning this month, residential customers will pay only $50.50 for 750 kilowatt-hours of electricity, down from $56.76 a year ago, according to David S. Black, chairman and chief executive officer of KPL Gas Service.

"Our rates in January will be almost 14 percent lower than they were in June of 1983, when our last electric rate increase was granted," Black said.

John Johannes, Manhattan district manager for KPL Gas Service, said a reduction in gas rates also went into effect this month. "Gas rates were reduced about 1.7 cents per thousand cubic feet," Johannes said. "There are about 80 percent of Manhattan residents who are combination gas-and-electric users, and 20 percent subscribe to

The savings that allow for the reductions have come from the refinancing of first mortgage bonds and a buy back of preferred stock.

The Tax Reform Act of 1986 is also having positive effects on the utilities rates of Manhattan residents.

"Another reason for the rate reductions is the reduction in our federal

Margin: Kansas plan to rival peers

TOTAL THE CONTRACTOR OF THE PARTY OF THE PAR

Gov. Mike Hayden presents the 1988 budget report to the Kansas Legislature during his State of the State address Tuesday evening at the Capitol in Topeka.

Yea, though the faculty walk through the valley of the lowest salaries in the Big Eight and among peer institutions, they shall fear no evil if the Kansas Legislature adopts the Margin of Excellence.

During his State of the State address Tuesday, Gov. Mike Hayden endorsed the Kansas Board of Regents' Margin of Excellence program to upgrade university faculty salaries and enhance university programs.

The regents had recommended this longterm strategy to revitalize the quality and condition of Kansas' public higher education institutions.

"Modern demands for increased productivity and high skills require that education be assigned our highest priority," Hayden said in his address to the Legislature.

"When students attend a regents university, they must have a highly qualified faculty and a classroom environment conducive to learning," he said: "This is the goal of our faculty would average 7.9 percent.

Hayden recommended an allocation of $41.3 million toward the MOE program during fiscal year 1989, which would facilitate an average salary increase of 8.5 percent for instructional faculty in Kansas. At K-State, the salary increase for instructional faculty would average 7.9 percent.

The regents' plan had recommended $47 million spread over the next three fiscal years.

The governor said he chose to fund 88 percent of the program during the next fiscal year to preclude committing future legislatures to completing the program.

K-State President Jon Wefald called Hayden's budget recommendations for the regents universities the best since the mid-1970s with regard to faculty salary increases.

"The governor's budget recommendation to the state Legislature represents an excellent first step toward a solid foundation for the future of higher education in Kansas," Wefald said.

Wefald said.

Faculty salaries have eroded to a level where retention of quality faculty is often predicated upon pride in K-State and nothing else, student leaders and administrators said.

Salaries for K-State faculty lag behind all peer institutions, other land-grant and state universities, the Consumer Price Index, and the average per-capita income increase of Kansany

"It's important we retain our best and brightest faculty, but it's hard for someone to turn down an employment opportunity at another institution that makes a salary offer as much as 70 percent higher than what K-State is paying," said Michael Johnson, assistant to the president.

"Something I think all of us — including the Legislature, the governor and the regents themselves — are missing the boat on is the fact that we are not only losing quality faculty," said Troy Lubbers, student body president and junior in business administration. "When they leave, the University loses research grants and endowments worth millions of dollars and the chance for future grants and endowments.

"The government is talking fiscal responsibility, but what good does it do to lose millions in research dollars because we couldn't cough up what I consider to be a pittance in salary increases?" he said.

The MOE program has received strong support across Kansas from university administrators, faculty, students, numerous organizations — including the Kansas Bankers Association, the Kansas Chamber of Commerce and the Kansas Livestock Association — and the press.

"There has been a well-orchestrated approach to making people across the state—not just educators, legislators and elected officials, but coalitions across the state—aware of the needs of higher education and how important the Margin of Excellence is to the future of the state of Kansas," said Robert Krause, vice president for institutional advancement.

"If the Margin of Excellence is not passed, I would think we are talking about a mass exodus of quality faculty....People who are not already looking for jobs would take it as a clear signal that they had better start looking, and people would seriously question the commitment this state has to being competitive in education and aspiring to excellence," he said.

Speaking before Hayden's address, House majority leader Joe Knopp, R-Manhattan, said, "Much will depend on the emphasis placed on Margin of Excellence by the governor during his State of the State

san support," said Senate majority leader Paul "Bud" Burke, R-Leawood. "There may be some political posturing, because it is an election year — the Demo-

"The state of Kansas has experienced trying economic times for five or six years and, despite tax increases committed to education, we have not been able to keep up," Burke said.

Also speaking before Hayden's address, Senate minority leader Michael Johnston, D-Parsons, said the MOE proposal looks good on balance and that he believes what the regents have recommended for 1989 will pass.

To retain and attract quality faculty, K-State must be competitive with other institutions with regard to salaries, Krause said. Because of limited salary resources, University administrators have been forced into a situation of having to offer higher entry-level salaries to fill vacancies, at the expense of the currently employed faculty.

Some examples of recent personnel problems experienced by K-State, extracted from the K-State fiscal year 1989 budget, are listed below:

Agriculture departments lost two senior faculty members to Big Eight schools, at salary increases of 49 percent and 33 percent.

A textile scientist in human ecology accepted a position at another land-grant university and received a 21-percent salary increase.

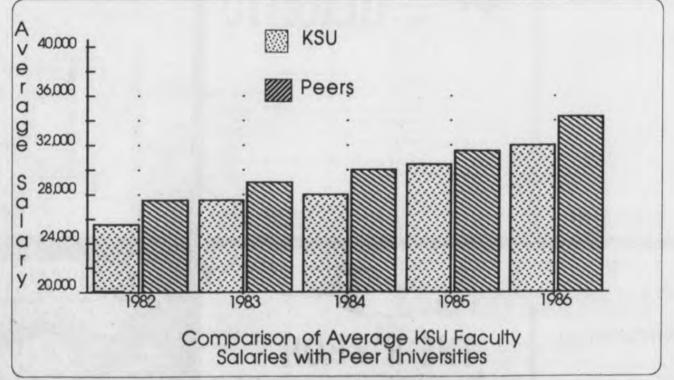

Efforts to recruit two inexperienced faculty in electrical engineering failed when the two recruits accepted positions elsewhere at salaries of $44,000 and $39,000. K-State faculty in this capacity with three years of experience are paid $32,500.

Repeated failures to attract a qualified faculty member in journalism resulted in employing a beginning assistant professor at $31,005. Senior members of the department are paid $28,863 after 15 years of experience.

According to the K-State budget proposal, programs at the heart of the K-State mission have been funded below necessary levels or not at all, and enhancements are needed to meet those missions and sustain standards.

A portion of the proposed K-State MOE funds are targeted at mission-related program enhancements, but budget recommendations made by Hayden could radically

Margin of Excellence: overview of proposal

The Margin of Excellence program being recommended by the Kansas Board of Regents is a long-term strategy to improve the quality, condition and performance of the seven higher-education institutions under the regents' jurisdiction.

The regents' proposal represents a new concept in constructing budget requests for regents' institutions. Funding requests are based on percentage increases and program improvements against specific targets. Targets are determined by how each regents school's budget compares to similar peer institutions.

The MOE funding request represents dollars over and above budgeted program maintenance funds, which are those funds needed to maintain regents institutions at status quo.

The projected program maintenance costs for fiscal years 1989, 1990 and 1991 are $70 million. The amount requested for MOE over those same three fiscal years is $47 million. The two figures combined reflect a total budget of $117 million.

The MOE three-year goal is to increase regents universities' budgets to a level equal to 95 percent of the average budget of peer institutions. The most recent comparison between regents and peer universities reflected that, on the average, regents universities were funded at a level equal to 86.5 percent of peer institutions. K-State's peer institutions are Colorado State, Iowa State, North Carolina State, Oklahoma State and Oregon State.

The Margin of Excellence program calls for increasing resident tuition for fiscal year 1989 by 3 percent and non-resident tuition by 9 percent. Resident tuition will also increase in 1990 and 1991 by 6 percent each year.

Two Arabs killed in Israeli riot; 4 Palestinian activists expelled

By The Associated Press

JERUSALEM — Israel expelled four Palestinian activists from occupied territories Wednesday, ignoring international protests, and its soldiers killed two Arabs in the riot-torn West Bank and Gaza Strip.

Arabs began to riot while a U.N. envoy visited a Palestinian refugee camp. He and the Israeli government accused the other of causing it.

A Cabinet meeting ended with no announcement of new measures to deal with the violence that began Dec. 8 1987 in the lands Israel captured from Jordan and Egypt in the 1967 Middle East war. More than 30 people have been killed, hundreds wounded and thousands arrested.

In Washington, State Department spokesman Charles Redman said of the deportations: "That's an action we deeply regret."

A U.N. doctor, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the body of a 12-year-old boy killed by gunfire was taken to the Jabaliya refugee camp clinic in Gaza. Shifa hospital in Gaza City said a 10-year-old boy was in serious condition with bullet wounds in the chest.

Military officials said they could not confirm the Gaza death, but said soldiers near the West Bank town of Ramallah opened fire on Arabs who threw stones and iron bars, killing a 19-year-old man.

The confirmed number of deaths, not including the one reported by the U.N. doctor, stood at 33 on Wednesday.

Palestine Press Service, an Arabrun agency, said three more people died of injuries suffered previously: a 4-month-old girl and 12-year-old girl suffocated by tear gas, and a 40-year-old man shot 10 days ago. The report could not be confirmed independently.

According to the Israeli military officials, a young man and another aged 65 were wounded in separate shooting incidents in the Ramallah

Hospitals in Gaza reported four people wounded by gunfire Wednesday and 10 women treated for injuries caused by rubber bullets.

A report by Israeli army radio said a soldier and a border policeman were wounded by Palestinians with knives in Gaza's Khan Yunis refugee Israel expelled Jabril Mahmoud Rujub, Jamal Mohammed Jibara, Bashir Ahmed Al Kheiri and Hussam Abdul Rahman Khader despite a U.S. warning that the action might cause further unrest and violate the Geneva Conventions on the rights of civilians in occupied areas.

The European Economic Community also protested. Israel contends the deportations are permitted under laws inherited from the British mandate in Palestine.

Five other Palestinians face deportation on similar grounds and have until Sunday to appeal the orders.

Kansas may lose House seat

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Hurt by slow population growth, Kansas appears likely to lose one of its five congressional seats in the apportionment after the 1990 national census, a new study indicates.

Calculations by a Washington consultant, based upon 1987 population estimates released at the end of last month, reaffirms the findings of previous reports that identified Kansas as a loser when the House of Representatives is reapportioned.

Kim Brace, president of Election Data Services Inc., concluded in the new study that Kansas as well as Illinois, Iowa, Massachusetts and West Virginia would lose a single seat.

The Census Bureau's 1987 population estimate for Kansas was 2.476 million, up 4.7 percent or about 112,000 from 1980.

Burdette Loomis, chairman of the political science department at the University of Kansas, said Monday that the loss of a congressional seat wouldn't automatically diminish Kansas' clout in the nation's capital. Legislative power depends in large part upon the abilities of individual lawmakers rather than the size of a state's delegation, he said.

"I think it has a lot more to do with individual political careers and a sort of shaking up of the short-term and medium-term range of choices for Kansas politicians," Loomis said.

Under certain circumstances, for example, the reapportionment could force two incumbent congressmen to run against one another.

Rep. Jim Slattery, a Topeka Democrat, said it would be "bad news" if Kansas lost a seat. "What it means is that we will lose 20 percent of our representation in the House of Representatives," said Slattery. "What that means is we will lose a seat on the Agriculture Committee or we'll lose a seat on the Energy and Commerce Committee or we'll lose a seat on the Foreign Affairs Committee or maybe we'll lose a seat on the Budget Committee."

Loomis speculates that the 5th Congressional District of southeast Kansas and the 2nd District of northeast Kansas will be the most likely candidates for dramatic boundary changes and possible elimination in a reapportionment.

Rep. Bob Whittaker, an Augusta
Republican, represents the 5th District and Slattery holds the 2nd District seat.

The apportionment after the 1980 census, according to some accounts, contributed in part to Democrats picking up an extra seat in the Kansas delegation.

Although the number of districts in Kansas remained unchanged, the 2nd District's incumbent Republican, Jim Jeffries, retired in 1982 after the district's boundaries were redrawn by a federal court.

THE RIBBON

South African women, black and white, in an effort to make their voices heard in a cry for a just resolution to the escalating conflict. This film follows the journey of the Peace Ribbon (which was over 500 meters long) over an eight month period of time. It offers a perspective that is not often seen, that there are women in South Africa who are desperate to make a contribution to the struggle for justice and peace.

In honor of Dr. Martin Luther King, all showings of this film will be free and open to the public.

A federal trial judge ruled against the students but the 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals reinstated the suit. It ruled that the Spectrum is a "public forum" because it was intended to be and operated as a conduit for student viewpoints.

But the Supreme Court ruled that the Spectrum is not, and never was, a public forum.

Wednesday's decision, in concluding that the Hazelwood East principal acted reasonably, did not use the same standard of review used by the court in a landmark 1969 decision involving the wearing of antiwar armbands by high school students.

In that decision, the court said public schools may curtail students' free-speech rights only when the student expression is materially disruptive or invades the rights of others.

White noted that the court was not saying whether the same degree of judicial deference to educators' censorship decisions "is appropriate with respect to school-sponsored expressive activities at the college and university level."

One of the three students who challenged the censorship at Hazelwood East, Leslie Smart, said she was dismayed by Wednesday's ruling.

Now a senior majoring in political science at Washington University in St. Louis, Smart said, "It's right there in the Constitution. It doesn't have an age limit. Censorship is not legal in this country."

Francis Huss, superintendent of the Hazelwood School District, said it was a landmark decision because it "establishes the authority of the board of education to make decisions regarding what the curriculum should be."

Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist and Justices John Paul Stevens, Sandra Day O'Connor and Antonin Scalia joined White's Justices William J. Brennan, Thurgood Marshall and Harry A. Blackmun dissented.

Writing for the three, Brennan said the court was giving too much deference to school officials.

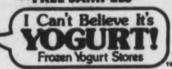

In other decisions, the court: ■ Upheld by a 4-4 vote a New York City affirmative action plan designed to promote more blacks and Hispanics within the city's police department. Ruled unanimously in a case from Alabama that federal officials are not entitled to blanket immunity from being sued when accused of causing personal injuries.

■ Upheld, 5-3, the death sentence of a convicted Louisiana murderer in a ruling that gives states more leeway in determining which murderers should be executed.

For incorporated papers, including the Collegian, Adams foresees no censorship problems.

"I don't see this fundamentally changing the Collegian," he said. "I do see the possibility of more schools incorporating to insulate against the administration.'

For those collegiate papers still published by their universities, he cautioned that censorship could be on the horizon.

Adams believes Wednesday's decision changes the fundamental role of the adviser, who may now take on more of a censorship role. In addition, the school newspaper may be susceptible to censorship simply if it reports on controversial issues, he

When contacted by the Collegian Wednesday afternoon, Cathy Kuhlmeier, then-editor of the Spectrum who was one of three plaintiffs bringing the suit against the school district in 1983, had only one comment. "The only thing I can really say is nor is my lawyer," Kuhlmeier said. June Lyle, editor of the Mentor, Manhattan High School's student newspaper, has followed the case since the Court began reviewing it.

I'm not happy with (the decision),

In addition, she said, the title of school is more appropriate because of the department's role in the University.

"It's an indication of professionalism," Oukrop said. "We have an assumed duty in regard to placement" of JMC graduates.

According to the proposal, 'School status is appropriate because the nature of the JMC department's total program sets it apart from other units within the college." Those differences include:

JMC students are in curriculum tracks that prepare them for entry into professional positions. Accreditation is approved by professionals from both academic and media industry organizations. Most student hours generated by JMC faculty are accounted for by

JMC students. "Our courses are designed for our majors - not that we don't have courses of value for non-majors," Oukrop said.

However, the department and its curriculum prepare its graduates to enter the professional world of mass communications, Oukrop said.

Other considerations outlined in the proposal are that K-State is one of only two journalism programs in the Big Eight that doesn't carry the title of school, and the size and complexity of its programs warrant the change in status. Although Iowa State University's program doesn't carry the title of school, the department has taken steps to become a school within the College of Agriculture.

Nadira Hazim has fit into the Lady Cat lineup very well. She is second on the team in scoring and is first in free throw percentage.

Freshman key

Hazim adjusts

By Russ Ewy Sports Writer

One would think the transition from high school basketball to major college basketball would be a gradual process, but for Lady Cat freshman guard Nadira Hazim it has been swift.

After starting in 10 of K-State's' 13 games this season and averaging 23.2 minutes of playing time, Hazim is being groomed into a solid all-around player for the Lady

"Nadira is still learning. It is the first time that she has played at this level and she is going to be an even better basketball player as time goes on," said Lady Cat Coach Matilda Mossman. "She makes some mistakes, but she makes a lot of things happen and I think if you look at the number of things she makes happen, it far outweighs the mistakes that she makes.

"Right now, she is still having to think more than react, and we want to get her to a position where she can just react all the time instead of think about what she should or shouldn't do," Mossman said. "Once she gets some more experience and learns more about what we expect of her and learns more about what her role is, I think that she is going to be an even better player.

Hazim did not expect to become a member of the top five so early in the season and her career.

"When I started my first game I was kind of surprised, but when I kept starting I felt like I was part of the team," Hazim said. "It's kind of a change, because when I came here I didn't think I would be playing as much, but when I got here I found out that I would be playing a lot which really boosted my confidence."

The 5-foot-8 former Topeka West high school standout has also boosted her contributions to the Lady Cats.

"She's fitting very well into our program," Mossman said. "She is second on our team in scoring, she's in the top three on our team in steals and rebounds and she's leading our team in freethrow percentage. She's in our top three in just about every catagory.'

Hazim also holds individual single game highs in scoring (25 points), freethrows made (11) and

"I've just been out there playing, because I like to win," Hazim said. "I just go out there and play and try to do my part. I guess the rebounds and all that stuff just comes with it."

"She is getting an education every time we step out on the floor," Mossman said. "She wants to get better and I think that's the 'Nadira is very hard on herself. She wants to be a complete player. She wants to do the right things all the time and sometimes she's her own worst enemy because she expects herself to do the right thing every time and it's just not going to happen that way at this level for such a young player," Mossman

A hard-work ethic has followed the all-state, all-league, all-city and National Youth Foundation All-American basketball player to K-State, where she continues to strive for excellence.

"I have to work a lot harder here," she said. "In high school, you just don't have to work as hard because of the competiton. But when you go to college everybody is good and you have to work a lot harder to prove how good you really are."

Natural athletic ability is also a key to Hazim's performances.

"I think that her quickness and her speed and her athletic ability are some intangibles that we can't teach," Mossman said. "For instance, in the Oklahoma State game, as soon as she went into the game she had a steal. It's things like that which set her apart from some other players."

Along with playing well as an individual, Hazim also expects the team to come together as the season

"We're playing good together, I think, but since most of us haven't played together that long it has been hard," she said. "I think now that we are all learning how each other plays and what each other is going to do, it's a lot easier. Next year and the year after that, we're going to play a lot better and the more that we're togther, the better we'll be."

In the Lady Cats' game Tuesday against Oklahoma State, Hazim came off the bench to score six points, grab three rebounds, steal the ball twice and get three assists, showing she is a solid team player.

Competitiveness primary element around Big Eight

From Big Eight Service Bureau and Staff

Three Big Eight conference men's basketball teams are ranked in this week's UPI and AP polls. Oklahoma advanced to No. 3 in both polls, despite its Monday loss to Louisiana State. Kansas is ranked No. 6 in both polls, while Iowa State is ranked fourteenth in the AP poll and seventeenth in the UPI's version.

Oklahoma, K-State's opponent Saturday in Ahearn Field House, is averaging 112.9 points per game, while allowing their opponents just 77.6 points. The Sooners, however, have never scored 100 points against the Wildcats.

Dick Vitale, television commentator, recently called Oklahoma Coach Billy Tubbs an offensive genius. Tubbs' response: "He's probably right. But it's kinda like a blind hog will pick up an acorn every now and then. Dick finally stumbled onto something that was right."

Oklahoma's Harvey Grant is proving he's a force to be reckoned with. Through 14 games, Grant is third in the conference in scoring and first in rebounds, averaging 23.4 points and pulling down 12.1 boards per game.

As a team, the Sooners lead the Big Eight in four categories — team offense, free throw percentage (73.8 percent), three-point field goal average (8.6 per game) and rebound average (47.6 per game.)

Kansas Coach Larry Brown is still looking for the right stuff. "You play all these games in hopes of finding out who can play, but you get no consistency," he said. "One kind of kid plays fairly well, and the next night you can't find him. We've got to get down to people we can count on to execute and do the things they're asked to do." Maybe Jayhawk junior Milton Newton will come to Brown's aid. His 21 points against Missouri Saturday helped spark KU's 74-68 vic-

"He's (Milt) waited his turn," Brown said. "I'm probably the guy who doesn't realize what he's capable of doing. He's got some confidence, and he'll get better."

"I was nervous and couldn't sleep at all (the night before the game," Newton said. "I was looking at (Missouri's stats and tried to concentrate on stopping my man."

However, Brown will still have to struggle with personel woes, as junior Marvin Branch is lost for the rest of the season due to academic ineligibility, senior Archie Marshall is out with a season-ending knee injury and sophomore Keith Harris is still trying to get out of the doghouse.

Meanwhile, Danny Manning continues to lead the Jayhawk's attack. Manning is fourth in the Big Eight in scoring (23.2 ppg), second in field goal percentage (60.8 percent) and second in blocked shots (1.9 per

Big Eight Happenings

Iowa State has come to the front as a potential challenger for the Big Eight title. The Cyclones are second in scoring, averaging 92.8 points per

'We're not big, but when we're fired up and intense, sometimes we can play awfully well," Orr said. "Like we beat Purdue at Purdue, that's leading the Big Ten. We beat New Mexico, that's leading the WAC. We beat Arizona State, that's leading the Pac 10. And it seems like we've been playing for two years and we haven't even started the Conference yet. But when we get it going we're pretty good. And we can be awfully bad, too."

The Cyclones, however, are last in the Big Eight in bench scoring, averaging 15.4 points off the pine. Anyone who witnessed ISU's game against Purdue shouldn't be surprised by this, as the five Cyclone starters played practically the entire Elsewhere, the Big Eight/Raycom Sports Network has two games slated for Saturday. Missouri will play at Nebraska at 1:10 p.m., followed by Colorado at Oklahoma State.

Popular McCoy loves Ahearn crowd, enthusiasm afternoon to sit down and chat with a fellow reporter and Wildcat center Fred McCoy.

Not that I'm in the habit of skipping classes (after all, that's not a good practice for a grad student pursuing a master's), but I truly enjoyed my 30 minutes with Fred. And — based on crowd response thus far this season — the fans are truly enjoying their 40-minute opportunities once or twice a week, as well, watching Fred perform.

As he flashed an innocent grin before answering a question about what fan support in Ahearn Field House has meant to him, McCoy gave away the secret behind the love affair K-State students have with him: he's one of them, just an average guy out to have a little fun. "I'm not really different than any of the rest of the guys," he said. "We

I skipped my first class yesterday just like to go out and have fun. It's great to be here. I love the Ahearn crowd and have never played in a place with this much enthusiasm."

Anyone who's ever seen McCoy throw up an off-balance shot while falling sideways to the floor knows that he doesn't have the fluidity and grace of Mitch Richmond, the brute power of Charles Bledsoe or the silky smooth shooting form of Will Scott.

What McCoy does have in abundance, however, is desire. And that's where the home crowd - or any crowd for that matter - likely kicks

McCoy, like most athletes, is constantly seeking some degree of consistency in his game. The ability to put together back-to-back consistent performances is tough in any calling, let alone one where there are others trying to make sure you have no chance of succeeding.

Svoboda on Sports

DAVID SVOBODA Sports

Having the support of the fans helps adrenaline start to flow and increases concentration and intensity, and once that adrenaline gets to flowing inside an athlete like

McCoy, Katie bar the door. "I think I'm capable of doing the things we need to have done at any point in the game," he said. "If I just put my mind to it and get in the flow, I'll be all right."

Fans that remember the McCoy

they saw before the break will likely be astounded at the one they see Saturday in Ahearn lining up against the Oklahoma Sooners.

McCoy spent his first few weeks as a Wildcat - by his own admission about 10 to 15 pounds overweight. He's now down to 225 pounds, and the lack of the extra weight has increased his quickness on both the offensive and defensive ends of the floor. Witness the 26 points and 16 rebounds he had Monday in a 91-89 overtime loss to Southern Mississippi.

Also, there will be no need to chant McCoy's name to get Coach Lon Kruger to put him in the lineup. If you're not asleep or unconscious, chances are you'll notice the Big Eight's leader in field goal percentage (64.8) has made his way into the starting five, having replaced Ron Meyer as the starter at center three games ago during a win over Utah State.

"My weight is right now, and Charles and I just need to rebound and stay active," McCoy said. "We just have to get this thing turned around."

McCoy, you see, has never played on a team — in high school or junior college — that won less than 20 games. With a 7-4 record heading into Saturday's game with Oklahoma, McCoy and mates would have to pick up 13 wins in the final 16 games of the regular season to reach that mark, unless the team reaches postseason play and the chances to reach that plateau increase.

That's why there was an urgency in McCoy's voice when he talked of the game against Oklahoma. The normally relaxed Washington, D.C., native turned suddenly serious when talking about the Sooners.

"I'm looking forward to trying to get this thing turned around," he said. This can be the game that gets us over the hump. I think we can play on their level. I've heard about them and I'm really excited about playing them."

He's excited about playing Oklahoma, not intimidated. Stacey King, who averages just over 18 points a game, will be the Sooner forced to bang heads with McCoy on Saturday, and I wish him good luck.

Oklahoma may be ranked third in the country and may be 14-1, but the Sooners don't have Fred McCoy on their side. He may not have the prettiest game K-State fans have ever witnessed, but chances are Fred will have 'em talking about him again Saturday night.

And talking with a wide grin just like Fred's.

standards Division I waives

By The Associated Press

NASHVILLE, Tenn. - NCAA Division I schools decided Wednesday not to institute the stricter athletic eligibility standards that had been approved just hours earlier.

School representatives turned down the proposal by a 162-143 vote after approving it 163-151 earlier in the day. Division II schools, which generally have smaller athletic programs than Division I schools, approved the measure both times. The "satisfactory progress rule" sets uniform grade-point standards for eligibility. Effective Aug. 1, 1989, Division II athletes will need a 1.6 cumulative grade-point, based on a 4.0 scale, after their first season of competition to remain eligible. The standard increases to 1.8 after the second season and 2.0 after the third.

A chief argument against the rule was that different schools have different grading standards.

NCAA Notes

Vanderbilt Athletic Director Roy Kramer told delegates to the NCAA Convention that the higher grade requirements would cause more athletes to major in "tourism and Canadian fly fishing." tive from Michigan State, was a strong supporter of the rule.

"This makes me even prouder to be from the Big Ten," she said. "You'd have to say there are pockets of institutions that just do not want to upgrade their academic standards." She declined to identify those schools.

The Big Ten is the only major Division I conference with requirements similar to those adopted by the Division II schools Wednesday, Big Ten athletes must have a 1.8 cumulative grade point after their first year of competition, stepping up in succeeding seasons to 1.9 and 2.0.

Big Eight Commissioner Carl Gwen Norrell, faculty representa- James opposed the uniform grade requirements.

Cheerleaders fare

By The Collegian Staff

K-State's cheerleading squad returned late Tuesday night from the Cheerleading National Champ-ionship without an award, but with a good feeling and positive feed-

"We weren't in the top three, but a lot of people thought we did really well," said Scott Johnson, cheerading sponsor.

The squad competed against 19 other college aquads Saturday at Sea World in San Diego, An awards reception was held Sunday evening, and Johnson said the day to sight-see and relax.

The University of Kentucky was awarded first place in the competi-tion for the second consecutive year. The University of Alabama received second place, while North Carolina State finished in third selected for the competition.

K-State was chosen from a field of over 200 entries to be one of 20

K-State participated in the competition in 1986, but Johnson said its 1988 performance exceeded its previous one. "This time, things went a lot bet-squad elected to stay through Mon-ter for us," he said. "We saw lots of good competition, and even though we didn't place in the top three, the feeling was that maybe we were number four."

Johnson said the competition, co-sponsored by Holiday Inn and Coca-Cola, will be broadcast later this month on ESPN.

The annual competition is in its sixth year and showcases the most outstanding cheerleading squads in the United States based on eathusiasm, timing, rhythm, athletic ability and crowd response

K-State was the only Big Eight Conference squad to compete.

Reagan, prime minister agree on plan to help trade market

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - President Reagan and Japanese Prime Minister Noboru Takeshita vowed Wednesday to continue to work toward easing trade frictions, but they apparently failed to nail down an agreement on the thorny issue of U.S. work on Japanese construction projects.

At the same time, the two leaders also sought to reassure shaky financial markets with a joint statement hinting that fresh resources would be made available for the Federal Reserve System to intervene in currency markets in support of the battered U.S. dollar.

The statement, issued as the dollar was again declining on foreign exchange markets worldwide, declared that the United States and Japan "have developed arrangements to assure the adequacy of resources for their cooperative efforts" in the markets.

Meanwhile, Takeshita said his government was taking steps to stimulate economic growth and hoped to be able to reduce Japan's trade surplus by $10 billion this year.

Room after the summit session, said he was hopeful for a "mutually satisfactory solution on the pending issue of access to major Japanese public

However, administration officials were less optimistic about a new Japanese plan to give U.S. construction companies more access to Japanese projects after the Reagan-Takeshita session than they had been

A senior official, who briefed reporters on condition of anonymity, said the Japanese overture was only "a framework. It doesn't itself resolve all the problems that are involved.'

The projects involved are expected to total up to $60 billion over the next 10 years. U.S. officials said the plan includes joint ventures between American and Japanese companies.

It was the first meeting between the two leaders since Takeshita took office in November.

Standing alongside the new Japan-Reagan said, "I found that our views 5.3 percent this year.

Takeshita, in remarks in the East on international questions coincide to a remarkable degree."

"We discussed the vital issues of the day and established an excellent personal rapport," he said.

Administration officials had expressed hope before the meeting that the president would develop the same warm relationship with the 63-year-old Takeshita that he had with former Prime Minister Yasuhiro

Takeshita called the meeting "cordial and candid."

In other U.S.-Japanese agreements Wednesday:

■ Both leaders pledged continued support for the Philippine government of Corazon Aquino.

Reagan indicated his administration would proceed with a nuclear cooperation agreement with Japan despite congressional objections. The agreement will give Japan a 30-year right to recover plutonium from spent nuclear fuel from U.S. power reactors.

Reagan praised Tokyo's decision to increase its share of supporte leader at a departure ceremony, ing U.S. forces stationed in Japan by

Senate chair relates goals

By Jeff Schrag Collegian Reporter

Improving the efficiency of Student Senate's operations and its communication with the student body are Senate Chairman Doug Folk's main goals this semester.

"I guess I think like an engineer. I'm just trying to improve the overall efficiency of the organization," said Folk, senior in electrical engineering. He officially begins his term as Senate chairman Jan. 21.

Improving Senate's overall efficiency will initially involve moving work away from the Senate floor and into the committee chambers, Folk said.

He said many of the at-large committee members (those who are not senators) wonder why they were chosen, because they're not given any

This plan will not only boost their morale, but will also improve efficiency by reducing the detail work the whole assembly must engage in, Folk said.

Further plans entail changing the procedure by which Senate bills and resolutions are announced, Folk said. In the future, pieces of legislation under consideration, along with a short explanation and the names of the sponsors, will be posted in the Student Governing Association office. Therefore, more questions can be answered before the Senate meeting, saving time during actual deliberation.

Folk's other goal during his yearcommunication between senators on their own major projects. and the student body.

"We elect senators on the basis of college because everyone belongs to one," he said. "But then we turn around and only conduct senator visitations to the living groups. This leaves a big chunk of students uncovered."

Folk plans to redesign the visitation program so senators will speak to clubs and honor societies within each of the colleges. Arranging visitations in this manner will not only reach a greater number of students, but will also increase student input, because the visitations provide an atmosphere more conducive to the flow of ideas, he said.

In addition to his plans, Folk said long term is to improve two-way three Senate committees are working

> The Academic Affairs and University Relations Committee will center its efforts on two areas: enlisting the help of the Alumni Association in completing a promotional K-State "Brag Book" and seeking information concerning alternative sources of funding for the K-State libraries.

The Legislative Affairs Committee will do research on the Board of Regents proposals for qualified admissions and the "Margin of Excellence," with the full Senate possibly taking a stand on these issues later in the semester.

"We continue to believe the targeted investments (including funds for mission-related program enhancements) in the Margin of Excellence are critical for K-State to continue to fulfill its mission and to advance economic development in Kansas," Wefald said. Spending proposals for MOE funds at K-State include:

Agricultural research to assist in Kansas' economic development and establish communications links between K-State and the private sector.

Improvement of lower division instruction with the establishment of basic skills laboratories, personalizsocial science instruction, expanding student options and improving curriculum depth.

 Library enhancements. ■ Improving academic comput-

Conducting outreach to professional groups via the Kansas City Architecture Center.

■ Use of the Center for Science Education to strengthen science instruction in Kansas secondary

"A key thing is that the students have really gotten behind this program," Lubbers said. "We have acknowledged we are going to pay higher tuition, but we are willing to pay a higher tuition if it will be matched by the state and there is an increase in the quality of education.

"We pay about the same tuition as peer universities, but tuition has gone up 56 percent in five years, while the state has only kicked in 17 percent in that same five years," he said.

Preliminary enrollment figures increase 793

By Karen Allen Staff Writer

If preliminary figures are an accurate indicator, K-State's spring enrollment could be the highest it has been in six years.

"Based upon the historical pattern of final enrollment figures in comparison to the preliminary count, we now anticipate a final spring enrollment of more than 18,400 students," said Robert Krause, vice president for enrolled for on-campus courses, an increase institutional advancement. "This total would be larger than our 1987-88 fall enrollment of from spring 1987. 18,048 and would be the largest spring

Based on preliminary figures, increased enrollments are expected in all of the University's colleges and in all classes except fifth-

"Last spring, we felt we saw signs indicating that K-State had stabilized its enroll-The final figure will be calculated on the ment," Krause said. "As we look at the patfigures, it is now apparent that we are moving into a definite growth period in our enrollments."

Aggressive recruitment and increased retention efforts are two reasons for the enrollment increase, said Pat Bosco, associate vice president for institutional advancement and dean of student life.

"The spring semester is usually more of a reflection on combined recruitment and retention efforts," he said.

Krause agreed that improved retention has played a part in the enrollment upswing.

"While efforts to attract students have played a significant role in this change, our data indicates that the efforts at improving retention of currently enrolled students is really paying off," he said. "This is directly attributable to the faculty and staff who have made a concerted effort to improve the student experience within and outside of the classroom."

Bork resigns position to answer allegations

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Robert H. Bork resigned as a federal appeals court judge, saying he wants to correct "a public campaign of miseducation" that thwarted his nomination to the Supreme Court, the White House announced Thursday.

President Reagan reluctantly accepted Bork's request to step down from the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia after six years, effective Feb. 5. He called the conservative judge's defeat in the Senate "a tragedy for our country."

All Americans are the poorer today for not having your extraordinary talents and legal skills on the high court," Reagan told Bork in a letter.

There had been hints in recents weeks that Bork was ready to shed his judicial robe in favor of a public speaking campaign to answer accusations of philosophical extremism raised against him during his confirmation battle last summer and fall.

Bork's decision was made public in an exchange of letters, released by the White House, between the judge and Reagan. Bork's resignation letter was dated Jan. 7, and the president's acceptance was dated Thursday.

As Bork made known his plans to commence a campaign "to speak, write and teach" about law and about the judgeship confirmation process, both he and Reagan reiterated their views that the process has become too politicized.

The 60-year-old Bork, a longtime faculty member at Yale Law School, first came to national attention in the 1973 "Saturday Night Massacre" during the Watergate scandal.

As U.S. solicitor general, he agreed to fire special prosecutor Archibald Cox after Attorney General Elliot Richardson and Deputy Attorney General William Ruckelshaus had resigned, refusing to comply with then-President Nixon's Bork's nomination encountered fierce opposition from a wide variety of liberal interest groups almost the very moment that Reagan chose him last July 1 to succeed the retiring Justice Lewis F. Powell Jr. on the Students, patients to foot bill for salary increases

By Erwin Seba Government Editor

TOPEKA - Patients at the University of Kansas Medical Center and students at the six state universities will pay for faculty salary increases proposed by Gov. Mike Hayden, according to a report made to the Kansas Board of Regents Thursday.

The report, an analysis of Hayden's budget recommendation to the Kansas Legislature, showed that 59 percent of the proposed Margin of Excellence increase in the regents' budget will come from the University of Kansas Medical Center in Kansas City, Kan.

K-State faculty applaud proposal/Page 5

The regents, in their budget request to Hayden, proposed medical center revenues comprise 31 percent of the regents' budget increase. Regents' Executive Director Stanley Koplik said the increase was realistic as long as the patient usage projection for the facility holds true.

By Jeffrey J. Bielser News Editor

When it comes time to donate to their alma mater, all alumni are not created equal.

The College of Engineering, especially, knows this is true. Although the percentage of engineering graduates donating money is smaller than some other groups, they are digging deeper than any other former K-Staters when it comes to donating to their college.

According to statistics from the KSU Foundation, the College of Engineering had the third-highest percentage of graduates donating money to the college. However, those graduates have given the greatest dollar amount of any alumni group - more than $1.1 million.

Leading the list in percentage of alumni donating funds was the College of Veterinary Medicine with 30.7 percent and the College of Business Administration with 27.3 percent. Dollar amounts were $247,241 and $434,955, respectively.

The KSU Foundation coordinates all private and most corporate fund raising for the University, said Rusty Andrews, director of communications and annual giving for the Foundation. These activities include such drives as Telefund or soliciting for corporate donations.

Tied for fourth- and fifth-highest percentage of alumni giving money were the colleges of Human Ecology and Agriculture with 26.3 percent -$904,127 and $393,383, respectively. Others were the College of Architecture and Design with 25.1 percent ($54,037), the College of Arts and Sciences with 21.9 percent ($633,265), and the College of Education with 20.8 percent ($139,868).

All fund-raising activities by the Foundation are for departments or colleges and not grants for specific projects, Andrews said.

In the Big Eight Conference, K-State ranks No. 1 in the overall percentage of graduates giving money back to the school with 25.7 percent, which is more than 10 percent higher than the national average for statesupported schools of similar size. "It's vitally important we have as great a percentage as possible of alumni giving," Andrews said.

By far, the Telefund contacts and brings in the greatest number of donors. The drive garnered $424,000 school and in turn keeps in touch after volunteers talked to more than 13,000 alumni last year, he said. This year's Telefund starts Feb. 1.

Andrews said the trends reflected in last fiscal year's amounts are about normal, although the College of Engineering has been No. 1 in the past in both percentage of alumni and dollar amount given.

The high turnout for veterinary medicine alumni can be credited to the close contact the college keeps with its graduates, he said.

"We have a very close, strong support from alumni," said Jacob Mosier, professor of veterinary medicine who helps coordinate fundraising in veterinary medicine.

"We're a very small group." Each graduating class has a member who helps solicit funds for the college and University, Mosier said. That member is in contact with the with fellow classmates.

Also, the college has attempted to organize the classes and achieve class goals for donations, Mosier

One plan is a "Who's Who" type of record for veterinary medicine alumni, he said. The college tries to persuade everyone they should be in it so class members can keep track of one another.

"We can personalize any attempt in contributing to our program" using the who's who approach, Mosier Giving fund-raising a personal touch is also being employed in the College of Business Administration.

"What we're working hard at is gaining the trust of people who are giving," said Randolph Pohlman, dean of the college.

AIDS carrier guilty of murder

LAFAYETTE, Ind. - A 33-year-old man afflicted with an AIDS-related disease was convicted Thursday of three counts of attempted murder for biting and scratching three rescue workers who responded to his suicide attempt.

A Tippecanoe Superior Court jury deliberated two hours before finding Donald J. Haines guilty of trying to infect a police officer and two medical personnel with his AIDS-tainted blood.

Public defender George Wilder said he did not know whether he would appeal.

Tippecanoe County Prosecutor John Meyers, who had called Haines "a loaded gun," said the verdict was good news for police, paramedics and other rescue workers who are exposed to people suffering from acquired immune deficiency syndrome and other infectious diseases.

Haines slit his wrists Aug. 8. When Lafayette patrolman John Dennis and paramedics Daniel Garvey and Rodney Jewell responded to help him, he allegedly attacked them and tried to spray them with his tainted blood.

Special Judge Vincent Grogg of Fountain Circuit Court set sentencing for Feb. 25. Haines faces a possible sentence of 30-60 years and a $10,000 fine on each count.

Cause of crash not revealed

WASHINGTON - Pilots of Continental Flight 1713 had no clue of a problem as their DC-9 raced, apparently at proper speed, down the slushy runway at Denver's airport and began climbing routinely last November.

But within seconds came the sound of a stalling engine, an expletive, a bang, more engine stalling and impact, according to documents released by government investigators Thursday.

The sequence from first sign of trouble to impact with the ground covered only 4.3 seconds.

The documents, including a transcript of a cockpit tape, provided no evidence that would point directly at the cause of the Nov. 15 crash that killed 28 of the 82 people aboard the flight that had been bound for Boise, Idaho. A National Transportation Safety Board spokesman emphasized that the investigation has yet to determine whether the apparent engine stall caused the crash or whether the stall itself was the result of other factors that already may have caused the plane to lose its proper aerodynamics.

Iranians greet crew, then attack

MANAMA, Bahrain - An Iranian warship radioed "happy voyage" to a Dutch-owned tanker, then blasted it for an hour with machine guns, cannon and rocket-propelled grenades on Thursday, injuring two people, crewmen said.

The dawn attack on the 35,731-ton Petrobulk Pioneer was Iran's first shipping strike of the year. It apparently was in retaliation for Iraqi raids this week on Iranian oil traffic that broke a nine-day calm in the Persian Gulf.

Iraq claimed later Thursday its aircraft hit a large vessel off the Iranian coast at 9:20 p.m. The planes returned safely to base, according to the Iraqi News Agency, monitored by the British Broadcasting Corp. in London.

Pipe punctures man's skull

CHICAGO - A construction worker who fell 15 feet onto a 4-foot metal pipe that punched through his skull was in critical condition Thursday after surgeons removed the pipe and about 10 percent of his brain, doctors said.

William Walker, 47, "is still critical. He's sleepy" and breathing through a tube, said Dr. James L. Stone, acting chief of neurosurgery at Cook County Hospital.

"He's lost a lot of blood, and he's had some problem with blood clotting," Stone said.

"He's not out of the woods yet."

The half-inch wide pipe was removed from Walker's head in a seven-hour operation Wednesday afternoon, and he underwent additional surgery Thursday to repair the wound. A tube was inserted to monitor brain activity.

Stone said it was too early to assess the long-term effects of Walker fell 15 feet off a beam and landed on the electrical conduit as he was working at the site of a building to be used as an addition to the University of Illinois steam plant, said Fire Department spokesman Jerry Lawrence.

"We took him right to the hospital's trauma unit, and the surgeons asked us to cut the pipe down some," said firefighter Clarence Norwood.

"He came to us with about two or three feet of pipe coming out of his neck and six inches coming out of the top of his head," Stone said.

Two triplets survive first day

LOS ANGELES - One of the world's first triplets born from frozen embryos died Thursday, but the other two were in stable but guarded condition at an undisclosed hospital, a spokeswoman said.

Doctors had not released an official cause of death of the 2-pound, 4-ounce girl by midafternoon, but the children were 21/2 months premature, said Gwen Young, a spokeswoman for California Medical Center.

The medical center's California Reproductive Health Institute arranged the in vitro fertilization of the mother, a 35-year-old Southern California woman who had asked not to be identified. Doctors said Wednesday that she was in good condition. Young had no update on the mother Thursday.

The triplets were born Wednesday morning. The two surviving infants, identical twin boys, were in incubators Thursday, breathing with the help of respirators and in stable but guarded condition, Young said. One boy weighed 1 pound, 14 ounces, and the other 2 pounds, 3 ounces.

Book highlights lecture series

A 359-page book commemorating the first 20 years of the Landon Lecture Series on Public Issues will arrive soon on campus. "The Landon Lectures: Perspectives From the First Twenty Years" contains speeches of 22 notable speakers, including President Reagan, former Presidents Nixon and Ford, former Vice President Hubert Humphrey, U.S. Sen. Robert Kennedy, Saudi Arabian Oil Minister Ahmed Zaki Yamani, former Speaker of the House Thomas P. "Tip" O'Neill and Salvadoran President Jose Napoleon Duarte.

The book, which is expected to arrive on campus Monday, is the second book published by The Friends of KSU Libraries, a University and community support group of the libraries. The 51/2 by 81/2 inch book contains photographs from University archives depicting the 22 speakers while they were on campus. A limited number of copies of the book will be available for sale to the public, and those interested should contact Virginia Quiring, associate dean of libraries, at 532-6516.

JERUSALEM - Israeli authorities detained 10 Palestinians in the occupied territories Thursday, apparently on suspicion of inciting resistance to Israeli rule. Seven were released later, two of them on bail.

A 30-year-old Palestinian was fatally shot at an army firing range 10 miles southeast of Bethlehem and an investigation was under way, army spokesmen said. According to U.N. figures, at least 35 Palestinians have been killed since unrest began Dec. 8 in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Palestine Liberation Organization chief Yasser Arafat said in Baghdad he would recognize Israel's right to exist, by accepting the appropriate U.N. resolutions, if it and the United States accept PLO participation in an international conference on Middle East peace.

Arafat, in an interview with The Associated Press, also said the "uprising" in the occupied territories demonstrates the Palestinian will for an end to the occupation.

The Lebanese army delivered four Arabs expelled from the occupied territories to a Marxist faction of Palestinian guerrillas in south Lebanon.

In New York, the U.N. Security Council demanded that Israel let the four men return. The resolution passed 14-0, with the United States abstaining.

Six journalists in Arab east Jerusalem were among those rounded up Thursday, including Hanna Siniora, editor of the newspaper Al Fajr, who has called for mass civil disobedience against the Israeli occupation.

The other four were doctors and Thursday. lawyers.

Siniora said his detention prevented a planned meeting with U.N. envoy Marrack Goulding, who is touring the West Bank and Gaza for a report to the Security Council on the living conditions of Palestinian refugees.

Israel captured the territories, where 1.5 million Palestinians live, from Jordan and Egypt in the 1967 Middle East war.

Goulding visited the Dheishe refugee camp Thursday and told Mayor Elias Freij of nearby Bethlehem he was "appalled" by the conditions, the Christian Arab mayor told The Associated Press.

Paul Hunt of Amnesty International, the London-based human rights organization, also began a factfinding mission in Gaza on

Mary Sedor, an AP reporter, saw Israeli soldiers in Gaza turn away a U.N. truck carrying bread, fruit and vegetables for 3,000 children in the Jabaliya camp. The army confirmed the truck was stopped, citing a 6-dayold curfew that prohibits anyone from entering Jabaliya.

At the nearby Beach refugee camp, a U.N. truck was allowed in but children could not be fed because of curfew rules, said Angela Williams of the U.N. relief agency.

Siniora once was identified as a moderate acceptable to Israel as a Palestinian delegate to Middle East peace talks, but he has been questioned twice in six days since urging civil disobedience.

He said police questioned him for six hours Thursday on suspicion of endorsing terrorism against Israel and organizing an unlawful assembly, then released him on bail of about $1,300. Siniora said the unlawful assembly apparently was a news conference.

"This is a continuation of the same repressive measures the Israelis have been using over the last five weeks," he declared. "But it will backfire. It just adds fuel to the fire of the uprising.

"What I'm doing is not secretive. It's in the public knowledge.

"What was announced was not to buy Israeli cigarettes. What has happened on the ground is that Jerusalem has been under total strike. This shows you...the population is fed up with the situation. The population is ready to pay with their lives."

Ibrahim Karaeen, whose Palestine Press Service monitors events in the occupied territories, was detained at a news conference and later released on bail of about $650.

Karaeen said police questioned him about organizing an illegal meeting - an apparent reference to the news conference - at which Palestinians presented a 14-point list of demands.

"Israeli policy is bankrupt to the point where it doesn't differentiate between a public meeting and a news conference," he told the AP.

Bush wins Michigan caucuses; walkouts prevail at meetings

By The Associated Press

DETROIT - George Bush, storming back from early setbacks, defeated a coalition of conservative opponents Thursday night in bitterly contested Michigan caucuses that set the stage for selection of the first Republican presidential nominating delegates.

The meetings were marked by widespread walkouts, chiefly by supporters of former television evangelist Pat Robertson and Rep. Jack Kemp, who maneuvered to challenge the vice president's victory.

The frustration of the Robertson campaign was obvious; until federal and state judges backed Bush over Robertson in a fight to tailor party rules, Robertson had expected to dominate the Michigan county meetings.

In protest of one rule or another, delegates walked out of at least 21 county caucuses. Many Robertson-Kemp backers held rump meetings to elect competing slates that will lead to widespread challenges that might not be settled until the national convention next August.

In the meetings where walkouts occurred, 342 delegates were elected, 272 of them backing Bush.

Based on complete returns from 88 percent of the 124 caucuses, Bush had won 834 delegates to the state convention, about 64 percent of those chosen. Robertson and Kemp were battling for second - with Robertson holding 203 delegates and Kemp 202 delegates for 16 percent Supporters of Sen. Bob Dole collected 4 percent of the 1,805 seats being filled Thursday.

The Michigan GOP's complex multi-tiered system made it impossible to use the outcome of the county conventions to project how many of Michigan's 77 national convention delegates each candidate would win at the state convention on Jan. 29 and

Three of the six Republican candidates - Dole, Pete du Pont and Alexander Haig - were content to sit out Michigan .

Mishaps at Wolf Creek require study, answers

It's a disgrace.

Nuclear Regulatory Commission has inspected the Wolf Creek nuclear power plant near Burlington five times because of accidents. Last week, the verdict was issued: There has been a lack of supervision of employees. Management did not require workers to strictly follow procedures required by the NRC, the report concluded.

The string of accidents ran as

■ In September, the plant automatically shut itself down because of employee error.

On Oct. 10, two workers were fixing a clogged hose when they accidentally sprayed radioactive material on themselves. The spill went unreported for three hours as the workers attempted to clean up the mess. Later, Wolf Creek employees underestimated the amount of radiation the workers were exposed issued a violation.

Around Oct. 15, radioactive trash from the plant was accidentally sent to the Coffey County Landfill twice in one week. Officials said the incident was "just a mistake." Another violation was issued.

■ In mid-November, plant officials discovered that workers repairing pipes were not qualified for the job. The workers had been using the wrong material and in some instances, had made the repairs

As violations continue to stack up, so do questions about the competency of Wolf Creek officials and of the NRC itself. The slap-on-the-hand violations appear to have little, if any, effect on safety at the plant. And as long as the NRC continues to look the other way, nothing is going to ty at the regents schools should be given a raise. The Margin of Excellence program, which would raise the salaries, has been endorsed by the Kansas Bankers Association, the Livestock Association, the Chamber of Commerce and the media. Since the State of the State address Tuesday, Gov. Mike Hayden has joined the campaign. Now it is time for the Legislature to enact it.

The Hayden plan allocates $41.3 million toward faculty salaries. The average K-State salary now is about $32,000 a year — one of the lowest of all land grant institutions in the schools, but are schools like Colornation. K-State salaries would increase 7.9 percent under the plan.

Not only do K-State faculty leave for more money, but departments are Almost everyone agrees the facul- finding it difficult to recruit faculty when other schools are offering better salaries. For instance, two prospective professors were taken out of contention when they took jobs offering $7,000 to $12,000 more than K-State could promise.

> The Legislature must realize the program is only a "catch-up" measure and not a "do-it-all" tool. If the governer's recommendation is fully funded, it would only bring the salaries up to 95 percent of the peer institution average.

These institutions are not the academically acclaimed Ivy League ado State and Iowa State. It is discouraging to think the $41 million program would only bring K-State salaries to 95 percent of the average.

ppression alive in U.S. but anesthetization. The travail of poverty-The PBS recently televised a series called Commentary

"Eyes on the Prize," narrating the early years of the American civil rights movement. The book by the same title is dedicated to those who died as a result of the struggle. It is also dedicated to the people of South Africa, that they might "come to know that no man is free until all men are free."

The dedication is further evidence that apartheid has become the flagship issue for those who have inherited the black martyr's legacy. This is laudable, but I also fear that emphasis on South Africa is a sign of despair about the state of black people in America, and a postponement of confessing personal responsibility for racism.

If Martin Luther King was alive today, he would, no doubt, be at the side of Desmond Tutu, decrying the injustice of apartheid. Yet, I believe King would not presume that America is in the moral position to export racial platitudes. American blacks are beseiged by poverty, unemployment, family dissolution and Howard Beach thugs. King's dream is still but a dream.

Prior to 1865, racism was so bold as to walk openly about as slavery. Oppression was easily identifiable. The era, forced to a crisis by the abolitionists, ended symbolically with the Emancipation Proclamation. One hundred years later, however, King would stand on the steps of the Lincoln Memorial and proclaim, "the Negro is still not free."

The issue of King's era was segregation. Racism was visible, portrayed in lynchings and "white only" signs. The civil rights movement brought the issue to a crisis, and the government eventually responded with Supreme Court rulings and the Civil Rights

Twenty-five years later, we must ask, "Is the black now free?" Something in the pit of our stomach says "no." Can a race living inordinately in the cycle of poverty be considered free? Unfortunately, post-1968 racism has become so subtle that the question of freedom is difficult to answer. Of course blacks are free, we can say. They have legal access to all institutions; they sit on the Supreme Court; they run for president. Where then is the oppression? And where are the oppressors? Where are the Simon Lagrees or the Bull Connors? Where can the movement picket? Who can they boycott?

Julian Bond says, "The legacy of slavery, segregation and discrimination continues to press on black America." This sounds as if there were only bugs which must be worked out of a generally-corrected system. Consequently, the headline protests today are directed against such men as Arizona Gov. Evan Mecham or baseball manager Al

In America, despite abolition or the civil rights movement, racial discrimination has not been eradicated; it has only become clever. Allan Bloom in The Closing of the American Mind claims that students today are less prejudiced. Yet, he notes that this is a result of students blurring racial distinctions, just as they have blurred all definitions. This lack of prejudice is not acceptance nor appreciation, stricken blacks is that they are being ignored, not necessarily abused.

The old weapons of the movement are not adequate. For one reason, the new face of racism is economic. To talk about "economic rights," as black leaders have begun to do, is to threaten our dearly held principles of capitalism. The reaction to affirmative action is an allergic one. How can economic oppression be pinpointed when blacks have full legal rights in the market place? Is it merely a matter of enforcement? If "economic rights" were ever established, the disease of racism would merely choose a more subtle

The problem lies deeper than modern society cares to admit. The years since 1968 force us to make a decision between two positions. One position is to say that the black race is inferior and cannot compete even in an atmosphere of full legal freedom. This is essentially the same argument heard during slavery and segregation, and we reject it as hatefully false. The other position is to admit that Mankind is inherently racist. Racism is not an abstract societal ill; it is an individual sin. We must assume the duty ourselves and not blame it on "the system."

Racism is a spiritual problem, linked inexorably with the sin of selfish pride. Unfortunately, it is gauche to talk about sin; it is vogue to talk about South Africa. No one talks, either, about all men being created in the image of God. Is there still the belief that "all men are created equal and endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights?" We may have marched for Selma, or fought for Soweto, but we have surrendered the human

FORGET IT, DICK Machines gain intellect

It all started with adding machines, when multiplying two simple numbers meant manipulating a sequence of levers and/or dials. Ever since then, development in the field of computers has been at a rapid pace.

It was not long ago when computers used vacuum tubes. Also, the memory of punching cards and waiting endlessly for outputs is fresh in most people's minds. Now, we have user-friendly terminals and computers with quick response time. Huge programs run in fractions of a second.

Recently, a new generation of computer programs called knowledge-based systems has been developed. These are based on the principles of another developing field: artificial intelligence. These programs are creating excitement in the academic and industrial communities.

KBS, as the name suggests, are computer systems based on knowledge - and knowledge, author J.R. Harper says, is the only instrument of production that is not subject to the law of diminishing returns. These systems have been developed in fields such as engineering, chemistry, medicine, agriculture and law.

KBS are particularly gaining importance in the field of engineering, where they are being used to consolidate years of engineering expertise via computer. They not only store information like engineering tables and formulas but also employ objectivity. This is a boon, as most engineering design is based on human judgment. With the help of KBS, even young engineers can design as well as the experts, if not better.

In chemistry, KBS - or expert systems, as they are often called - have been used to store and retrieve a plethora of structures and data on chemicals and biochemicals. They have been used to synthesize complex organic molecules, plan complex laboratory experRIZWAN MITHANI Collegian iments and infer molecular structures of unknown compounds.

Columnist

Expert systems are well-suited to situations that are diagnostic in nature. So, they are being applied extensively in the field of medicine. Expert systems assist physicians in diagnosing a myriad of diseases, as well as interpreting laboratory medical tests. There are a large number of KBS being used in the area of cardiac disease (the giant killer of modern times). Some KBS even advise physicians on selection of appropriate therapy for patients with mental disorders.

Do not be surprised if your lawyers use artificial intelligence (instead of their own) to fight your case. A significant number of KBS have been developed in this area to help lawyers perform legal analysis, retrieve information about past court decisions and adjust claims.

Even your banker will soon rely on the objective judgment of an artificial intelligence program, rather than the numbers on your credit history, to predict if you are likely to default on a loan.

At K-State, the chemical engineering department is significantly active in the area of AI applications. This research is mainly carried out by graduate students under the guidance of Professor L.T. Fan, who is also head of the department. The application areas include extruders, separators, fluidized beds, controllers and so forth.

As in any other developing field, the question of the ethical values and reliability of researchers is involved. After all, it is human expertise that is being captured on the computer, and the knowledged engineer (a pretty nifty term) performing the task is likely to falter. If a KBS is used to help build a bridge and this bridge falls down, killing scores of people, who should be blamed? Furthermore, the ethics are extremely important when building medical diagnostic systems. If graduate students write a program to develop such a system and do not check for correctness - for whatever reason - then they should realize they are playing with the lives of innocent To the reader it might appear that AI is likely to replace human intelligence. This is far from true. While human experts are creative in nature, expert systems are uninspired. Humans are adaptive and responsive to changes, whereas computers need to be told everything. Also, humans tend to have a broader focus and a wider perspective, but KBS are narrowly focused - in other words, they are bigoted.

There is an interesting example of an intelligent program written to interpret newspaper headlines. It interpreted the headline "Pope Shot - World Shaken" as "Earthquake Near Italy - One Dead."

Despite the above disadvantages, development of KBS and AI is significantly useful because human beings forget, while computers do not. Also, the expertise stored on the computer will remain intact, even after the human expert is dead and gone.

Artificial intelligence is better than none. This is not a mere cliche. Instead, it is a great Faculty, administration evaluate MOE plan

From Staff and Wire Reports

Governor Mike Hayden's recommendation Tuesday to increase K-State's teaching faculty's salary an average of 7.9 percent was applauded by some faculty members and administrators.

"We had - through the Margin of Excellence campaign — indicated (that) it had been very difficult to retain quality faculty. The Governor may have chosen to address that issue, and did so by targeting the teaching faculty for salary reimbursement," said John Fairman, assistant vice president for institutional advancement.

Hayden recommended a 5 percent base pay increase for all faculty at the six regents universities. In addition, he recommended additional raises for faculty who teach, ranging from 1.6 percent to 4 percent, depending upon their university. Several regents said they wished Hayden would have recomty, such as researchers, librarians, extension agents and administrators.

"In this day and age, they (extension agents) are being called on to do some things, to take on a new role, and at the same time, we're not giving them the same money," said regent Richard Reinhardt.

Fairman agreed with Reinhardt, saying the recommendation could create some

"The Governor's recommendation does seem to set up a two-class system and could create some very strong morale problems,"

Dwayne Schrag, head of the reference unit in Farrell Library, said he did not think the recommendation was fair, especially for those researchers whose efforts attract research dollars.

Members of the state Board of Regents said Thursday they were pleased Hayden recommended raises for teachers at the state's public universities. But, they also mended equal raises for non-teaching facul- expressed concern about funding the

The regents requested the raises as part of a three-year, $47 million Margin of Excellence plan that would bring faculty salaries up to those at peer universities. But Hayden's recommendation will only finance the first year, with teachers' salaries as the top

Several regents also said they were concerned that under Hayden's plan, a greater part of this year's budget would come from revenues from the University of Kansas Medical Center in Kansas City, Kan.

The regents had requested a 5.5 percent increase in money from the state general fund. However, Hayden proposed only a 1.2 percent increase in general fund revenue and a 28.4 percent increase in the money the regents will receive from the hospital's "Margin of Excellence is largely being funded from our internal resources," Regent Richard Dodderidge of Mission Woods said.

"It sounds like a pretty good deal for the state," Dodderidge said. "I just hope it's something we can live with."

As long as the Med Center's census stays high and it remains as profitable as it has been in recent years, those expected revenues are realistic, regents Executive Director Stan Koplik said.

The governor's budget recommendation affects K-State because of the nature of the mission of a land grant institution, said Thomas Schellhardt, assistant vice president for administration and finance.

"This means K-State won't be able to achieve 100 percent of salary parity with peer institutions as rapidly as The Wichita State University," he said.

Faculty members who do both research and teach will only realize the higher salary increase on the portion of their salary applicable to teaching, Schellhardt said. "The governor's recommendation is quite arbitrary and a real slap at a hard-working group of people," said Brice Hobrock, dean

"We experience the same problems attracting quality people to the library and have to pay premium salaries to get quality librarians. Meanwhile, the current staff gets overlooked," he said. "Unlike many faculty salaries, librarians' salaries are for 12 months versus nine months." Regents Chairman Donald Slawson said regents were generally happy with the governor's recommendations and have two more

lobby for extra budget requests. "I think we're pleased with what we have so far," Slawson said. "The disparity in salary increases will certainly cause a morale problem," said John Keller, professor of regional and community planning and president of Faculty Senate.

However, he said, the primary target of the Margin of Excellence was the classroom

"Hopefully we can address the problem in some manner this year and in a more meaningful way next year," he said.

In his budget recommendation, sent to the Legislature Tuesday, Hayden is projecting $11.1 million of the student fees collected make up 30 percent of the MOE increase.

The regents, in the budget request sent to Hayden late last year, recommended $10.2 million from student fees comprise 25 percent of the increase.

State general funds would pay for $4 million or 11 percent of the MOE increase in the governor's budget. Hayden's recommended allocation of state general funds for MOE comprises one percent of the increase.

State general funds were to pay for 31 percent — $18 million — of the increase in the regents' request.

"(Hayden) says we're getting all this windfall money and we're only spending one percent of the regents' budget on the Margin," said Troy Lubbers, student body president.

Kansas will receive a one-time revenue "windfall" increase because the state tax code has not been changed to bring it into line with federal tax law changes.

Board Chairman Donald Slawson expressed the board's acceptance of Hayden's recommendation.

"The governor responded to our fondest wishes with regard to instructional faculty salary," Slaw-

The regents disapproved of the way the increase is to be funded. Board members were also concerned about how the public would perceive the Margin's goals based on Hayden's recommended allocations. "I think there is a perception in the general public that we're willing to spend tax dollars on teaching salaries but not on research, overhead and so on," said Regent Richard Reinhardt. As originally proposed, MOE was improvement and research at the six regents' universities. Slawson said two more years remained in the three-year MOE plan for the regents to figure out how to already in that process with Martin Luther King. As time moves on we forget the indiscretions and concentrate on contributions."

Though King's birthday was initially celebrated as a national holiday in 1986, it was first proposed as a holiday in 1974 by the students at Pikes Peak College in Colorado Springs, Colo., said the Rev. Joseph Spence, president of the Manhattan chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored

This is the first year K-State has closed classes, though the University has had memorial services and a noted speaker on King's birthday since 1985.

All seven Kansas Board of Regents institutions will be closed, said Robert Krause, vice president for institutional advancement. In the fall of 1987 the Regents specified all institutions to observe the holiday.

Spence, who describes the making of King's birthday a holiday as a "splendid idea," said there should be government-funded educational programs to inform all citizens about the dream King advocated.

"There has to be an emphasis to keep the dream alive," he said, "because it is to the benefit of all men, not just blacks."

But some local leaders think movement to fulfill the dream has ceased, if not gone backward.

"He brought about a change in social order which was desired by some," said Veryl Switzer, assistant vice president and assistant professor of minority affairs. "But when faced daily by his advocacy, it became a threat to some."

Switzer said some progress has been made, but U.S. society is slow to meet the needs of all its citizens. Furthermore, many people do not understand the amount of pain minorities have had to overcome to reach a point of equity in their lives.

Schiappa said much of the racism today seems to be unconscious. Rather than intending to discriminate, society has just overlooked blacks and other minorities.

Education tragedy

60s play reveals frustration

By Ann Iseman Arts and Entertainment Editor

Frustration, anger, neglect, bitterness, murder and the educational system are explored in "Job Security", the Ebony Theater production which was performed Thursday night in the Purple Masque Theatre. The play was written by Martie Charles, a black playwright who was once connected with a Harlem theater that had been established in 1966 in response to the changes occurring in the black community at the time. Charles wrote the play with the black community in mind. She focuses on what she sees as one of the community's most serious problems: teachers whose first commitment is to themselves, instead of to their students. She wrote the play during the turbulent 60s and the play is set during the same time period.

"She was disgusted with what was going on in the educational system and that's why she wrote the play," said Marlene Reed, president of the Ebony Theater and graduate student in special education. "She wanted to express her disgust and frustration at what was happening to the educational system during that time period."

Frustration, bitterness, neglect and the need for devoted and qualified black teachers to train black students is the theme of "Job Security." Charles is telling teachers, through the play, that students should be their top priority, not the monthly paycheck the teachers receive.

"Everybody was a victim of their environment," Reed said. "The students, the teachers, everybody..."

Ebony Theater is performing the play at the same time the nation is preparing to honor Martin Luther King, Jr. for his contributions to the community during the 60s.

Reed said the timing of the play is no accident. The drama was planned to coincide with the King holiday.

A skit will be performed prior to the play entitled "Personal Testimonies." Derek Walker, freshman in apparel and textile marketing, will play the part of King in the skit. Reed said the skit, a series of four testimonials, will focus on King and mannerly and polite. his experiences during the 60s when he fought peacefully for civil rights.

"The testimonials focus on what King believed," Reed said. "He believed in equality for everyone, not just blacks. The testimonials brought out some of the inequalities of that time period."

"Job Security" is about a young girl, Ella, who is angry and bitter at her teachers' apathy and lack of concern for the students. Ella is played by Felicia Bradley, freshman in general.

The teachers, played by Reed and Raymarlyn Barnes, non-degree major, might have cared about the students, but they are more concerned with their own job security, hence the title of the play. The teachers at the school neglect the students in their frustrated attempt to earn a living and support their families.

At the beginning of the play, Ella is a frustrated, bitter, fifteen-yearold, lashing out at everyone, especially her teachers. Toward the end of the play, Ella seems to have resigned to the way things are: she becomes

She brings candy to her teachers, who are delighted at the change in the girl. After her teachers eat the candy, they begin to think of the way Ella had drastically changed her behavior, and of how she had given all of the candy to people whom she had used to hate.

It is too late for the teachers when they realize Ella had poisoned them. The tragic ending has no winners, not even Ella.

Shirl Henry, sophomore in speech, is the director of the play. Also featured in the play are Annette Jones, freshman in social sciences, and Vanessa Galbreath, junior in pre-

Other students performing in the 'Personal Testimonies" skit are Martin Grizzell, freshman in English; Karen Hester, junior in electrical engineering; Karen Reese, sophomore in radio-television and Annette Jones, who is in both plays.

The Ebony Theater is a student drama group, which any student is eligible to join.

"Job Security" will be performed on Friday at 8 p.m. and Monday at noon in the Purple Masque Theatre, in addition to Thursday's performance.

Spielberg's films disappointing

By Brad Alchison Collegian Reviewer

Steven Spielberg is a master of adventure. His films take us on journeys to unknown lands where imagination creates reality. "Empire of the Sun" is his most recent movie. Unlike Spielberg's other film adventures, this one is based on a true story.

"Empire of the Sun" is based on an autobiographical novel by J.G. Ballard that was adapted for the screen by English playwright Tom Stoppard. Once again, Spielberg takes a look at the world through the eyes of a young boy, just as he did in "Goonles" and "E.T."

The film follows Jim, a young

English boy caught in the crossfire man of Japanese-occupied Shanghai. After being separated from his parents, Jim is taken to a concentration camp containing British and American civilians. Most of the film is set in the concentration camp.

Spielberg used thousands of actors and excellent costuming to re-create the panicked city under seige, which is definitely one of the movie's most magical scenes. Spielberg also provides the viewer with some exciting aerial photography and flight sequences.

Jim is in awe of the power and beauty of the Japanese Zeros, which take off and land on the airstrip next to the camp. Some of the childhood excitement about airplanes can be relived during this scene.

The character of Jim is played by Christian Bales. He accurately portrays the excitement and innocence necessary to make the role believ-able. John Malkovich also turns in a fine performance, even though the Visually, "Empire of the Sun" is captivating, but good cinematography does not guarantee a good film.

The movie has an unnatural mix of history and surrealism. Although the film was based on a true story, the viewer is left wondering how much of the movie was factual and how much was created for effect. Spielberg apparently failed to realize that history can be as interesting as fantasy.

"Empire of the Sun" is an entertaining movie in spite of its shortgrown to expect a little more than

Debaters receive financial aid needed for competition, travel

By Alison Neely Staff Writer

With the assurance of financial backing and a fourth-place national ranking, K-State debaters are preparing for a busy semester of travel and Traditionally, the team has operated on a strapped budget said Edward Schiappa, director of debate. The fund-raiser for last semester, a concert by the Washington Squares, was successful in calling attention to the team's plight, Schiappa said. However, it only broke even monetarily.

Since that time, the administration has stepped forward with the offer of financial assistance.

"Thanks to the administration we can now travel without worry of going broke," said David Scott, assistant director of debate. "They have been really supportive of us."

Although it is expensive, traveling is an integral part of debate. Last semester the team came close to losing its national ranking due to lack of travel funds. There is no concern that this situation will reoccur this semester, Scott said.

The debaters have approximately 10 tournaments scheduled for the semester. The number fluctuates because of the frequency of tournament cancellation, Schiappa said.

The first large tournament to be attended by the K-State debate team will be Jan. 20-21 at Weber State in

The following weekend, Jan. 22-23, is another tournament in Utah, but only two K-State teams will compete. The rest of the debaters will be in Manhattan, Schiappa said, because K-State will host the state high school finals debate tournament that weekend.

"We're excited about the tournament in the sense it gives them the chance to look over the campus and us a chance to look over the better debaters," Schiappa said.

Top shooter arrives in Manhattan

K-State students, faculty and any other interested persons will have a chance to test their free throw-shooting skills - and luck - against the best free throw shooter in the

Ted St. Martin, 51, the Coors Light Silver Bullet Sharpshooter and world record holder for the most consecutive free throws with 2,036, will entertain basketball fans and work for charity today and Saturday.

St. Martin's appearances start at 10:30 a.m. today in the K-State Union Courtyard. He will shoot against any challengers until 1 p.m. Anyone who beats him will have the opportunity to shoot against him again at halftime of the K-State-University of Oklahoma men's basketball game Saturday night.

At 1 p.m. Saturday, St. Martin will shoot free throws for 10 minutes in Ahearn Field House. He will be shooting to raise money for David Walker, Idana, Kan., who suffers from a rare hereditary condition known as pulmonary hypertension. Walker needs to have a heart/lung transplant.

Monetary pledges based on the number of free throws St. Martin makes in the 10-minute period or donations will be taken in "Saturday's fund-raiser is just one of many we've had for David," said Jerry Wiesner, project chairman, Clay Center. "What is raised Saturday will be used for postoperative expenses, which will be vast." Wiesner said he approached the K-State athletic department about the fund-raiser. "They (the athletic department) were very receptive," he said. "In fact, they're the driving force behind this whole thing Saturday." "The athletic department is very open to sponsoring worthwhile causes, as this certainly is," said Torrey Head, K-State's promotions and marketing director.

Wiesner said Walker cannot attend the fund-raiser because he is on a list to receive the first available transplant. Walker also receives oxygen 24 hours a day and cannot leave his house due to the risk of getting a cold or catching the flu. Following St. Martin's 1 he will be at the Manhattan Town Center meeting more challengers.

opener against Oklahoma at 7:05 p.m. Saturday in Ahearn Field House.

Stiffest test awaits Wildcats Saturday

By Bill Lang Sports Writer

Grab a seat and strike up the band. For K-State's men's basketball team, the preseason is over and the Big Eight season is here. First up, the University of Oklahoma Sooners.

What a way to start. The Sooners are ranked third in the country in both the AP and UPI polls.

After finishing their non-conference season with a 7-4 record, including a Monday road loss to Southern Mississippi, 91-89, the Wildcats should have an emotional edge going into their 7:05 p.m. conference opener. But the Sooners, 14-1, have the physical manpower, the speed and the ability to hit from anywhere on the court.

And they too are coming off a tough Monday road loss - their first of the season. The Sooners were defeated by Louisiana State University, 84-77.

"We've been on the road for about a month now, and it'll be good to get back home and play in the field house. The team knows that it's the last time they'll be playing Big Eight teams in Ahearn, and they want to go out in style."

—Lon Kruger

"Oklahoma has excellent athletes, and they probably have the most talented duo for the inside game," K-State coach Lon Kruger

That duo Kruger speaks highly of is Stacey King and Harvey Grant.

"King is a good leaper, and Grant - well, he's one of the better players in the country and one of the Top 10 inside players," he

Grant, a 6-foot-8, 200-pound senior, averages 23 points and 11 rebounds per game. King, a 6-foot-10, 230-pound senior, averages 18 points and eight rebounds per game.

Kruger cited the play of K-State's own inside game as a key to a K-State victory. "We'll have to rotate (Ron Meyer, Charles Bledsoe and Fred McCoy) around a little bit," he said. "Over the break our inside game has gotten better. Ron and Charles have shown some improvement."

The Sooners lead the country in scoring, averaging 112 points per game. Oklahoma has surpassed the century mark in 11 of its 15 games this season but has never scored 100 points against K-State.

Oklahoma's bench contributes around 26 points per game, and Kruger said the OU bench could hurt the 'Cats.

"They are a deep team with a lot of talent on the court and also sitting on the bench," Kruger said. "We've seen their game with LSU (Louisiana State University) and have some ideas on how to beat them."

The 'Cats are averaging 79.4 points per game while limiting their opponents to 69.7 points per game.

Kruger's game plan includes trying to get the Sooners out of their patented running game and, hopefully, into some foul trouble.

But the biggest factor in a K-State victory will be the home-court advantage, Kruger

"We've been on the road for about a month now, and it'll be good to get back home and play in the field house," he said. "The team knows that it's the last time they'll be playing Big Eight teams in Aheam, and they want to go out in style."

Notes...Oklahoma had an 11-game winning streak until the 'Cats defeated them last Feburary, 90-89, in Norman... During Sooner Coach Billy Tubbs' tenure, the Sooners and the 'Cats have virtually the same scoring average against each other. K-State has averaged 73.4 ppg and Oklahoma has averaged 73.9 ppg.

Notice...K-State's athletic department has announced a change in the starting time of the men's basketball game Tuesday against Wichita State University.

The contest against the Shockers, originally announced as a 7:05 p.m. CST tipoff, has been changed to begin at 8:05 p.m. in Ahearn Field House. The change in time will accommodate live television coverage of the game by the Kansas State Network.

Lady Cats ready for Ahearn

By Daran Neuschafer Sports Writer

The K-State Lady Cats are coming

After finishing a rugged eightgame Christmas-break schedule on Tuesday night with an 87-64 loss to Oklahoma State University, the Lady Cats return to Manhattan for an important Big Eight Conference match-up with the University of Oklahoma Sooners. Game time is set for 5 p.m. Saturday.

Lady Cat Coach Matilda Mossman thinks her team is ready to return to the friendly confines of Ahearn Field House to try to improve its 7-6 record.

"We had a long semester break maybe a little too long," Mossman said while reflecting on K-State's 3-5 record during the holiday break.

But after playing seven of those eight games on the road, Mossman and her troops are anxious to get back on their home court, where they have lost only once in five games this

"Our kids have a real secure feeling about playing at home," Mossman said. "But that can be expected with a young team.

"The team just plays with more confidence at home, we just need to bring that confidence with us when we go on the road."

Usually, a team needs a floor leader to get the confidence up and keep it up. Usually, a senior fills this role. But without any seniors and just one junior, the Lady Cats have been unable to gain the confidence needed to reach a consistent level of play both at home and on the road.

However, sophomore Janet Madsen has started to take charge and Mossman is hoping she continues to step in and lead the less-experienced players, especially with the tough Big Eight schedule now getting into full gear.

"Starting with the Louisiana State game (Dec. 30), Janet has really started to assert herself to help out the team," Mossman said. "She has become more aggressive on the offensive end, she is getting herself to the free-throw line more and just doing a lot of positive things for the team.'

Madsen, a 5-9 forward, has led K- She did, however, play 25 minutes in

"Oklahoma is still doing a lot of experimenting with their lineup, but lately they have been playing a little better, and once they get (Jo) Mosley back they will be even better," Mossman said.

Mosley, Oklahoma's leading scorer, has missed the last several games while battling a case of tonsillitis.

State in scoring in three of the last the Colorado game, scoring 12 points four games, including a 23-point, and pulling down 12 rebounds. She is not expected to start Saturday, but Mossman said she will probably see some action.

Mossman is hoping the 5 p.m. tipoff will encourage a larger crowd to support the Lady Cats.

With us playing right before the men's game, I hope that a lot of fans will come out early and support the girls," she said.

Sunday promises rivalry, revenge in playoffs

WASHINGTON - Never mind the Redskins' offense or defense. It was the coin toss that killed the Minnesota Vikings the last two times they played Washington.

Each time they took the Redskins to overtime; each time they lost the coin toss and Washington won with a score on its first possession.

"Maybe this time, we'll win a coin toss and win the game," Minnesota Coach Jerry Burns says of Sunday's meeting with the Redskins for the NFC championship. The last time the coin fell wrong for the Vikings was just three weeks ago in Minneapolis, when it looked like the vagaries of "heads" or "tails" had eliminated Minnesota from the

After dominating for most of the game, they allowed the Redskins to tie the game on a 51-yard pass from Doug Williams to Ricky Sanders with 1:46 left, then lost the toss and the game 27-24 on Ali Haji-Sheikh's 26-yard field goal. That kept the Vikings from clinching a playoff berth and they snuck in the back door only because St. Louis was beaten by Dallas on the final Sunday.

A similar thing happened on Nov. 2, 1986, when the Redskins rallied from a 12-point deficit in the final five minutes to tie the game, then won 44-38 on Jay Schroeder's 38-yard touchdown pass to Gary Clark on their first possession in Both were odd games.

Minnesota dominated from the outset this year, going up 7-0 in the first period. But they lost another chance to score when they drove to the Washington 14, then lost 20 yards a 3-yard loss on a running play, a 10-yard holding penalty against All-Pro tackle Gary Zimmerman and a sack by the Redskins' Pro Bowl defensive end Charles Mann.

On their next possession, the Vikings had a first down on the Redskins' two.

But D.J. Dozier was thrown for a 3-yard loss, Wade Wilson was sacked for two more yards, then Barry Wilburn picked off a Wilson pass and returned it 100 yards for a touchdown. So the teams went off at halftime tied, 7-7, although Minnesota had outgained Washington 227-84 yards and held the ball for more than Denver on its 2-yard line. They 22 of the 30 minutes. The second half was more even, as

Williams relieved Schroeder and threw for 217 yards after intermission, a performance that earned him the starting assignment for the playoffs.

DENVER - The Cleveland Browns and Denver Broncos, the AFC's biggest winners the last two years, point to specific losses as their motivation for Sunday's conference championship game.

The Browns remember last year's AFC Championship, before nearly 80,000 screaming, dog biscuitthrowing fans in Cleveland Stadium. They remember taking a 20-13 lead in the fourth quarter, then pinning remember The Drive, engineered masterfully by John Elway, to the tying touchdown. And Rich Karlis' overtime field goal to win it.

The Broncos recall their first Super Bowl appearance in nine years, They recall leading 10-9 at halftime but having blown at least another 10 points. They recall how the Giants blew them out in the second half for a 39-20 victory.

Neither team can forget. Neither team wants to forget.

"We got to this point last year and we didn't get the chance to take that extra step," Cleveland's Ozzie Newsome said. "But this time, we want that extra step. We're not satisfied just being in the championship

But they are happy to be there and are not intimidated by having to play at Mile High Stadium, where the Broncos have lost only one nonstrike game in two years.

"It's a great stadium," Browns Coach Marty Schottenheimer said. "I played there back when it held about 50,000 people, and they wore those vertically striped socks. I don't think the noise is anything unusual, not like playing in a dome.

"I would say that on the basis of the best record in the AFC, the two best teams are in it this year and were last year. It was a great football game last year, if you didn't care who won, and I expect it'll be another great game again this year." The Broncos certainly thought last vear's game was great - they won it.

Supreme Court.

Civil liberties, feminist and other groups charged that Bork would turn back the clock on civil rights, an accusation he and his largely Republican backers strongly denied.

A taste of Bork's thinking about his rejection by the Senate was revealed in the Chicago Tribune on Dec. 4 about a closed-door speech he gave to the Law Club of the City of Chicago in which he said his opponents had lied to foil his nomination.

Bork was quoted as accusing his opponents of fighting his nomination with a political campaign that "set record lows in mendacity, brutality and vulgarity."

Living the Dream: Let Freedom Ring

Kansas State University January 18-22, 1988

The third national observance of Martin Luther King, Jr., Day is Monday, January 18. Kansas State University will observe this celebration saluting the spirit of the late civil rights leader from Monday, January 18, through Friday, January 22. No other holiday serves as a focal point for encouraging improved race relations. This celebration can help unify America in the spirit of Dr. King's dream.

We urge you to participate in . . .

· A week to reaffirm the American ideals of freedom, justice, and opportunity for all.

· A week for love, not hate-for understanding, not anger-for peace, not war.

· A week for the family: to share together, to reach out to relatives and friends, and to mend broken relationships

· A week when people of all races, religions, classes, and stations in life put aside their differences and join in a spirit of togetherness.

· A week for nations of the world to cease all violent actions, seek nonviolent solutions, and demonstrate that peace is not just a dream, but a real possibility.

 If for only a brief time, each of us serves as a drum major for justice and peace, then we will bring life to the inspiring vision of freedom of which Martin Luther King "dreamed."

The keynote address, "Dr. King's Influence on Today's Events," will be presented by Lerone Bennett, executive editor of Ebony magazine and author of eight books, including What Manner of Man: A Biography of Martin Luther King, Jr., and Before the Mayflower: A History of the Negro in America. The address, which is part of the University Convocation Series, will be held Thursday, January 21 at 10:30 a.m. in McCain Auditorium.

Students seeking equality

By Chad L. Sanborn Staff Writer

More than 200 people participated Monday night in a candlelight vigil and memorial services celebrating Martin Luther King Jr.'s birthday.

A twisting chain of a cappella voices singing "We Shall Overcome" walked from Cardwell Hall to All Faiths Chapel, picking up members as it progressed.

"I would have liked to have seen more of a mixture (of blacks and whites) — a more interracial crowd. The majority of the campus is white and the minority is black."

-Bobby Van Buren

Once inside the chapel, the services, sponsored by the men of Alpha Phi Alpha, included a poem titled "He Ain't Heavy, He's My Brother," and a dramatic reading by Shirlyn Henry, sophomore in speech.

Ron Hopkins, sophomore in music and director of the United Black Voices choir, sang "Precious Lord Take My Hand." Hopkins said the song was one of King's favorite.

The choir then joined Hopkins on stage and sang four songs, which brought a standing ovation from the Hopkins said the event is celebrated not just in the memory of King, but also in memory of those before him who fought for equality.

"This event shows we have come a long way - but we have a long way to go. There is always room for improvement," he said.

The event symbolized more than King and his work to Tony Carpenter, junior in social sciences. The event is exceptional. It comes at a good time, the beginning of the semester. It reminds people that we have our work cut out for us." Bobby Van Buren, senior in fine arts and chairman of the Black Panhellenic Council, was pleased with the turnout, but said it could have been better. "I would have liked to have seen more of a mixture (of blacks and whites) - a more interracial crowd. The majority of the campus is white and the minority is black," he said. John Crawford, sophomore in journalism and mass communications, agreed with Van Buren. "It is like Dr. King said. If we can't unite by hand, then we can't unite." The commemoration of King's birthday will continue tonight with a pre-convocation forum at 7 p.m. in Union 212. "The Role of Black Press" will be discussed, focusing on Ebony magazine.

The convocation will be delivered by Lerone Bennet Jr., a historian and the editor of Ebony at 10:30 a.m. Jan. 21 in McCain. His speech is titled "Dr. King's Influence of Today's Arizona marchers called for restoring the Martin Luther King Day holiday, and Philadelphia's mayor set churchbells pealing with a tap on the Liberty Bell as Americans paid homage Monday to King's stillunrealized dream of racial harmony.

In Atlanta, Coretta Scott King and her children laid a wreath at the slain civil rights leader's tomb on the third national holiday in his honor. The graveside ceremony was followed by the now-traditional ecumenical service at Ebenezer Baptist Church, where King served as co-pastor.

"The disease (of racism)...is still among us, and it has global implications," said the church's pastor, the Rev. Joseph Roberts, before a gathering that included Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., and Atlanta Mayor Andrew Young.

The Rev. Joseph Lowery, president of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, urged the audience to remember the ideals that King stood for.

"The holiday honors an individual, but also a struggle," he said. Some 5,000 marchers braved a downpour in Phoenix to rally at the state Capitol to make Martin Luther King Day a state holiday despite opposition from that state's

One of the most dramatic moments in King's life was to be recalled Monday night in Selma, Ala., where a candlelight march was planned to commemorate "Bloody Sunday," the 1965 demonstration when state troopers confronted civil rights marchers.

King was assassinated in Memphis, Tenn., on April 4, 1968. The Nobel Peace Prize laureate's birthday was Friday.

Many of the nation's schoolchildren got a holiday from classes, but Lewiston, Me., youngsters studied King's "I Have A Dream" speech and wrote of their own dreams.

"I have a dream that when children grow up they won't have to live in boxes on the street and they won't kill others," said Jesse Larue, 8.

But students at at least two New Jersey high schools that stayed open walked out of their classes in protest. Hunterdon Central Regional High School principal David Myers said that the approximately 25 students involved would be disciplined.

King's daughter, Bernice King, said on CBS' "This Morning" program that she thinks most racist actions today result from ignorance.

Official says aid promotes peace

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - A top State Department official dismissed on Monday peace concessions by Nicaragua's leftist government as a ploy to defeat an upcoming congressional vote on additional aid to the Contra rebels.

But Nicaragua's vice president said any renewal of U.S. aid to the Contras could "kill the peace process" in Central America.

Even though Monday was a federal holiday in honor of the birth of Martin Luther King Jr., high-level meetings were being held as officials sought to assess the latest developments and to determine how much additional assistance for the Contras should be sought.

Assistant Secretary of State Elliott Abrams said Nicaraguan officials cannot be trusted to implement the promises they made during the weekend summit meeting of Central American leaders in Costa Rica.

"Two weeks before the vote on Capitol Hill, they make more promises. ... It seems very clear the purpose is to win that vote," Abrams said on "CBS This Morning."

Abrams said that continuing Contra aid would be an "insurance policy" to guarantee that Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega continues the peace process.

"What I'm saying is, we need to see whether these are concessions," Abrams said later Monday in an interview with public television's "MacNeil-Lehrer NewsHour."

"Thus far he hasn't done anything," Abrams said. "I'm saying that if Nicaragua is a democracy by the time of the vote, we'll all be amazed and that would be wonderful, and there won't be any more Contras at that point. They'll all go home and become voters and citizens."

The administration will make a formal request to the Congress for more aid on Jan. 26. Both the amount and the time frame for the aid are still undecided, according to administration officials. A House vote is set for Feb. 3 and the Senate will follow on

Talks to be aimed at cease-fire

MANAGUA, Nicaragua - President Daniel Ortega said Monday night the Sandinistas will hold their first direct ceasefire talks with the Contra rebels next week in Costa Rica.

Cardinal Miguel Obando y Bravo, after meeting with Ortega, said he would ask American cardinals to request that the United States accept 3,300 Nicaraguan political prisoners, including former national guardsmen.

Earlier Monday, Ortega suggested his Sandinista government would take tough measures if the U.S. Congress approves new aid for the Contra rebels in a vote scheduled for early next month. Also Monday, the government released seven opposition Ortega announced at the end of a Central American summit on Saturday that he would grant amnesty to political prisoners if the United States or a country not in Central America accepted them.

NEVADA, Mo. - A five-month undercover investigation resulted in the arrests of 22 people, 19 of them from the Nevada area, on a variety of drug charges.

The arrests began early Sunday, and by mid-day Monday there had been 22, including two from elsewhere in Vernon County and one from Pleasanton, Kan.

Vernon County prosecutor Neal Quitno said warrants were also issued for three other people, one of whom is in a military prison in California. Quitno said 45 charges of drug sales were issued Sunday. He said police confiscated an ounce of a substance resembling either cocaine or methamphetamines, worth an estimated $2,000, and smaller quantities of marijuana, methamphetamines and

Meanwhile, in Kansas, officers of the Franklin County-city drug unit, the sheriff's department and the Kansas Bureau of Investigation arrested six people on drug charges late Saturday

The raid at a house four miles northeast of Richmond followed a three month-investigation, said Franklin County Detective Brad Gilges. He said police confiscated about one ounce of cocaine, three ounces of marijuana, a quantity of white powder, assorted drug paraphernalia and about $3,500 in cash.

The six people were being held in the Franklin County jail at Ottawa for possession of controlled substances.

Astronauts desire test-firing

SPACE CENTER, Houston - Senior astronauts are worried about flaws found in a solid rocket booster tested last month and are pushing this week for an additional mandatory full-scale test-firing before the space shuttle is cleared to fly again.

A spokesman for Morton Thiokol Inc., manufacturer of the rocket engines, confirmed Monday that "discussions are under way" about adding another mandatory test-firing of the rocket, but he said a decision has not been made.

Daniel Brandenstein, chief of the astronaut office at the Johnson Space Center, said in an interview Friday that he and others in his office feel that the Dec. 23 full-scale rocket firing, during which part of the rocket nozzle assembly came apart, shows that more testing is needed to assure safety.

"We are proposing that we do three more (mandatory) tests, but that is still in review," Brandenstein said. "They were planning two, but with the (launch date) slip and the failure, putting a third in there is possible."

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration planned four full-scale rocket firings to verify a new design for the solid-fueled booster. One test, called DM8, was conducted in August and was successful. It was followed the Dec. 23 test, called DM9, in which a new nozzle boot ring design was used. Engineers found after the test that the boot ring had come

Officials deny forgery charges

Republican Pete du Pont's campaign denied charges on Monday that a top aide authorized primary ballot petition forgeries

The father of a fired du Pont campaign worker implicated the candidate's national political director, Tim Hyde, in the scandal over the forgery of signatures on petitions to place du Pont's name on the primary ballot. The father, Guy Robertson, told The Houston Post he had a tape recording linking Hyde to the forgeries although Robertson refused to turn it over to the newspaper.

Du Pont last week fired Rosanne Robertson, a receptionist for his campaign, for involvement in the forgery of 136

On Saturday du Pont said he wouldn't compete in the Texas primary, the biggest GOP prize in the March 8 Super Tuesday primaries, because of the forgeries. But he said, "I have determined that no one in the management of my campaign authorized or had any knowledge of these activities."

Du Pont spokesman Fred Stern said Hyde was unavailable and that du Pont wasn't responding to the latest charges, beyond his statement Saturday.

The campaign's Washington lawyer, Daniel J. Swillinger, said Hyde was unaware of the forgeries until they were disclosed in an investigation. He said he had not heard the purported tape, and presumed the Robertsons taped a call she made to Hyde's home early Sunday morning.

Fraternities pledge members

Membership in K-State's fraternities increased 12 percent from last year with the addition of 51 fall pledges.

Fifteen of the 28 fraternities had new members joining and pledging will continue during the spring semester. The total number of fraternity members to 536.

Barb Robel, greek affairs adviser, said the increase could be attributed to the overall increase in the number of incoming freshman and the greater emphasis being placed on the benefits of living in organized housing.

ELIGIBILITY FOR CARE LAFENE STUDENT HEALTH CENTER

Health fees are established upon the recommendation of the Student Senate with approval by the Board of Regents.

2. All students who are enrolled and attending classes during a regular semester or summer session who have paid health fees are eligible for care. 3. Those enrolled in Special Courses, for varying periods of time, who have made previous arrangements for health care coverage at Lafene are eligible for care. (Lists of these students must be furnished prior to being seen at Lafene.) Only students, who have paid the health fee, may elect to have their spouse also covered at Lafene; however, they must pay the spouse fee within 10 days of the time their own health fees are paid. (Children cannot be seen.)

Emergency care, prior to referral, will be given anyone who

Students enrolled in 6 hours or less, electing not to pay the health fee during the Fall or Spring semesters, who wish to be seen, will be charged $20 for each office visit. This charge continues until the full health fee has been exceeded, then that student will be afforded the same privileges as the regular fee paying student for the remainder of that semester.

Students who were enrolled in the Spring and pre-enrolled for the Fall semester but not attending summer school may pay $15 and be eligible for care during the summer. This fee may be paid within 30 days prior to summer registration and ends the day classes begin. A late fee of $20 will be accepted for the remainder of the summer.

Health fees are good until 12 o'clock the night the next semester begins.

NOTE: In addition to the above mentioned fees, there are minimal charges for certain supplies and services and the charges are subject to change without prior notice.

Racial lawsuit reaches Supreme Court addressed the question of subjective criteria a waiting list for a kidney transplant and table at the rear of the room, and when she

FORT WORTH, Texas - As a bank teller, Clara Watson says she endured slights from a four-year statistical study which he says coworkers and slurs from white customers who said they didn't want a black person counting their money.

But when she was passed over four times for promotion, she started a legal battle that has reached the nation's capital.

The U.S. Supreme Court will hear oral arguments Wednesday in a case that attorneys say could be a civil rights landmark, changing the way employers hire and advance workers.

Watson, however, only wanted a promotion to supervisor at Fort Worth Bank & Trust, where she had worked for eight years when she asked attorney Art Brender in 1981 to take her case.

In the years since, Brender has put together proves the bank discriminated against blacks and used subjective hiring and promotion criteria to thwart their progress.

Nine of the nation's 12 U.S. circuit courts of appeal have allowed the use of subjective decisions in proving discrimination cases, but the 5th Circuit, where Watson took her case after losing in U.S. District Court in 1986, has not.

A Supreme Court ruling in favor of Watson could force employers to abandon all subjective criteria in hiring and promotions, using solely objective tests or basing their decisions on racial or sexual percentages that reflect the makeup of the applicant pool, attorneys say.

Homes demolished by high waves; 7 killed as storms move eastward

By The Associated Press

A potent storm dumped up to 2 feet of snow in the mountains of the West on Monday after hammering California's coast with 12-foot waves that destroyed a restaurant, washed away part of a hotel and damaged celebrities' beach homes.

At least seven deaths were blamed on the storm in California before it set off on a track expected to send it over the Plains today.

The storm-related deaths included two men and a woman found in a car buried by an avalanche in the Angeles National Forest about 30 miles northeast of Los Angeles. Five also died on ice-slickened highways in Missouri and 10 died Sunday and Monday in plane crashes in five states linked to fog.

More than 20 inches of snow fell at Monticello in southern Utah, with 18.8 inches at Durango, Colo., and 17 inches at Flagstaff, Ariz., the National Weather Service said. Up to 2 feet of snow fell in the Sierra Nevada in northern California.

"This is the strongest storm so far this winter," said weather service meteorologist Larry Riggs at Flagstaff.

The heart of the storm was a low pressure system so strong that it sent barometers plunging to a reading of 29.25, the lowest level measured at

"I've seen some boats floating by ... I just saw my neighbor's (comedian Don Rickles') deck float by a minute ago," said "Dallas" star Larry Hagman, a long-time resident of the exclusive Malibu Colony on the coast northwest of Los Angeles.

Los Angeles County officials closed all piers and reported flooding at most beaches. Redondo Beach Mayor Tim Casey declared a local state of emergency.

The last 100 feet of the Huntington Beach Pier collapsed into the battering waves 35 miles southeast of Los Angeles, taking a cafe with it late Sunday. The end of the pier had already been closed to the public because of weakened pilings.

> The south end of the three-level Portofino Inn at Redondo Beach collapsed into the surf Sunday night and continued crumbling Monday, said city fire department spokeswoman Carolyn Franck. And a 35-foot boat ended up in the parking lot. More than 100 guests fled.

Franck said 50 people who fled to the hotel's top floor were evacuated by a helicopter belonging to Los Angeles radio station KNX.

"It was harrowing. We were unable to see things while we were landing," said KNX pilot Bob Tur. "The people were terribly panicked. The waves were tremendous and they thought they were going to die."

Although the sky over the coast cleared to brilliant blue Monday after the storm rolled inland, the San Diego Zoo failed to open for the first time in its 72-year history. High wind had toppled a dozen towering trees and threatened to fell others, endangering people rather than animals, spokesman Jeff Jouett said.

Elsewhere, dense fog kept airliners from landing or taking off from Chicago's O'Hare airport during the Cafe owner John Gustafson had morning, and at least one person was

Chinese crash kills 108 aboard airliner

By The Associated Press

BEIJING - A domestic airliner crashed in southwestern China, killing all 108 people aboard, the official Xinhua news agency reported Tuesday.

The Civil Aviation Administration of China (CAAC) Flight 4146 carried a crew of 10 and 98 passengers, the agency said.

Chinese civil aviation officials reported no Americans aboard the plane, said Julian Pendergrass, consul at the U.S. Embassy.

The agency said four of the dead were foreigners, but did not list their nationalities.

The Ilyushin-18 plane, en route from Beijing to Chongqing in Sichuan province, crashed about five miles from the Chongqing airport at 10:15 p.m. Monday, Xinhua said in its report Tuesday.

There was no immediate word on the cause of the crash.

New decision will affect readers, writers changed the constitutional rights of young Americans in a 5-3 opinion announced last week concerning a St. Louis high school newspaper censorship case.

While many readers might argue that this does signal a continued shifting of the

The U.S. Supreme Court fundamentally Court's views favoring state and governmental rights over individual rights.

Before last week's ruling on the Kuhlmeier vs. Hazelwood School District, nearly all federal courts had accepted the "Tinker" standard as it applied to a variety of student case has little effect upon their daily lives, it expression at both the high school and college levels. The Tinker vs. Des Moines Independent Community School District case was a landmark 1969 Supreme Court decision that said, in part, "neither students nor teachers shed their constitutional rights at the schoolhouse gate."

In that case, three public school students had been expelled from school for wearing black armbands as a "silent protest" to U.S. involvement in Vietnam. The court emphasized a standard that prohibited censorship of student expression on a wide variety of issues unless the free expression "materially and substantially disrupted the educational process." This generally meant students were given broad constitutional protections for free expression under the First Amendment as long as their activities did not cause a riot, close down the school or create physical or safety problems.

The Tinker case has been cited by more than 300 high school and college student press cases that have worked their way through the federal court system during the past two decades.

Last week's decision has changed the standard under which future student free expression cases will be judged.

"A school need not tolerate student speech that is inconsistent with its basic educational mission even though the government could not censor similar speech outside school," Justice Byron R. White wrote in the prevailing opinion.

The former Tinker standard - which required school officials to prove "substantial disruption" would likely occur before they could censor forms of student expression appears to have died with the latest ruling. Now, the court has said, if student expression interferes or challenges existing "educational purpose," it may be stopped by school officials.

Some of you might ask, "So what? Don't we need discipline and control in our schools? Aren't school boards elected to determine what's best for students? Aren't administrators and teachers the ones who can best determine 'educational purpose' rather than students themselves?" Well, I would have to agree with most of these assumptions.

During the past two decades, however, school media had been given legal power to act as limited "public forums," similar to a public "park bench." As in the case of the park bench, which was purchased by taxpayer funds, so, too, were public school newspapers funded at least in part by public money. Public officials had been prohibited from censoring such public forums because of the First Amendment.

The Tinker decision not only brought school newspapers "out of the closet" and allowed them to discuss significant student issues and even openly criticize administrative policies and decisions, but it also fundamentally altered school policies affecting student dress codes, hair policies and other such fundamental "rights."

It was only 20 years ago when high school girls had to wear knee-length dresses to school - even if it was 15 degrees below zero. Boys' hair could not touch their ears. Through rigid, mandatory dress codes, officials had been given the power to "clone" students, not only in what they learned but in how they looked.

Because of Tinker, school publications in recent years have been allowed to write and react to many important social issues affecting youth today, including teen pregnancy, suicide, drug abuse, alcoholism, sexually transmitted diseases, etc. I maintain that wellwritten articles on such topics have done a great service in helping youth cope with and understand these complex problems. School newspapers have proven they can deal with such issues in a mature and meaningful way. These, after all, were student newspapers dealing with real-life student concerns from the students' perspectives.

The Hazelwood students had attempted to write articles dealing with teen pregnancy and the effect of divorce on children. No one alleged these articles were libelous, an invasion of privacy or even disruptive to the school. The school principal believed the topics were not suitable for discussion in a high school newspaper. He cut them from the paper before publication, without telling the students.

There is real danger in granting public school and college officials - who are no less government officials than the town mayor or members of Congress - the power to stop or curtail legitimate free expression. Thanks to this latest action of the court, Big Brother is alive and kicking with new vigor in American education. And students' legitimate free discussion of important though controversial issues will suffer.

What effect this decision will have on college student expression and student publications is still undetermined. The latest decision at least alluded to perhaps a different standard being applied to college media and free expression. It may take some future court case to decide this issue.

It's ironic in many ways that the court would change the Tinker standard at this time - a time when American youth may have more serious social problems to deal with than at any other time. January has been celebrated as "Campus Freedom of the Press Month" for the past several years. And, today, Jan. 19, is "Campus Freedom of the Press Day."

It can be argued that there is always a need to balance authoritarian control against individual liberties. But if American democracy cannot be practiced in American public schools and colleges, where are future generations to learn its importance and appreciate its broad freedoms? This seemingly little case involving high school free expression may indeed impact all of us as time goes by.

The crowd's behavior at Ahearn is not the only example of society's bias, but it is obvious and typifies American racism of the '80s.

Americans are above direct insults, but not above insults altogether. We can send our children to the same school, but we still forbid them from talking to "different" people. We are equal on the outside, but often prejudiced on the inside.

Overkill means grade insurance

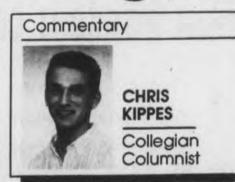

I've had pangs of guilt for the last month, and they've left me feeling quite hopeless. During the final days of last semester when it seemed the future of Chris Kippes hung in the balance, I created a monster - or, more accurately, my word processor and I did.

The assignment seemed impossible enough: my history professor wanted an essay that would incorporate all we had read and all he had told us into one glorious final effort of unspecified length. What I left in his mailbox was, unspecifically, HUGE. If I had succeeded in efficiently and succinctly rehashing the major points of the course, I'd feel no remorse. But my rhapsody on the 20th century went on and on, ad infinitum. I unabashedly beat the proverbial horse until it was dead, rigid...rancid. Armed with my word processor, my iron constitution and my flair for stretching the most banal point into pages of lofty, affected rhetoric, I was able to pull two successive allnighters, 11 half-read paperback books and a semester's worth of bleary lecture notes into one all-encompassing, quasi-coherent tome. My end product, my pride and joy, was a 16-page mammoth of unenlightened thought that I could proudly call my own, garnished with a cute allusion to "MASH" that just barely applied to my paper's discussion on the Korean War.

Motivated by anxiety about my future and paranoia about my grades, I had done the only natural thing: I had gone on and on, thinking that I needed to touch all the bases and provide a surfeit of examples. My history final was much too large and much too pretentious — a shining example of the new trend in college writing: rhetorical overkill. From its frayed, perforated edges to its jagged, near letter-quality printing, my final effort reeked of word processing but, happily, weighed in at an A. In other words, I'd done enough...and, then, enough again.

An anxious student and a word processor are a dangerous combination. I've proven it time and again, and I'm not the only one. In a sudden fit of creativity, the thoughts will fly, and if the writer's typing is up to the task, it is all captured forever - the writer's cathartic contribution to the information glut.

There's no denying that more words seem better, seem more knowledgeable. Prolific, unsubstantive writers like William F. Buckley or Ayn Rand would have lost favor long ago if man survived on substance alone. But Buckley, Rand and people like them have just kept writing and writing, mystifying us all with great lengths of text.

Winning in football means going that extra yard. Winning in college has turned into going that extra page.

Under exam-time stress it all makes perfect sense. The paper represents the moment of truth - judgment day. When the papers are passed down the rows, every student is curious about how his peers have performed, and, given the opportunity, the truly conscientious would compare efforts by actually reading each other's work.

But the day of reckoning leaves no time for such close scrutiny. The only quick form of juxtaposition, the only available way to bolster a shaky self-confidence, is to physically weigh the papers as they are handed down the row. When things happen this fast, heaviness simply must work. It satisfies a frantic mind to know its product is big and long and, therefore, great.

So when history exams are handed in, I can laugh smugly to myself, comfortable in my knowledge that the stapler jammed on my first try. And I can smile a sympathetic grin as my neighbor sweats and fidgets, wondering if his blue book will ever be enough.

After starting over, Gary comes home

By Erwin Seba Government Editor

OTTAWA - A short woman with white hair, dressed in blue, walked around the wall of 50 reporters, television and still photographers and sound technicians bunched in front of former Sen. Gary Hart.

"Is Lee here? Is his wife with him?" she asked, as she tried to break through the crowd next to the news people.

"Oh, she's with him. Oh, good," the woman said, clapping her hands after seeing Lee Hart next to Gary

Like the other 350 to 500 Ottawa residents who gathered Saturday in the lunchroom of the Ottawa Middle School, she had come to see "Gary" and "Lee" return home.

Most of the people who came to see the Harts during the public reception were there to shake hands, offer words of encouragement or see how the couple had changed since Hart reentered the presidential race in December.

Hart withdrew from the race last May after news reports revealed his relationship with Miami model/actress Donna Rice.

Beth Fitzgerald craned her neck to see Hart as he moved around the room with the television cameras, microphones and reporters still encircling him.

"I'm just here because of Ottawa," she said. When asked if she would vote for Hart, Fitzgerald said, "I don't think

"I'm not a Democrat, anyway," she said.

Eileen Wiltse stood on top of a chair to see the Harts.

"His wife is very attractive," she Wiltse said she could not vote for Hart.

"I just don't like the man, but I admire his wife a lot," Wiltse said. When asked why she would not vote for Hart, Wiltse bent down and whispered, "Because of the Donna Rice incident. And I think it's a shame because he would have been a good president."

Wiltse was asked if - under similar circumstances - she would have remained married to her husband as

Lee Hart did. "Probably, because there are children. That's why I admire her,"

"They ought to run her for president," Wiltse said.

The media seemed to allow enough people at the reception through their cordon to provide photo opportunities.

A boy stepped through and offered Hart a piece of paper.

"I got your wife's autograph first," the boy said.

"You got your priorities right," Hart said.

Cover-up alleged in smoking case

By The Associated Press

NEWARK, N.J. — Documents allegedly detailing how the tobacco industry covered up the dangers of cigarettes for years could be revealed in a lawsuit filed by a veteran smoker who later died of lung cancer, attorneys say.

The case of Rose and Antonio Cipollone could show the inner workings of the tobacco industry in unprecedented detail, according to one follower of such tobacco liability suits.

Information obtained by the plaintiffs details how cigarette companies stifled research into a safer cigarette, covered up what they knew about the dangers of smoking and influenced public opinion, said Richard Daynard, a law professor at Northeastern University in Boston and co-founder of the Tobacco Products Liability Project, an anti-tobacco legal clearinghouse.

"Whether Cipollone wins or loses, the cat is out of the bag," he said. A member of the defense team acknowledged the case is unique because of the internal documents involved, but said testimony will put them in context.

Jury selection began Thursday, nearly five years after the Cipollones sued the manufacturers of the cigarette brands Mrs. Cipollone smoked for 40 years. Opening arguments are scheduled for Jan. 27.

She died in 1984, but her husband carried on the suit, which charges that Philip Morris Inc., Liggett Group Inc. and Lorillard Inc. were negligent and liable for her lung cancer.

Critical pre-trial rulings appear to have limited Cipollone's chances. But his attorney, Marc Z. Edell, says he sees a chance for the first victory in a liability suit against cigarette makers.

The case comes to trial before U.S. District Judge H. Lee Sarokin while a similiar one continues at trial in Lexington, Miss.

No one suing a tobacco company for health complications from smoking has ever been granted damages. Fewer than 10 such cases have gone before a jury since World War II. Most faded away because the plaintiffs lacked the resources to fight the well-financed tobacco companies or because a judge dismissed them.

But more than 100 cases are pending and regardless of which side wins the Cipollone suit, it is important for two reasons: the decisions on pretrial issues and the sensitive company documents expected to come to light.

Movie viewers break record

By David Hartman Collegian Reporter

While most students were taking advantage of the three-day weekend for a little rest and relaxation, a group of Haymaker Hall residents was trying to get into the record books.

Residents of third floor Haymaker spent the weekend trying to break the campus record for movie viewing. Bob Copple, senior in industrial engineering and third floor Haymaker resident, said the old record was 53 hours and 52 minutes, set by students on fifth floor Haymaker in the fall of 1986.

The group of approximately 30 students began watching movies at 4 p.m. Friday and planned to continue watching them until at least 4 p.m. Monday, setting a 72-hour record, he said. In order for the record to be valid, at least one student had to be watching the movies at all times.

Before a new record could be attempted, permission first had to be obtained from the residence hall governing board, since the marathon was a social activity, Copple said. The students then borrowed the hall video cassette recorder and brought movies from home. Some

Convicted Nazi dies prior to execution

By The Associated Press

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia — Andrija Artukovic, a convicted war criminal and former internal affairs minister in the Nazi Puppet state of Croatia during World War II, has died in jail, the official Tanjug news agency said today.

He died Saturday at age 88, the agency said.

Artukovic, known as the "Butcher of the Balkans," was extradited from the United States in February 1986.

Three months later, he was sentenced to death by firing squad after being convicted of war crimes in the Croatian capital of Zagreb.

Tanjug said Artukovic died in the hospital at Zagreb's penitentiary, but did not give the direct cause of death. It said the president of Zagreb's district court had ruled that Artukovic's remains be buried unmarked at an unspecified location.

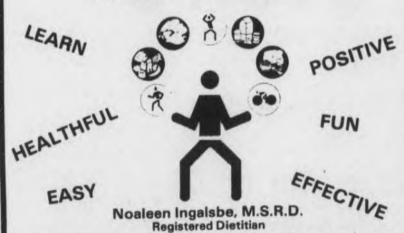

Artukovic has been suffereing from general and cerebral sclerosis and temporary senility, according to his lawyer and the Tanjug report.

The news agency said the latest medical bulletin released last spring showed Artukovic was losing weight and suffering from anemia.

Staff/John La Barge Brothers Tavern is an Aggieville bar that has undergone a change of ownership and remained open despite the new drinking laws.

Aggieville experiencing effects of drinking laws

By Chuck Horner Staff Writer

Beer is a commodity that has contributed heavily to the popularity and prosperity of Aggieville. By virtue of the laws governing its sale and consumption, it is also contributing to the complexity of sales and presenting management challenges for some bar owners.

In past months, Aggieville has seen closings of bars or changes of ownership, and the changes may not have yet fully run their courses, according to some Aggieville merchants.

In 1986, some merchants forecast a bleak future for some Aggieville bars as a result of the drinking law change. However, bar owners and operators and the leadership of the Aggieville Merchants Association remain optimistic about the future of Aggieville.

In 1937 the Kansas Legislature enacted laws establishing 18 as the minimum drinking age. In 1949 the law was amended to differentiate between beer containing more or less than 3.2 percent alcohol, making it illegal to serve beer containing more than 3.2 percent alcohol to anyone under the age of 21.

In 1985, following a nationwide trend based on new federal legislation, Kansas enacted laws that progressively made it illegal for anyone under the age of 21 to buy or consume beer.

Aggieville has long been a bastion for K-State students seeking good times and relief from academic worries. When the minimum drinking age was 18, nearly the entire student body met the criteria and bars flourished, but the amended law excluded as much as 75 to 80 percent of the student body from legal drinking.

"Having 80 percent of the students no longer eligible to drink has an impact not only on the bars but also on the carryover trade for other businesses," said Brian Taylor, president of the Aggieville Merchants Association.

"There may be a sifting-out process as merchants match their business to the market," said Karen Davis, assistant director for community development in Manhattan.

"Aggieville has definitely had its ups and downs, and the drinking law changes have had an impact, but the leadership of the Aggieville Merchants Association is strong," she said.

said.

"It has been our policy to keep out anyone under 21 because of the danger of them drinking illegally. If we can find a suitable way to keep them from drinking, we may change our policy. But putting a stamp on people's hands is not working, as evidenced by the problems some of the other drinking establishments have had with underage drinking."

- Eldon Clark

"When three-fourths of the students are under 21, there is a cutback in business," said Eldon Clark, manager of Dark Horse Tavern.

"It has been our policy to keep out anyone under 21 because of the danger of them drinking illegally. If we can find a suitable way to keep them from drinking, we may change our policy. But putting a stamp on people's hands is not working, as evidenced by the problems some of the other drinking establishments have had with underage drinking," he said.

But not all businesses are experiencing difficulties because of the new legislation.

Terry Ray of Ray Enterprises said two of the three drinking establishments controlled by Ray Enterprises just had their best year ever in terms of sales.

"When 80 percent of the student population is under 21, there is bound to be an impact, as evidenced by the closing of the Rockin' K Bar, Mannequins, Mr. K's and Bonkers," he said.

"I think we have leveled off, but this is a free enterprise system, so there will always be someone who will come in and think they can do better. There is never a status quo," Ray said.

"Several factors have contributed to the downturn in Aggieville, and the drinking age law changes have had a major impact," said John Heritage, owner of The Sound Shop.

"When 75 percent of the students can no longer come down and have a beer as I did when I went to K-State, then Aggieville loses the reputation it's had for all these years," he said.

There has been a gradual change from bars to the nicer shops, such as clothing and audio shops, Heritage

"When the drinking age changed, are that really hurt, and it's very obvisaid.

ous to see that's what caused the demise of drinking establishments in Aggieville," he said.

"Aggieville has always been up and down, but it will do fine," he added.

Aggieville is still considered a good investment prospect despite the instability.

Daniel Weir, commercial real estate properties agent for Coldwell Banker Hallmark Homes Inc., said he has more buyers than sellers for most businesses in Aggieville and there is interest in purchasing Aggieville drinking establishments.

He said although he currently has none of the bars or tavems listed for sale, if the right operator with the right price came along, any one of them could be sold.

"Aggieville still represents a good investment in the tavern business if the operator addresses the entire market spectrum. People go to the bars for social interaction, and although alcohol may serve as a lubricant for that interaction, people are not there just to drink," Weir said.

Law requires 2.0 GPA for students to get aid

By Susan L'Ecuyer Agri/Business Editor

Students who receive federal financial aid must now meet two criteria by the end of their sophomore year in order to continue receiving that aid, according to federal regulations.

The Reauthorization Acts of 1986 now require that students who have completed 60 credit hours of coursework at K-State demonstrate a 2.0 grade point average to remain eligible for federal financial aid.

Students who receive aid in the form of Pell Grants, the State of Kansas scholarships or college Work Study programs will be affected.

Federal loan programs that are also included on the list are the Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grant, the Perkins Loan (formerly the National Direct Student Loan), the Guaranteed Student Loan, the Supplemental Loan for Students and the PLUS Loan.

Lorene Dahm, administrative officer in the Office of Student Financial Assistance, said the 2.0 GPA requirement had not been a factor in determining satisfactory academic progress for federal financial aid eligibility.

"I anticipate that students who receive these letters will be confused."

-Lorene Dahm

Dahm stressed that transfer students must complete the 60-hour requirement at K-State before the 2.0 GPA requirement affects them.

"Only those hours that have been completed at K-State apply," she

Those students who fail to comply with these requirements will be notified by the financial aid office that they have been put on financial aid warning for a semester.

Dahm said students who receive the warnings may not be aware of the requirements since the new regulations just took effect in the fall of 1987.

"I anticipate that students who receive these letters will be confused," Dahm said.

At the end of the semester, the student's performance will be evaluated, and eligibility for federal financial aid will be reinstated to satisfactory progress if the deficiency in either the hours or GPA is removed.

If a student does not remove the deficiency, he or she will be put on exclusion and will not be able to receive federal financial aid, Dahm said. A student may be reinstated if they meet the requirements for satisfactory academic progress.

Tort reforms won't affect student fees, officials say

By Karen Allen Staff Writer

Proposed reforms in the civil justice, or tort, system have some student health users worried about a fee increase, but K-State officials said their fears are unfounded.

The Kansas Supreme Court recently ruled that certain medical malpractice reform laws were unconstitutional. The laws are invalid unless they are changed to apply the reforms to all classes of lawsuits. In response to this ruling, the 1988 Kansas Legislature will examine a group of "tort reform" bills.

Any changes in the reform laws will have little effect on the K-State community, said Dr. Robert Tout, director of Lafene Student Health Center.

Although Lafene doctors currently pay for their own malpractice insurance, their salaries are adjusted to cover the cost, Tout said. At least 25 percent of Lafene's 1988 budget of $2,609,000 goes toward doctors' salaries.

The operating budget for Lafene accounts for every aspect of the center's operation, Tout said. It is compiled from a $60-per-semester charge assessed to each full-time student. The center does not receive any other University, state or federal money, he said.

Every effort will be made to keep the semester cost at $60 per student, he said, adding that the Lafene hospital and kitchen were closed to curtail expenses.

Doctors at Lafene pay some of the lowest malpractice premiums in the state, Tout said.

"We're in a low-risk group," he said. "I am unaware of anyone (in the state) who pays a lower premium."

Lafene is in a low-risk group because doctors do not perform surgery or use experimental drugs, Tout said. Tout is working with the administration on a plan that would separate the costs for malpractice insurance from the doctors' salaries.

"We are trying to get away from salary adjustment," he said.

Separating the two costs would eliminate several problems, said Robert Krause, vice president for institutional advancement.

"Right now we have the question of whether the adjustment covers all of it (the malpractice premium) or part of it," he said.

Krause echoed Tout's statement that the student health fee would not increase.

The medical profession has faced rising rates for malpractice premiums in recent years. Some doctors, including Tout, believe a limit placed on jury awards in injury suits would affect those premiums.

"The awards are out of reason in some cases," Tout said.

Tax changes

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Even if you've learned enough about the new tax law to file your return this year, it's no time to quit.

The law is still changing, and you may need to adjust your withholding again this year to reflect those changes. That would mean filling out another W-4 form and giving it to your employer.

The changes that took effect Jan 1, 1988, are not nearly so numerous as last year's but they will still affect millions of tax returns. Here are some of the major new provisions:

RATES: In 1987 there were five tax rates, ranging from 11 percent to 38.5 percent. The Reagan administration and members of Congress who wrote the new law like to say it has only two marginal tax rates but there really are three: 15 percent, 28 percent and 33 percent.

The 15 percent rate is the only one that most taxpayers will face. It applies to taxable income (after deductions and exemptions) up to $29,750 for couples filing jointly and up to $17,850 for singles.

The 28 percent rate hits the next step of taxable income: between $29,751 and $71,900 for couples and between $17,851 and $43,150 for singles.

The 33 percent rate hits the next step of income, and the top figure to which it applies depends on how many personal exemptions you claim. A couple with no children would pay the 33 percent rate on taxable income between $71,901 and $149,250; for each additional exemption, the $149,250 figure would rise by $10,920. A single taxpayer claiming only one exemption would pay 33 percent on taxable income between $43,151 and $89,560.

Once taxable income exceeds the upper limits of those ranges, the additional amount is taxed at 28 percent. Applying the 33 percent rate to a portion of upper-income earnings has the effect of subjecting these taxpayers' entire income to a flat rate of 28

call for planning which it applies depends on how percent.

were allowed to exempt from taxation $1,900 for yourself, your spouse and each dependent you claimed. For 1988 earnings, that rises to $1,950.

TIONS: Non-itemizers were allowed a standard deduction of $2,540 (single) or $3,760 (couple filing jointly) for 1987. Those 65 or older or blind got more. For 1988 the figures go up to $3,000 and $5,000 with additions for elderly or blind.

This was 65 percent deductible for 1987. Only 40 percent may be deducted when your 1988 return is filed a year from now.

MORTGAGE INTEREST:
Only interest on the principal home and one other home is deductible; the deduction is allowed only on the first $1 million of debt to acquire or improve the home. There is a $100,000 limit on deductible homeequity loans.

INVESTMENT INTEREST:
The deductible portion of investment interest that exceeds investment income is now a maximum of $4,000 for joint returns and singles or $2,000 for couples filing separately.

the maximum tax on profits from assets owned more than six months was 28 percent. In 1988 the minimum holding period is more than one year and the maximum rate is 33 percent.

ESTIMATED TAXES: You generally must pay in advance, through wage withholding or quarterly payments on non-wage income.

■ IRA PAYOUTS: If your age reached 70½ in 1987, you face a penalty unless you begin taking distributions from your Individual Retirement Account by April 1,

PASSPORTS AND ALIENS:
Any American applying for or renewing a passport or any alien seeking permanent residency must furnish certain information to the IRS, including Social Security number and tax filing history.

Legislators visited by students selling 'Margin' proposal

By The Collegian Staff

Associated Students of Kansas is sponsoring a group of 200 students as it lobbies the Kansas Legislature today in Topeka in an effort to show support for the Margin of Excellence plan.

MOE is a three-year plan designed by the Kansas Board of Regents. Its purpose is to upgrade the six state universities through increased appropriations in the areas of faculty, salaries and instructional programs.

Students will first be addressed by Gov. Mike Hayden in the Capitol Rotunda. ASK representatives will then meet with legislative leaders, and the lobbying students will divide into small groups to meet with their representatives.

Jennifer Leeds, ASK campus director and junior in political science and economics, said the most important part of ASK's platform attending is a very visible and is to see that an increase in student salaries results from an increase in tuition. This can be done through additional scholarship programs or through an increase in Work Study programs, she said. ASK will also lobby for an increase in faculty salaries, Leeds

"We want to see if we can get a larger increase or at least see if the legislators have the same ideas that we do," Leeds said.

K-State faculty are scheduled for a 7.9 percent salary increase if Hayden's budget proposal is passed by the Legislature without

At least 60 students from K-State will be attending the lobbying session, Leeds said. In addition, the University of Kansas plans to send at least 100 students, and the other regents institutions are sending students as well.

Students may never face financial aid delays again

By Nancy Chartrand Staff Writer

Those students who faced delays receiving financial assistance checks last semester will be happy to know that most of the problems have been alleviated.

"The fall semester delays were a combination of late applications and students who were selected for documentation," said Larry Viterna, director of student financial assistance.

Some students did not receive their Pell Grant checks until Dec. 1.

Last fall was the first time applications for Guaranteed Student Loans were included in the ACT Family Financial Statement forms, he said, adding that the combination made the volume of applications that had to be processed much larger than usual.

Because of this large volume, guarantee agencies, which ensure that students have no loan defaults or owe money, had to change the way in which they process financial infornew process also caused delays.

Another delay for some students is buted to a lack of preparation by the documentation of their applications.

Viterna said 30 percent of the applications are selected for verification, which lengthens the process.

Two items that tend to be selected for verification are marital status and dependency.

This semester has gone very well," Vitema said. "Everything that we could possibly do (to get the checks in on time) we did."

When students come in for the fall semester, they either haven't completed their paperwork, haven't had their application verified or the lender hasn't processed the application," he said. "But in the spring, it's a routine matter."

Loans will continue to be approved for the first eight weeks of classes, Moeder said. They can be issued to students for up to two-thirds of the students' enrollment fees. Repayment periods may not exceed 90 days or extend into the final two weeks of the semester.

Viterna recommended that in order for students to receive their checks on time next fall, they should have their applications in by March 15. If students have any questions, he suggested they make an appointment with a counselor.

Child with AIDS denied help; conflict separates community

By The Associated Press

ANNAPOLIS, Calif. - A refusal by volunteer firefighters to help a baby with AIDS at a monastery that cares for unwanted infants has left residents of this rugged coastal town wrestling with questions of compassion, communicable disease and fear.

"Some are lining up behind the fire department and some are lining up behind Starcross (Monastery)," said Sonoma County Supervisor Ernie Carpenter.

Although the Annapolis fire department agreed last week to respond to such calls in the future, one firefighter quit, saying he was frightened because he had not been trained to deal with victims of acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

Monastery leaders say the incident has fanned hostility that has flared occasionally since Starcross began accepting AIDS-stricken babies a year ago in this rural community about 100 miles north of San Francisco.

People are angry that firefighters did not respond, "but again they blame Starcross for not being ready for their own emergency," said Rae Brodjeski, a 21-year resident of Annapolis and the town's postmistress at a tiny, one-room structure built in 1902. On the night of Dec. 21, workers at Starcross dialed 911 to report 1-year-old Aaron appeared to be choking.

The county fire dispatcher radioed the Annapolis Volunteer Fire Brigade. When they declined to respond, the fire crew in Sea Ranch, about 15 minutes away, was called.

The Sea Ranch crew administered oxygen to the baby, who was taken to a hospital about 30 miles away and died of pneumonia two days later. Authorities said Aaron's death was not due to delays in medical treatment.

Delbert Thyarks, an 11-year veteran of the fire department, said he declined to answer the Starcross call because he hadn't been trained in emergency medical care for AIDS patients. Now he feels angry, misunderstood, misquoted, and he's quitting.

"I said I wasn't going there and I meant it," he said. "If I had the proper training and knew more about the AIDS virus, maybe it would be different. I don't know that much about it and I'm scared."

K-State groups consider gender policy

By Brian Hummell Collegian Reporter

Final steps are being taken to form a University-wide gender policy that would address sexism in the classroom and on the job.

The nine-woman, seven-man Task Force on Nonsexist Environment, which was formed in February 1987, presented a gender policy to President Jon Wefald on Oct. 27 of last year. Less than a month later, Wefald sent the policy to the heads of the Council of Deans, Faculty Senate, Student Senate, the Classified Affairs Committee, the Commission on the Status of Women, and the mend changes or improvements to the policy by Feb. 1, after which time he will approve or reject the policy.

Charles Reagan, assistant to the president, said none of the recommendations have been submitted, but that he expects all of the groups to meet the deadline. Reagan would not speculate on what the groups might recommend, but he did say "we wouldn't have sent it out if we didn't think it was a good plan."

The policy has a 20-point plan Wefald asked the groups to recom- focusing on awareness, education and evaluation. Sandra Coyner, Women's Studies Program director and task force member, said she believes the most important point of the policy is the formulation of a presidential advisory committee. The committee would, under provisions of the policy, include faculty, staff and students who would evaluate the progress of the policy and report to the president.

Coyner said she thinks the gender policy should be adopted.

"Many learning and working environments at Kansas State are still sexist," she said.

The policy that Coyner and the other task force members drafted has as its goal the creation of "an overall environment at Kansas State University in which all students, faculty and staff interact with each other solely on the basis of their individual strengths and characteristics without having those interactions contaminated by generalizations, stereotypes or other valuations based on gender." Coyner said she expects the policy to be approved but not understood because the policy stresses a positive

Reagan, who describes the policy as an "educational program that deals with prejudices and attitudes," said any funding for the program would come from Provost James Coffman's budget and other existing budgets, as well as an increase in the Women's Studies Program budget. "This is a policy for the people," Coyner said. "With everybody putting in a little bit of time, we won't have to spend a whole lot of money." Coyner said the key problem is an attitude of stereotyping people by treating them as a member of a group instead of recognizing their uniqueness as an individual

"The task force has a big hope that we can establish a climate at KSU where people do the right thing and it is unthinkable to do anything else."

'Cats punish Oklahoma

By Tom Morris Sports Writer

It was as close to perfection as a men's college basketball team is going to get.

Behind Mitch Richmond's 33 points, an unrelenting defense, a patient offense and clutch free-throw shooting throughout the game, K-State managed to halt the thoroughbred University of Oklahoma Sooners, 69-62, Saturday in Ahearn Field House.

The win against previously No. 3-ranked OU - which dropped to No. 11 this week following consecutive losses to Louisiana State University and K-State — motivated Wildcat Coach Lon Kruger to say: "This was a special win" - a strong statement from a normally low-keyed coach.

As in the loss to LSU, the Sooners were outscored not from the field but at the charity stripe. K-State hit 23 of its 25 attempts as compared to OU's 12 of 13.

"The thing that sticks out in our last two losses is that we're getting beat by 20 shots at the free-throw line and I find that's kind of hard to understand," OU coach Billy Tubbs said.

Kruger said he had spoken to his squad about their free-throw shooting prior to the

"We talked a lot about the fact that we can't give away points, and obviously (our) concentration paid off," Kruger said.

Starting center Fred McCoy, who shot four of four from the line and finished with 16 points and 13 rebounds, took Kruger's words to heart.

"I practiced on my free throws all this week. The coaches have told us we have all missed some big free throws and I couldn't see that happening again," McCoy said.

K-State's defense held Oklahoma in check in the first half until Richmond got untracked. With the score tied at 8-8, the 6-foot-5 senior guard/forward scored 13 straight points to put K-State up by four with 11:38 left to play. Richmond finished the game with nine of 18 shooting from the field, and, more importantly, wasn't whistled for a foul.

"That was one of my best. You can't ask for more than that," Richmond said. "Mitch's game was definitely phenomonal or whatever word you want to use to describe it. We had to have it," guard Steve Henson

K-State never trailed again in the first half and led by as many as five points — thanks largely to OU switching to a zone defense before the Sooners closed K-State's advantage to three at the intermission.

In the second half, Oklahoma rebounded to take a four-point lead with 9:15 to go after the 'Cats missed easy shots three straight trips down the floor. But K-State made 16 consecutive one-and-one attempts down the stretch to ice the seven-point win.

"(K-State) had a great game," Tubbs said. "They took us out of our game plan and forced us to play theirs."

With just three turnovers against OU's full-court pressure, it was simple to keep the Sooners from playing their favorite brand of basketball - run and gun.

"That was the key. You've got to start there to have a chance against Oklahoma,"

"We talked about holding them in the 70s," Henson said. "We knew we wouldn't have any problem with their good transition game because we weren't going to run with them. Their easy baskets come off the press."

Lady Cats find conference tough

Elyse Funk makes a diving pass under pressure from the Oklahoma defense Saturday night. The Lady Cats were defeated by OU, 96-65.

By Daran Neuschafer Sports Writer

Do you want to know how the competition of women's basketball in the Big Eight Conference ranks with the rest of the country?

Just ask any member of the K-State Lady Cat team. The Lady Cats have played two games thus far in the Big Eight schedule and have been beaten soundly in both. The latest trouncing took place Saturday in Ahearn Field House, as K-State was defeated, 96-65, by the Oklahoma

The 31-point margin was the largest of any loss suffered this year by the Lady Cats, who fell to 7-7 overall and 0-2 in Big Eight Conference play. Oklahoma improved to 9-5 overall and 2-0 in the conference.

After early season success with a core of newcomers leading the way, K-State has been a team trying to find its identity of late, and Saturday's performance was no exception.

"Good teams are going to take advantage of every mistake, every turnover, and every block out missed, and that's exactly what Oklahoma did," Lady Cat Coach Matilda Mossman said.

K-State did make a lot of mistakes for the Sooners to take advantage of. The Lady Cats turned the ball over 34 times compared to only 16 turnovers by Oklahoma. The Sooners handed out 29 assists while K-State only dished out 13. And Oklahoma shot 46 percent from the field, compared to K-State's 36 percent.

Even though the statistics sheet told the story, Mossman did not quite know where to begin when explaining her team's performance.

"When you're not shooting the ball well and making turnovers, you tend to get worried on the defensive end," she said. "That's what we did, and they got the offensive rebounds and stuck them back in."

K-State got out of the gate quickly when freshman forward Diana Miller hit a 12-foot jump shot from the right wing to give the Lady Cats their first points. Another freshman, guard Nadira Hazim, hit a pair of free throws to extend the K-State lead to 4-0, one minute into the game.

But then somebody must have told the Lady Cats the game was over even though it had just started. Because for the next six minutes it was all crimson and white. Oklahoma scored the next 18 points before junior center Stacey Boyle got K-State going again with a bucket from underneath.

Oklahoma continued its strong showing on the offensive end for the remainder of the half, as K-State never got closer than 21-10. The Sooners, behind Jo Moseley's ten points, rolled to a 51-31 halftime lead.

K-State did attempt to make a game of it at the outset of the second period. With Hazim scoring five points and Boyle scoring four points in an 11-2 run, the Lady Cats were able to cut the Sooner lead to 53-42, with 17 minutes remaining in the game. But Oklahoma managed to get things rolling again and used some more sloppy play by the Lady Cats to extend its lead to 73-50 with just under ten minutes to play.

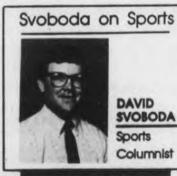

"Oklahoma did a good job of turning on the burner in the second half when we came to within 11, and we couldn't come back," Mossman said.

K-State got another fine performance from sophomore Janet Madsen. The 5-foot-9 forward from Elk River, Minn., scored 16 points to lead the Lady Cats in scoring. Most of Madsen's points resulted from offensive rebounds and free throws.

Even though Madsen was successful inside, Mossman was not pleased with the play of her other big people.

'Sweet Saturday' theme of the day

DAVID SVOBODA

Sports Columnist

It finally happened. I've been at K-State as either an undergraduate or graduate student for 51/2 years, and during that time K-State had never gained a home victory over the University of Oklahoma in basketball. Until Saturday. Or shall we make that "Sweet Saturday"?

Coach Billy Tubbs and his Sooners owned a five-game Aheam Field House winning streak going into Saturday's contest, and with a No. 3 national ranking and a scoring average of 110-plus points on their side, there was no reason to believe that the streak wouldn't reach six.

But after 40 minutes of action which left most Wildcat fans with only their cuticles to gnaw on (the fingernails were gone), K-State had escaped with a stunning 69-62 win.

And I had escaped the possibility of ending my schooling never having seen K-State beat the team I dislike the most — those big, bad, cocky, mouthy Sooners.

I had even contemplated going after my doctorate if K-State was unable to beat Oklahoma in Manhattan either this season or next. That's how desperate I was to see the Wildcats beat Billy's Boys.

As the K-State sports correspondent for the Kansas City Star and Times, I wasn't able to join about 5,000 of my fellow students celebrating the moment on the floor following the game, but I was with them in spirit. I think I might have even unconsciously pumped a fist into the air when the game was over.

The K-State sports information department reminds writers before each contest that cheering in the press box is not allowed, so I didn't yell like I would have liked — although it was pretty darn tempting.

My job was to make my way to the K-State locker room, gather quotes and get back to the press box in time to pound out a story. Going into a winning locker room following a game against Oklahoma sure felt strange. Not that I'm complaining, however. I'd like to do it again real soon. There are two big reasons I got to make that trip into a victorious Wildcat locker room Saturday night: one was the tempo of the game and the other was Mitch Richmond.

When K-State last knocked off Oklahoma in Manhattan in early 1982, Tyrone Adams, Randy Reed, Ed Nealy, Les Craft and Tim Jankovich were the starting five for Jack Hartman's crew that finished second in the Big Eight Conference.

There was no 45-second shot clock and no three-point shot back then, and those two factors contributed greatly to K-State's 47-42 triumph over the Sooners that season. Simply put, the Wildcats could take the air out of the ball and play a "four corners" (delay) offense for extended periods of time without risking losing the ball because the shot clock had expired.

It was possible to hold the ball for what today would seem like forever as long as you could pass it accurately and were careful on the dribble. Hartman's teams were well schooled in the fundamentals, so the delay game was a definite weapon in the arsenal.

Also, without the three-point shot, teams couldn't get an extra point every time they came down the court simply by hitting a shot from beyond 19 feet.

But today's game is different. With the shot clock, it's still possible to hold the ball, but not for as long. And with the three-point shot, teams can get back into a game quickly or run up the score in a hurry.

The challenge facing Lon Kruger and crew going into Saturday's game was how to stop Oklahoma from making the contest into a track meet in which more shots were launched from Pottawatomie County than from inside the paint under the basket.

It was a challenge point guard Steve Henson and company met with ice water in their veins and with a little help from OU's chief villain - Tubbs.

The Sooners played both man-to-man and zone defenses during the game, and Henson and mates were glad to see the zone. A manto-man is hard to hold the ball against unless you've got five great ball handlers on the floor. But the zone...

"I don't know if they didn't think they could play us man-to-man or what, but their zone let us pass the ball for 30 seconds, which is something you want to do against Oklahoma," Henson said.

Kruger said that he hadn't devised a specific way to slow down the Sooners prior to the contest, but that once Tubbs switched his defense to a zone that he told his troops to take some time off the shot clock before putting up a shot.

'Against (the man-to-man) we weren't holding it (the ball) that much, but against their zone we thought we'd take it down about 40 (seconds) before we took a shot," Kruger said.

The strategy worked perfectly, and K-State didn't allow the Sooners to get their vaunted fast-break offense working as a

Another key to Oklahoma's high-scoring offense is the way the Sooners play defense. After a made shot, the Sooners like to trap and full-court press, and K-State handled the pressure brilliantly.

With Henson and Richmond doing the ball handling, K-State turned the ball over against the press only once in the opening 20

Henson finished the night with just three turnovers. Remarkable.

"My goal for the game was to handle the press and not get any turnovers," Henson said

Congratulations, Steve, you did your job

But as well as Henson played, Richmond may have re-defined the word brilliant. He played the entire 40 minutes, was 9-of-18 from the floor, was 14-of-16 from the line, had nine rebounds and scored 33 points. Add to those numbers the fact that he had increased ball handling responsibilities and did not pick up a foul and you have a game simply as outstanding as has ever been played in Ahearn.

"He played a great game," Kruger said. "I don't ever remember him being out of control. When you've got the ball that much and so much is expected of you, your chances of making more bad decisions are really high, and he didn't make many."

I can't remember any, but I'm still on cloud nine and not yet thinking too clearly. Following the game, I told a fraternity brother that the feeling I had leaving Ahearn was the closest thing to sheer euphoria I've experienced in my years at K-State. And my fun couldn't have come at the expense of a nicer group of guys.

gon State in the 1981 NCAA tournament. "A let down is always a concern, and we have addressed that possibility. We just need to go out there and play as hard as we now know we can," Coach Lon Kruger said.

Tip-off is at 8:05 p.m. and the game will be televised by the Kansas State Network.

Wichita State, coached by former North Carolina assistant Eddie Fogler, has seen its share of action lately after playing seven games in the last 14 days.

"It has been a busy time of the year for us, but schedules are made out in advance so there's nothing really you can say about it," Fogler said. "We're bumped and bruised a little bit, but so is K-State and every other team this time of the year."

The Shockers owe two of their losses to potential NCAA tournament teams, Purdue and Southwest Missouri State, who also defeated the 'Cats.

Purdue slipped past Wichita State, 80-78, in overtime, while the Boilermakers dumped K-State, 101-72. The Shockers lost to SMSU, 58-56, and the 'Cats were dropped, 82-80, by the Bears in four overtimes.

Combined, Wichita State's five starters average 58 points per game — led by forward Sasha Radunovich's 12.2 - but Kruger is concerned about the Shockers' depth.

"They have excellent balance and that makes it difficult to key on one player," Kruger said.

The WSU-K-State rivalry is one of the most closely contested series around, with the 'Cats holding a slight 8-7 advantage. And Fogler appreciates the chance to play against the conference.

one of the "Big Three" schools in the state.

"The players enjoy the game, the students enjoy it and the faculty enjoys it. It's just great to be able to play K-State," Fogler said. NOTES: Wichita State has never won in Manhattan...guard Steve Henson has 72 assists compared to just 29 turnovers...Mitch Richmond has scored in double figures in 28 straight games. Probable Starters Henson then praised the players the Wildcats had practiced against all week. Though their names won't appear in the box score, the bench warmers made a difference.

"The trap we practiced against was a lot tougher than Oklahoma's. The guys we practice against every day made it a lot easier for us (against Oklahoma)," he said.

Oklahoma was led by heralded forward Harvey Grant with 19 points, but he shot a dismal five of 21 from the field. Center Stacey King had 15 points and guard Mookie Blaylock added 14 for the Sooners.

With the win, K-State's record goes to 8-4 overall and 1-0 in the Big Eight Conference. Oklahoma drops to 14-2 overall and 1-1 in ly dangerous nuclear weapons." Defense cuts made by the reforms would save $43.9 billion from fiscal years 1989 through 1993, according to a position paper on the budget proposal provided by the Hart campaign.

In response to a question from the audience following the address, Hart said the first action he would take as president would be to arrange a summit with Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev to cut the nuclear arsenals of the United States and the Soviet Union by 50 percent.

The change in the domestic budget that would help pay for the Strategic Investment Initiative would be the institution of an agricultural supply management plan to replace the current system of farm subsidies, Hart said.

The agricultural management plan would save $38.2 billion, according to the Hart campaign budget paper.

Neither Hart nor the position paper described the specific details of the proposed agricultural plan.

The current top tax rate of 33 percent would be maintained under his budget plan, said the former Colorado senator. According to the position paper, $55.8 billion would be added to the federal treasury from 1989 to 1993 if the tax rate is maintained at this level.

Only the wealthiest 2 percent of Americans would be in this tax bracket, Hart said. The 33 percent bracket would only be maintained until the deficit was resolved. "There will be no income tax increases on moderate- and low-income Americans," he said. The corporate tax rate would be increased from 34 percent to 35 percent, Hart said. He said he and his family have retired 75 percent of his accumulated 1984 campaign debt by contacting 30,000 new contributors across the

"I don't know if I remember him ever being out of control," Kruger said. "When you've got the ball that much and so much is expected of you, your chances of making bad decisions are really high and he didn't make many."

"Our performance shows that we can win if we play like that," Richmond said. "It will give us something to look at for the rest of the season."

Richmond's performance even garnered applause from Oklahoma Coach Billy Tubbs.

"I don't think we tried a lot of different things (defensively) on Richmond," he said. "He did a have a great game though...we're at the point where we ourselves are making some All-American candidates, but he's a great player and I'm not surprised he's doing the things he does."

House majority whip Tony Coelho, D-Calif., said that current counts by both the Democrats and Republicans show a close vote on Contra aid.

However, Senate minority leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., said he was uncertain about the prospects for renewed aid. "I frankly doubt there are enough votes for additional Contra aid," he said.

Nicaraguan Vice President Sergio Ramirez acknowledged Monday that the new steps announced Saturday night by President Daniel Ortega were aimed partly at influencing the Congress to reject more Contra aid. "I think it is a legitimate thing to try to influence the criterion of the Congress of the United States to try to stop the war in Central America," Ramirez said. "I don't think it is an illegitimate thing."

In an interview on NBC-TV's "Today" show, Ramirez said the renewal of U.S. aid would "sink the whole process of peace in Central America and be against the will of five Central American presidents."

Before the summit meeting, American officials had predicted that Ortega would make concessions but he went further than anticipated in lifting of the state of emergency and in agreeing to hold direct talks with Contra leaders for the first time. He also promised to release thousands of political prisoners if the cease-fire talks succeed.

Bombing suspects await dead polygamist's return

By The Associated Press

MARION, Utah - More than 150 officers wearing fatigues and packing automatic weapons ringed the compound of a slain rebel polygamist Monday as 14 relatives, including a suspect in a church bombing, holed up for a third day awaiting his "resurrection."

Relatives and authorities said Addam Swapp and 13 family members, including six children, were armed as they waited in a log house belonging to Vickie Singer.

She was one of two widows left by John Singer when he was gunned down by police nine years ago Monday.

Officers surrounded the 21/2 -acre homestead, in a mountainous ranching area 60 miles northeast of Salt Lake City, early Saturday after an explosion ripped through the Mormon church's Marion Stake Center a half mile away, causing an estimated $1 million damage.

"We just want to talk to them as possible suspects in this case," said

FBI Special Agent Cal Clegg. "The reason we don't walk away is that there is a fear in the community, and if they indeed did this, then their concerns are legitimate."

Police negotiators talked by telephone with Swapp on Saturday night, but were unable to make further contact.

Singer, who was with the Hitler Youth in pre-World War II Germany, was gunned down at the cabin on Jan. 18, 1979, by police seeking to arrest him for refusing to send his children to public school.

SPRING SPORTS TABLOID, Tuesday, January 19, 1988

K-State's club sports look to build, improve

By Russ Ewy Sports Writer

Rugby

Despite ending the season last year with a defeat by Kansas, K-State's rugby club is setting its hopes high for the 1988 spring

"For the last eight years our spring season has been geared totally toward the national championships, and that has been our goal for the spring season," former team captain Gregg Barnes said. "The defeat by Kansas has left us asking exactly what are we going to be playing for this spring. That was a question we had to all get together on and think about.

"I believe what we are going to do now is to emphasize the club side, rather than the collegiate side, in the spring."

The ruggers have strong returning personnel, and are going to insure the future strength of the club by implementing changes on the collegiate side.

"We're in pretty good shape as far as getting people back, so we're real lucky in that respect," Barnes said. "We will be losing some key players after this season and that's the reason we are concentrating on building the younger players right now on the collegiate side.

"The players who have only one season of eligiblity left will not play collegiate side at all. We are going to fill our collegiate team with players who have at least one season left, as well as those who have two and three seasons left, so we can build a squad that will be competing against all the other teams in the union for the championship next spring."

The rugby squad's high goals will be matched against some good competition.

"We are a lethal team whenever we step on the field and our opponents respect us for that. We are going to be playing some of the top club sides in the union and a few of them from out side of the union as well," Barnes said.

Crew

After finishing fourth at the Midwest Sprints, K-State's men's varsity crew is working to better that mark this spring. "We are going to have a tough time repeating," Crew Coach Don Rose said. "On the other hand, I think it's possible. We were only beaten once and were undefeated going into the regional championship where we finished fourth.

'We've been climbing every year from having no varsity crew, to placing eighth (in regional competiton), then to sixth place and on to last year's fourth place, so this year we're looking to improve on that."

The men's squad returns most members of the varsity boat that led them to six regatta championships last year, as well as a strong group of younger crew members contending for the open varsity spots.

"As far as the men go, we return the majority of the boat. We are only losing two or three," Rose said. "We had a good freshman novice squad last year and I think that some of those guys are going to be hard to keep out of that boat.'

K-State women's crew, coming off a seventh place finish at the Midwest Sprints, will try to put together a competitive boat for the spring.

"On the women's varsity, we lose six out of the nine that rowed in that boat, so that's a rebuilding boat for us," Rose said. "However, last year the freshman novice women's crew was well above average and so I look for the women improve over a

Soccer

K-State's soccer club is looking to better its tournament play as it gears up for its 1988 spring season. After losing the championship game in the Ed Chartrand Memorial Tournament last fall, the 'Cats are hoping history won't repeat itself.

"Hopefully, we will win one of the tournaments which we got second and third place in, but we haven't won one for a couple of years," said Darin Pritchett, soccer club representative. "We hope to win the Big Eight tournament. That's the big one we want to win."

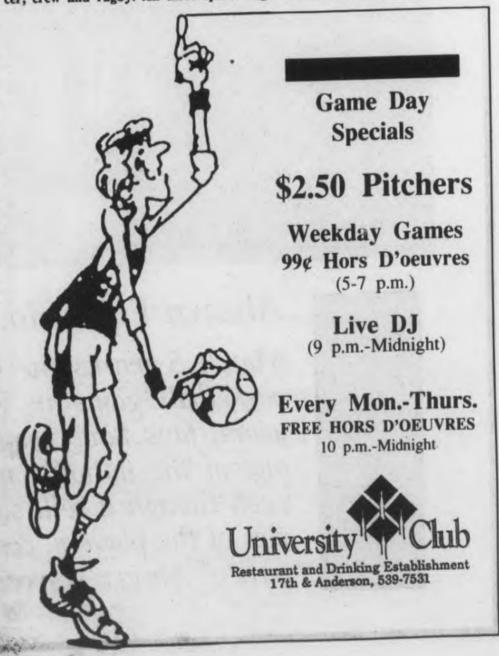

Better performance is not the only goal for the soccer club. It hopes to join the list of varsity sports at K-State.

"Our ultimate goal is to have a varsity soccer program here at K-State. However, we have problems with that due to Big Eight rules and because of University rules," Pritchett said. "The reason isn't because we're not ready, it's just because there are certain things that must be done before we can become a varsity team."

776-1919

Three sports that receive less attention but are still very popular at K-State are soccer, crew and rugby. All three sports begin their seasons later this spring.

SPRING SPORTS TABLOID, Tuesday, January 19, 1988 Recruiting, intensity keys

By Tom Morris Sports Writer

You've got to give head football Coach Stan Parrish credit.

After an 0-10-1 campaign last season. Parrish somehow maintained his sanity and optimism and hit the recruiting trail. Even with the burden of a losing-season monkey on his back, Parrish said Saturday's recruiting visit by several high school players to K-State was the "best group we've brought in" since he was hired in December 1985.

In addition, the Wildcats have already received oral commitments from four high school players and Parrish is raiding prep hotbeds such as Florida and Texas in the quest for both size and speed to bolster his

"We've been fortunate," Parrish said. "We didn't know coming out of the season how it was going to go.

"Obviously, (the University of) Kansas being in the search for a coach for a long period of time and the good groundwork we laid earlier helped us out. Knock on wood, so far things have gone well for us," he said.

Though K-State is still light-years away from competing with big-time colleges such as the University of Oklahoma for elite prep talent, Parrish said high school seniors who have visited here were impressed with the administration's dedication to the program and its coach.

Parrish has also focused his recruiting strategy almost entirely on the prep ranks - a drastic change from last year when 17 junior college recruits were signed.

"Last year we recruited junior colleges to strengthen the upper-class numbers and give us some bigger kids. Now we're almost exclusively recruting high school players," he said. "If we sign 30 recruits, we won't sign more than two or three juco

Feb. 11 is the first day prep athletes can sign national letters of intent. Until then, Parrish will continue his quest for a punter, defensive linemen and people with speed who can play the defensive corners.

But it doesn't end there. The winter conditioning program for current Wildcats began Monday, and spring drills open March 28. Spring drills last about one month and consist of 20 practices.

K-State will not have a spring game this year. Parrish said it is a must that every minute be spent on the practice field. But that doesn't mean drills won't be exciting. From the coach's mouth, it sounds as if no one has a set starting spot going into next

"This spring, we've got to get our personnel lined up where they belong," he said. "A lot of our young kids (redshirts in particular) will get a chance to show us what they can do. There will be a lot of positions up for grabs."

SPRING SPORTS TABLOID, Tuesday, January 19, 1988 Richmond latest of K-State greats

By Tom Morris Sports Writer

It seems as if everyone wants to talk to K-State's standout guard/forward Mitch Richmond these days, especially after his 33-point performance in a 69-62 upset win Saturday over previously third-ranked University of Oklahoma.

Sports Illustrated is contemplating a feature article on him and the Sporting News calls weekly to check up on the 6-foot-5, 225-pound senior. This is in addition to the massive media attention Richmond received prior to K-State's matchup with

Yes, everyone in sporting circles nationwide is becoming captivated by his oncourt presence. Everyone's talking about Richmond, and so far all the talk has been good. For example:

"Richmond has major-league moves, not only in the low-post area but off the dribble, and he has a perimeter game. He is a wing player off the dribble and he has a great ability to make the long jump shot under pressure," said Hubie Brown, former coach of the New York Knicks.

"Richmond should be a first-round pick in the next NBA draft. He can legitimately do it all. He is overshadowed in the Big Eight Conference by (University of Kansas') Danny Manning and (University of Missouri's) Derrick Chievous, but Richmond is the real deal," the Blue Ribbon College Basketball Yearbook said.

"He's more of an all-around player. Some of the other juco stars would just go out, do their part, and that's about it," said Wildcat guard Carlos Diggins, who while at Butler County Community College (El Dorado) played against former juco greats Keith Smart (now with Indiana) and Oklahoma State University's Todd Christian.

"If he doesn't make the pros, I'll eat my shoes," former NBA great Bob Lanier said.

When Richmond came to K-State via Moberly (Mo.) Junior College in 1986, there was considerable attention given to Norris Coleman and his continuing struggle with the NCAA to regain his eligibility following a high-school transcript snafu. Coleman eventually said goodbye to Manhattan and hello to the pros, leaving Richmond to the media vultures.

Richmond, though, hasn't been bothered by the "hype," as he calls it, as proven by his 22.7 points per game scoring

"I think I'm handling the media pressure really well. I'm not really thinking about what the media says. I just want to have a great senior year," Richmond said. "You've got to like the media pressure, but then again you realize people are going to be gunning for you because of what they've read. You just have to maintain."

Then there's "The Look." When he's on the playing floor, Richmond has such an intense game face that sports columnist Fred Mann of the Wichita Eagle-Beacon said Richmond would "scare someone to death this season." Is there anything special he does to prepare for a game?

"I just concentrate and try to get everyone emotionally involved and hyped up for the game. I just try to go out and make other people look at me, so they can see it in my eyes that we can win," Richmond said.

Now we'll talk nicknames. A player isn't truly initiated into the college basketball ranks unless he's tabbed with a nickname. Richmond has two.

The first nickname is "Smooth," which is what Richmond said he was called in high school. The other is a little more serious and was printed in Sports Illustrated's college basketball preview - "The Bitch." It doesn't sound humorous, but Richmond thinks it's funny.

"I think I got that in junior college. When I was coming out of high school, someone put that on my scouting report," he said. "It's pretty funny when you look at it. I laugh at that one.'

Most interviews with Richmond lead to talk of playing in the Olympics - "I sure would want to tryout," he said — and, eventually, the professional ranks.

Some speculation has been focused on the idea he might have some difficulty adjusting to life as a big guard in the NBA, but Richmond proved he could play that spot during the World University Games last summer in Yugoslavia with an average of 16.2 points per game over eight contests while leading the U.S. team to a silvermedal finish.

"There's no doubt in my mind (that he can play shooting guard in the NBA)," 'Cat Coach Lon Kruger said. "He's already comfortable out there, and as he moves out there exclusively, he's going to get more comfortable. He's the kind of kid who recognizes what he needs to work on.

When you put numbers on people, you sometimes lose perspectives. The bottom line on Mitch is that he's a player who can handle a couple of different positions very capably. He has talent, and that's what the scouts recognize."

Making transitions is something Richmond has become adjusted to. He was ineligible to compete in his freshman and first semester of his sophomore seasons at Boyd Anderson High School in Fort Lauderdale. Fla., and needed a summer course to obtain his diploma. Today, Richmond is on track and will receive a degree in social sciences

Even with two years of junior college under his belt to help him adjust to the big time, the transition to K-State wasn't entirely easy.

Yes, it was a big step for Richmond to come to a school with a rich basketball tradition such as K-State's. Maybe it helped that he was a little naive, so to speak. He knew about Rolando Blackman and Norris Coleman, and that's about it.

Still, it's only fitting that in the last magical season of Ahearn Field House, another court wizard in the form of Mitch Richmond is here to help make the transition to Fred Bramlage Coliseum a truly enjoyable

Daughter recounts memories of Ahearn

By Bill Lang Sports Writer

Kathleen Ronsee, daughter of the late Mike Ahearn, has a problem.

The problem is that most people don't know how to say her maiden name. It's a-HEARN, NOT A-hearn.

"It's not anybody's fault that they are pronouncing it wrong," she said. "It's just the way they were taught to say it.

"The way I figure it, most people haven't said my name right for about 30 or

For Kathleen and her family, the name Ahearn is something they are most proud of in a modest sort of way.

"Sure he did a lot for the K-State athletic department. He was just a father figure to me." -Kathleen Ronsee

"The field house is just a building made of stone," Kathleen said. "But it is quite an honor to have them name it after my father. I'm sure it is something that he never thought about happening or even cared Ahearn Field House, which opened its doors in 1950 after a 10-year struggle to get a new gymnasium, has been coined "the barn," a title Kathleen finds "terrible."

"How could they call a place like that a barn?" she said. "I'm proud of the place and I hope most K-State students are today."

Michael Francis Ahearn was considered a congenial, magnetic man and that is just how Ronsee remembers her father.

"He never showed his temper," she said. "If you did get in trouble with him, you knew it. But he very rarely showed his temper." Mike Ahearn arrived at K-State in 1904. One year later, he took over the coaching duties of football, basketball, baseball and tennis in addition to his regular teaching duties in the Department of Horticulture. In a few short years, he made the school realize athletics played a vital part in the atmosphere of the University.

In 1920, he resigned his teaching position and embarked on his 26-year tenure as K-State's athletic director.

Ahearn was a dedicated sportsman and fan of all forms of athletics, but Kathleen said without hesitation golf was his

"My father played golf every Sunday afternoon without fail," she said. "It was service in the morning and golf in the afternoon.

"I remember when Joe (Ronsee, her husband) and I were dating and decided to get married. I was going to introduce Joe to Dad at the house, but he had already taken off for golf with some friends. So we raced after him and caught up to him. Dad got out of the car and said 'Hi, nice to meet you and good luck.' And then Dad got back in the car and took off for the course."

For people who follow K-State, the name Mike Aheam is almost legendary. But as Kathleen sees it, he was just good father who did his job as an athletic

"Sure he did a lot for the K-State athletic department," she said. "He was just a father figure to me. He didn't bring his work home with that much.

"I didn't go to many games in those days," she added. "I probably went to more dances in Nichols Gymnasium than games. I wasn't that athletically-minded and Dad didn't try to make me that way. He let me enjoy what I wanted."

Joe said it was Aheam's love of athletics and kids that made him such a great person.

"He loved to teach athletics to kids," Joe said. "He wanted to teach those kids how to do every sport that he knew. He wasn't an expert on all the sports but he loved the kids so much and cared about them and he wanted to teach them so much."

Kathleen's son Chris, who was born after Ahearn passed away, has different memories of his grandfather. "I never really got to meet the man," he said. "He passed away before I was born. I get most of my information from Mom and Dad. From what I can gather, he was a man who cared about people a great deal and a great deal about athletics." And how will Kathleen and her family feel when the last game is played in Ahearn

Mar. 5 against Missouri? "It's going to be a sad experience," Kathleen said. "I just want K-State to win

Field House 'unique'

By The Collegian Staff

When the curtain rings down on basketball season in March, it will ring down on Ahearn Field House, too.

This season is Ahearn's 38th and last. Since the structure opened its doors in 1950, K-State teams have compiled a 362-95 record at home. Included in that total are six perfect seasons.

When then K-State Athletic Director Mike Ahearn began his push for a new gymnasium to replace the 2,800-seat Nichols gymnasium, he kicked it off with a student rally Apr. 16, 1940. Jack Gardner was K-State's basketball coach during this time, and as his program took off, so did the enthusiasm of the students. They started their campaign for a new field house with the slogan "Let's have a Crackerjack Field House instead of a Crackerbox Coliseum."

Finally, on Dec. 9, 1950, the efforts of the students and K-State supporters were rewarded. After 10 long years, the new facility, which was the fifth largest in the country at the time of its construction and the largest in the state of Kansas with a seating capacity of 13,000, opened.

Depth improves baseball outlook

SPRING SPORTS TABLOID, Tuesday, January 19, 1988

By Russ Ewy Sports Writer

With the help of depth in its lineup, K-State's baseball team has set its goals on making the NCAA Division I playoffs, as well as having two consecutive winning

"I like us to play up to our capablities," head baseball Coach Mike Clark said. "We go out each day and play a little better than we did the day before, and I think that we can compete for a playoff spot this year. I'll be disappointed if we don't make that spot, and I think that it's been around 16 years since K-State has had back-to-back winning seasons. I feel that we are capable of doing that."

Despite a loss in their power hitting, the 'Cats have gained strength by filling up holes in their roster, Clark said.

"I think we have a lot more strengths than we had last year, but we don't have the amount of home run power that we had last year," he said. "Last year, we had a few kids who could put it out of the yard. This year, there aren't quite as many home runtype hitters, but I think that we're a little deeper in position players."

Clark said K-State has also added muchneeded depth to its pitching staff.

"Pitching-wise, there's no question that we're deeper. Last year, we went through just about the whole Big Eight (Conference) season with just five pitchers," Clark said. "Now, we're looking at a nine- to 10-man pitching staff with some guys who can pitch Division I-type baseball, whereas last year we just didn't have the bodies. I look for us to be a lot more consistent in our pitching and for our earned run average to come down. That will keep us in more ball

Even with a more solid team, the Wildcats, who finished 28-24 last spring, will have to fight their way through some stiff conference competition in order to reach their goals.

"The Big Eight is going to be as strong as ever. A lot of people are picking Oklahoma State to be national champions. Oklahoma will be strong. Nebraska will be better than they were (last year)," Clark said. "Iowa State is supposed to be a lot better. Missouri lost a lot of kids, but their coach does such a good job with that program that we know they will be very competitvie. KU has changed coaches, and we don't know too much about their players, but we figure that they will be a little more competitive than they have been," slow approach toward indoor," Capriotti said. "We can finish third or fourth in the indoor Big Eight meet, but I know we are better than that."

K-State's outdoor season begins April 2 with a dual against the University of Nebraska in Lincoln. Both the men's and women's teams finished second at the Big Eight Outdoor Championships last year, and look to finish one notch higher this year.

Returning to K-State's outdoor scene is Big Eight outdoor most-valuable athlete Jacque Struckhoff. Felicia Curry, who set a school record last year in the triple jump, also returns. Distance runners Anne Stadler and Laura Haggerty should also contribute the success of the women's team.

Sprinter John Williams, high jumper Brad Speer and long jumper Kenny Harrrison return to lead K-State's outdoor men's team.

"We have many returning Big Eight champions from a year ago," Capriott said. "We are a better outdoor team, so I think we could do better throughout the country. If we stay healthy and get a little luck, we can qualify around twelve people for the NCAA outdoor championships."

Capriotti thinks Harrison is one of the country's premier long jumpers.

"Kenny can compete with the best. Someday, he will be in the Olympics," Capriotti said.

He said Harrison and Struckhoff have already been invited to compete in the Olympic Trials in July.

Golfers look toward tough schedule

By Chase Clark Sports Writer

Scheduling is an obstacle K-State's men's and women's golf Coach Rob Sedorcek has been working hard to improve since he came back to K-State in Sedorcek was a four-year Wildcat letterman as a golfer and returned to K-State to coach after his former Coach Ray Wauthier retired in the spring of 1986.

After only two years at K-State, Sedorcek has improved the schedule and thinks this spring's schedule is the best K-State

"We've got the best schedule we've ever had and hopefully it will pay off in the Big Eight Championship on May 15," Sedorcek said. "I've got some tournaments scheduled that should help us out. Our first three tournaments are down in Texas where there will be some nationallyranked teams from the Southwest Conference."

Now, however, the biggest obstacle holding back the men's and women's teams is the weather. Until winter relinquishes its hold on the Kansas area, the squads are forced to practice inside.

"It's a little difficult preparing with the weather," Sedorcek said. "We have nine weeks until we have to tee it up (for the first meet) and we have to be outside in at least five weeks. Right now we are practicing inside, but it's not the same."

K-State men's team is fairly young but Sedorcek said it is very experienced for its

"We're young, but we're more experienced than a lot of the other schools," Sedorcek said. "My sophomores have as much experience as juniors. Daran Neuschafer and Troy Keller should add maturity and experience to the team also."

After seeing improvements in the team last spring, Sedorcek is confident the team can compete better this year.

"There were some marked improvements in the team last spring that hopefully will carry over this year. We were closer to seventh last year (in the Big Eight) than we've been since the 1970s. Hopefully, by the end of the season we will be as good as or better than Kansas, Iowa State and Nebraska."

Inexperienced may be the best word to sum up the women's team. Jill Zientara is the only letter winner returning from last year's squad.

Last year, K-State's women's finished last in the conference. Sedorcek said the women could move up a spot or two if they play up to their potential.

He is hoping freshman Christy Adams can contribute a lot to the team this spring. Adams finished second in the state of Oklahoma her senior year in high school.

Wildcat golf team member John Shields tees off at Manhattan Country Club as teammate Jeff Sedorcek watches. Golf Coach Rob Sedorcek thinks this spring's schedule is the best the team has had and hopes for a Big Eight championship.

Introduction

The Kansas State University Committee on Communicable Diseases, chaired by Fred Newton, is charged with the responsibility to insure that necessary educational programs on AIDS, ARC, and HIV virus are available and implemented on campus. The committee is also responsible for assuring that the policies and procedures as outlined in the Kansas State University Guidelines for AIDS, ARC, and HIV Virus are followed and updated as new scientific and medical information

After careful study of the social, medical, and legal aspects of AIDS this committee has met during the Spring and Fall, 1987 to prepare a comprehensive plan for responding to AIDS and AIDS related concerns on this campus through a program of education, and the utilization of university and community resources. The intent of this educational campaign includes the

- educating the University community about AIDS and related issues;
- providing information on transmission and risk reduction to prevent further spread of the disease;
- ensuring and facilitating access to proper medical, administrative, legal, counseling, and other forms of
- lessening the fears and undeserved reactions associated with the disease, those who have it, and those who may be at

We firmly believe that as correct information about AIDS increases, the misinformation about the disease and its transmission, as well as fears that result from misinformation will be lessened. These Questions and Answers are provided to respond to common issues in regard to procedures and policies of the Campus. Of course, all situations and concerns will be addressed on an individual, case by case basis, determined by the medical facts involved. The answers herein are provided as a framework from which well reasoned responses can be made to

Common Questions About AIDS

What is AIDS?

AIDS is characterized by a defect in natural immunity against disease. People who have AIDS are vulnerable to serious illnesses which would not be a threat to anyone whose immune system was functioning normally. These illnesses are referred to as "opportunistic" infections or diseases.

What causes AIDS?

AIDS is caused by a virus, which has been given different names by different groups of investigators but is now given the standard acronym HIV (human immunodeficiency virus). Infection with this virus does not always lead to AIDS. Many infected persons remain in good health. Others may develop illness varying in severity from mild to extremely serious; these illnesses are designated AIDS-related complex (ARC).

How is AIDS transmitted?

AIDS is spread by sexual contact, needle sharing, or less commonly, through transfused blood or its components. The risk of infection with the virus is increased by having multiple sexual partners, either homosexual or heterosexual, and sharing of needles among those using illicit drugs. The virus may be transmitted also from infected mother to infant before, during, or shortly after birth (probably through breast milk).

Can AIDS be spread through casual contact?

Casual contact with AIDS patients or infected persons does not place others at risk for getting the illness. No cases have been found where the virus has been transmitted by casual household contact with AIDS patients or infected persons. Infants with AIDS or HIV infection have not transmitted the infection to family members living in the same household.

What is the difference between the infection and the disease?

Having HIV infection indicates that you have been exposed to the HIV virus and are carrying antibodies against the virus in your blood. Some (present studies have indicated 30 to 50 percent) of those that demonstrate the presence of HIV antibodies do not develop any clinical signs of the disease. When a person begins to show clinical signs, then they are considered to either have AIDS-related complex (ARC) or AIDS itself, depending upon the clinical signs exhibited and the type of disease complex that is present within that individ-

Who gets AIDS?

Ninety percent of the AIDS cases have occurred with two groups of people: sexually active homosexual or bisexual men, and present or past abusers of intravenous drugs. Another 5 percent has been accounted for by persons who require blood transfusions, infants born to infected mothers, or heterosexual contacts with someone with AIDS.

What are its symptoms?

Many individuals infected with the AIDS virus have no symptoms and feel well. Some develop symptoms which may include tiredness, fever, loss of appetite and weight, diarrhea, night sweats, and swollen glands (lymph nodes)-usually in the neck, armpits, or groin. Anyone with these symptoms which continue for more than two weeks should see a physician. It must be emphasized that these symptoms are seen with many diseases and by themselves are not indicative of AIDS.

How is AIDS diagnosed?

The diagnosis of AIDS depends on the presence of opportunistic diseases that indicated the loss of immunity. Certain tests which demonstrate damage to various parts of the immune system, such as specific types of white blood cells, support the diagnosis. The presence of opportunistic diseases plus a positive test for antibodies to HIV can also make possible a diagnosis of

How is AIDS treated?

Currently, there are no antiviral drugs available anywhere that have been proven to cure AIDS, although the search for such drugs is being pursued vigorously. Some drugs have been found that inhibit the AIDS virus, but these have not yet led to clinical improvement. Though no treatment has yet been successful in restoring the immune system of an AIDS patient, physicians have had some success in using drugs, radiation, and surgery to treat the various illnesses of AIDS patients. Therapeutic agents are needed for all stages of AIDS.

Can AIDS be prevented?

YES! Cases of AIDS related to medical use of blood or blood products are being prevented by use of HIV antibody screening tests at blood donor sites. Personal prevention can also be practiced to assure safety from infection. In simplest terms personal prevention can be practiced in two ways: Don't use intravenous drugs. If you do, don't share needles or syringes. Secondly, don't have sex. If you do, practice safe sex. Safe sex means not having sex with people who may be infected or protecting yourself by taking precautions to prevent contact with the person's body fluids. Further information is provided through materials disseminated at the Lafene Student Health Center, U-LearN, Riley County Public Health, The Counseling Center, or contacting the national referral sources listed on the back of this brochure.

STUDENT CONCERNS

1. If a student suspects that he or she has AIDS what should the student do?

If the student is uncertain of his or her medical condition and seeks help, the University encourages the student to get a detailed medical evaluation. Lafene Student Health Center offers confidential testing. If the student prefers, the health center can refer the student to an off campus physician or agency familiar with AIDS for a confidential medical evaluation. In any case the evaluation will include counseling before and after diagnosis.

2. How will the University respond to complaints of discrimination or harassment against students with AIDS or ARC, or who have positive HIV test results, or who simply are perceived to be in high-risk groups?

The University will respond to any conflict or harassment first by using informal means to counsel and educate the individuals involved. However, if harassment continues, such conduct will be dealt with as a student disciplinary matter under the established procedures for hearing discrimination complaints. There is a five member Student Discrimination Review Committee that will hear the complaint and report the findings to the President for necessary action. If a student has a complaint of discrimination or harassment, he or she should call the Affirmative Action Office (532-6220) or the Dean of Student Life Office (532-6432).

3. What are the provisions of the University's student health insurance program that relate to AIDS?

The current contractor, Blue Cross Blue Shield, treats AIDS as any other illness. However, there is a clause prohibiting payment for any preexisting condition.

"Students expect two things from their state universities," said Troy Lubbers, student body president and chairman of Associated Students of Kansas. "First, we expect quality teaching. Second, we expect accessibility to all those who can benefit from a higher education. Over the past several years, both of these qualities have been undermined."

ASK is a student lobbying group with members at all of the six state universities and Kansas Technical Institute.

Lubbers said ASK was pleased with the support Gov. Mike Hayden proposed for the Board of Regents' Margin of Excellence plan in his budget last week. Hayden endorsed the regents' call for increased salaries for teaching faculty, but not for non-teaching faculty, such as administrators and researchers.

Hayden, who received a standing ovation when he spoke to the students, said, "We were very glad to come out in support of the Margin of Excellence for teaching faculty. They're on the front lines, they're the ones who have the greatest impact on your lives."

However, Lubbers said students still would lobby Legislators to approve additional regents' requests for money, such as for capital improvements, that Hayden did not endorse in his budget.

Lubbers also said students were concerned that Legislators would provide more money for higher education this session when the state has extra money from an income tax windfall, but not finance the plan's two other years.

The first response to an individual who had AIDS must be compassion. The University will seek to accommodate a faculty member's medical condition to permit the individual to remain actively at work so long as possible. Since casual contact does not cause AIDS, a professor with AIDS, so long as he or she can teach and function in an academic setting,

Reagan approves new military aid to Contra rebels

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - President Reagan on Tuesday authorized the CIA to resume airdrops of weapons to Nicaragua's Contra rebels, as congressional opponents worked to offset an expected presidential lobbying blitz for an extension of military aid.

"This is really a gut issue for the president," said Rep. Lee Hamilton, D-Ind., an opponent of the aid renewal Reagan is expected to seek for the rebels on Jan. 26. "It is his highest foreign policy objective. The administration will pull out every stop in order to win this vote."

The House is to vote Feb. 3 on Reagan's request for an as-yetundetermined amount of new military aid. If it approves the request, the Senate would vote the next day.

put their lives on the line for democracy in Nicaragua," Reagan said.

He said his final year in office will be "the year that the United States will strongly affirm that democracy, not communism, is the future of Central America."

The rebels are currently operating on a short-term infusion of humanitarian aid approved before Congress left for its holiday recess, including money to pay for CIA airdrops of previously stockpiled weapons and ammunition. That money is expected to last through next month.

The airdrops had been suspended for the past week because of the weekend meeting in Costa Rica of the five Central American presidents who signed a peace accord Aug. 7. Under the law, Reagan must ask for any new military aid next week, triggering votes in Congress the following week. But the administration's task in winning new lethal supplies was made more difficult over the weekend, when Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega promised to make substantial concessions to keep the peace process alive.

Storm kills 22, begins move eastward Blizzard spares eastern Kansas | Hundreds of travelers stranded

By Deron Johnson Campus Editor

The powerful winter storm that racked California last weekend slammed into northwest Kansas with a vengeance Tuesday, bringing with it 55 mph winds and 15-inch

While the northwest quarter of the state bore the brunt of the storm, it appeared late Tuesday night that Manhattan and Eastern Kansas would be spared.

"The worst area is northwest Kansas," Mike Akulow, meteorologist with the National Weather Service in Topeka, said Tuesday night. "They have near zero visibility and very high winds."

The potent combination of the winds and snowfall, which produced snowdrifts of several feet, forced the closure of Interstate 70 from Salina to the Colorado border Tuesday

Jan Martin, communications operator with the Kansas Highway Patrol in Norton, said the storm virtually closed northwest Kansas.

"In a lot of areas, visibility is extremely low, and you can't see where you're going - it's a total white out. West of (U.S.) 83, just about everything's shut down," he said. "Driving probably ought to be discouraged. It's pretty dangerous out there."

Part of the danger came from frigid wind chills, which hovered near minus 20 degrees, Akulow said, adding that gusts produced wind chills of minus 40 degrees.

Southwestern Kansas was receiving the wind but not the significant snowfall, he said. Snow totals tapered off rapidly toward the east.

By Tuesday night, Akulow said Goodland had reported 15 inches of snow. However, he expected the snow and winds to diminish by

Israeli army to lessen gunfire

JERUSALEM - Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin confronted stone-throwing Palestinians in a West Bank refugee camp Tuesday and said the army will use beatings rather than bullets to quell riots that began six weeks ago.

He also said Israel would bar foreign countries or private groups from shipping food to Palestinian refugee camps in the occupied territories. United Nations officials said some camps are short of food because of curfews.

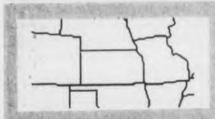

Talking to reporters and later to Israel Television, Rabin said troops were under orders to use "force, power and blows" to put down violent demonstrations. He used the Hebrew word "makot," which means blows or beatings.

Elaborating on the policy to an Israel TV reporter, he said soldiers would "prevent them (demonstrations) with force, not fire," and promised the army would leave as soon as order was restored.

Israeli gunfire has been the No. 1 cause of 36 confirmed Palestinian deaths in the 6-week-old wave of unrest sweeping the occupied territories.

Scattered disturbances were reported Tuesday in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, which Israel captured from Jordan and Egypt in the 1967 Middle East war, but Rabin claimed violent incidents were down "almost to zero." About 1.5 million Palestinians live in the territories.

Military spokesmen reported "a violent riot" in Mazraa, near the West Bank city of Ramallah. They said a 29-year-old Arab, Azami Jamaa, was hospitalized with a bullet in the chest.

Sheriff shot by own revolver

JUNCTION CITY - Geary County Sheriff Bill Deppish was hospitalized in good condition Tuesday after undergoing surgery for a bullet wound suffered in an altercation with a crime suspect in Junction City.

Deppish was wounded in the leg and the suspect, a 19-year-old soldier at Fort Riley, suffered a head wound when the sheriff's service revolver discharged as Deppish tried to arrest the suspect, police said.

Deppish and another sheriff's officer stopped a vehicle driven by the soldier about 3 p.m. The soldier matched the description of a suspect wanted for suspicion of aggravated assault, police said in a statement. Deppish's gun discharged while the two men struggled, police said. Neither injury was considered serious.

The soldier was hospitalized at Irwin Army Hospital at Fort Riley.

Pupils protest plastic silverware

GREENFIELD, Mass. - Fifth-graders upset over plastic forks and spoons in the cafeteria are demanding a return to stainless steel, and their principal said they could protest with posters and petitions "as long as they had everything spelled correctly."

The campaign, dubbed "The Great Plastic Fork Rebellion" by one father, began a few weeks ago when students at the Four Corners Elementary School discovered their stainless steel tableware had been shipped to the high school for use by what one youngster called "ugh, teen-agers."

In the place of the stainless steel were blue-grey forks and spoons made of reusable hard plastic.

Christopher Peters, 11, described the new tableware as "burnpy, thick, hard to hold...and eating with them makes you feel weird all over."

Using non-violent tactics they practiced for the Martin Luther King Jr. observance, Chris and his classmates hung the cafeteria with posters reading "School Is No Picnic" and "Real People Deserve Real Silverware." By Friday, the youngsters had gathered signatures from more than half the school's 316 pupils, aged 5 through 12.

"We didn't break anything or start any riots," said Steven Berson, 10. "We just wrote signs and talked to people, like Martin Luther King."

The stainless steel went to the high school in Greenfield which incidentally is home to Lunt Silversmith Co., maker of sterling silver flatwear for the State Department - because of the demand for tableware following a switch to a more varied lunch menu this year.

Reagan approves space policy

WASHINGTON - President Reagan has approved a new space policy, designed to explore new technologies to help expand the U.S. program into the solar system, the White House confirmed on Tuesday.

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said the president is expected to discuss the policy in his State of the Union address on Jan. 25 or in the legislative program that will he will send to Congress following the speech.

"This policy reiterates our desire for space leadership," Fitzwater said. "It talks about fundamental national objectives in space, it sets the long-range goal of expanding our ability of going beyond the earth orbit, into the solar system."

As part of the program, the spokesman said, the president approved a multi-year program established under the National Aeronautics and Space Administration that would develop socalled "pathfinder" technologies.

The technologies are aimed at returning astronauts to the moon by the year 2000 and beginning flights to Mars early in the 21st century.

Fitzwater said Reagan approved the program on Jan. 5. It was first reported last week in the publication Aviation Week and Space Technology.

Leaders of U.S. arms sales face possible indictments

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Marine Lt. Col. Oliver North failed Tuesday in a bid to have the Supreme Court block a criminal investigation into his role in the Iran-Contra affair.

The justices, without comment, refused to disturb a ruling that Attorney General Edwin Meese III properly delegated authority to independent counsel Lawrence E. Walsh to conduct the inquiry.

The high-court order clears the way for Walsh to seek indictments against North and other key participants in a scheme to divert the proceeds of secret U.S. arms sales to Iran to the Nicaraguan Contra rebels.

Indictments are possible in the coming weeks against North, former national security adviser John M. Poindexter, retired Air Force Maj. Gen. Richard V. Secord and Secord's business partner, Albert Hakim.

Jim Wieghart, spokesman for Walsh, said, "We are pleased that tion in a case from Miami for its

Ex-presidential aide accused of illegal lobbying procedures

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Former presidential aide Lyn C. Nofziger illegally lobbied the White House to deliver on political promises that would benefit his clients, a prosecutor charged Tuesday at Nofziger's conflict-of-interest trial.

"Taking care of your friends is the first principle of politics of Mr. Nofziger," associate independent counsel Lovida H. Coleman Jr. told jurors in her opening statement.

Nofziger, who resigned as White House political director in early 1982, "used his influence as a former official with his friends and colleagues at the White House in a manner fobidden by law," she said.

"He finally earned the retirement fund that he failed to save for previously," she said.

Nofziger, who is charged with four counts of improperly lobbying former White House colleagues within a year of his departure from President Reagan's staff, used the occasion of a legislative fight to score points for one of his clients, the Marine Engineers Beneficial Association, Coleman said.

Nofziger had returned to the White House for 10 days in August 1982 to help Reagan win a legislative fight for an unpopular tax hike, she said.

After Congress passed the bill, "Mr. Nofziger took advantage of the particular situation to send a message to the White House on behalf of MEBA and its effort to get civilian manning" of government ships to help employ its members, Coleman said.

During the 1980 campaign, Reagan "promised to make civilian manning a crucial part of the administration's program to save the maritime industry," Coleman said.

Nofziger wrote a note to the union's president, Jesse Calhoon, to thank him for lobbying for the tax bill and sent copies to top White House officials with a P.S. noting MEBA's interest in civilian manning, Coleman said.

The postscript said: "He has been trying to get action on civilian manning of naval ships without result. He has been supportive of all the president's endeavors, including the last one. Why not help our friends?"

Past holds key to future

Have you ever flagellated a dead equine animal? Translated, that means beating the proverbial "dead horse." Economists and newscasters certainly have attempted to do so in the months since the Oct. 19 stock market crash. There probably has not been another topic in recent history that has received as much attention as "Black Monday."

Few subjects will get people as emotional as a perceived threat to their financial security. This is the human trait that has resulted in stock market crashes, deposit runs, etc. I canof the legendary "sale mentality," ("I had to buy it, it was on sale!") but it certainly does exist.

Every student who has taken an economics course knows that economists love to use graphs and indexes to quantify and predict our economic future. However, their job has been made more difficult since the crash added volatility to the economy. So uncertain is their outlook that economist Richard Hoey of Drexel Burnham Lanbert admits that he and his colleagues "are flying without instruments."

I would offer a different tool to predict the economy. Instead of graphs and indexes, let's see what history tells us.

Young people today seem to have a terrible deficiency in historical perspective. The only thing that many people know about the Great Depression of the 1930s is that there was a stock market crash. Since we have had our Commentary not decide if this trait is the cause or the effect follow that there will be a depression in the

Harry Truman was a great student of history. He often cited his knowledge of history for helping him make the tough, sometimes unpopular decisions that he is famous for. How does this apply to the current economic situation that we find ourselves in today? Simple.

History tells us that we have had a depression/recession approximately every 50 years. Simple subtraction (1988 minus 1930 - be sure to show your work!) tells the story on that account.

History also tells us that the farm sector is usually two years to four years ahead of the general economy in terms of economic conditions. I don't have to tell anyone in Kansas what has been going on in the farm economy in the past four years.

History also tells us that mature economies can become stagnant and decay when the stock market crash also, it must necessarily people live beyond their means. England is a prime example of this effect. England, which at one time was the most active industrial country in the world, has bogged down by an unproductive economy during much of the 20th century. Only since Margaret Thatcher's reforms toward a more laissez-faire business atmosphere has their economy started to grow again.

I would never suggest that history dictates our future. I would submit, though, that it can serve as a guide by which we can make intelligent choices that can enhance our future.

Economic policy decisions are, by their very nature, best made within a long-term time frame. History reflects this in the attempt by the founders of our Federal Reserve System to isolate it from politics, with seven-year terms for board members, etc. However, short-term decisions remain an inherent nature of our country's economic and political structure.

Long-term, stable economic growth is only possible in an environment that is based on long-term economic policy. That responsibility rests on us as voters and consumers.

As voters, we must reward those candidates for public office who are willing to make short-term sacrifices in order that there be long-term benefit. As consumers, we must be willing to save a reasonable portion of our income instead of spending it all, as we do History has given the lecture. It remains to be seen how many students slept through it.

Public misplaces blame

I hate to burst any bubbles, but Shawnee Mission South isn't all the Bennett report has it cracked up to be.

A few weeks ago Secretary of Education, William Bennett, released the report "James Madison High School: A Curriculum for American Students." This report outlined what Bennett believed would make for an ideal high school curriculum. Attached to the report were appendices outlining actual high schools in the United States which currently are meeting or surpassing Bennett's standards as defined in the report.

A few days later, the Wichita-Eagle Beacon ran an editorial praising Shawnee Mission South - one of the schools listed by Bennett - stressing that other schools should emulate its fine example.

No one can argue against the idea that a good, basic curriculum is needed and to be expected in the public school system. But when the editorial stressed that the curriculum called for getting rid of watered-down courses - practical English as opposed to a Shakespearean literature course - it went too far. It argued the new curriculum meant the "easy" courses should be done away with, and students would rise to the occasion if challenged with tougher classes.

Now Bennett's plan in itself is being saved for another week's commentary, but the idea that high schools are watering down courses when unnecessary is ludicrous.

True, high schools do offer courses in practical English and it cannot be argued that too many students have a need for these Commentary courses. It is truly sad to see a group of high school sophomores being taught to put a period at the end of the sentence. But, if what they need to learn is basic punctuation, how is a teacher ever to help them learn the subtle nuances of literature?

How many of these students would really care why Ophelia killed herself, or how her situation reflects a way many women feel when rejected or ignored by a suitor? How many would do a simple comparison and contrast of "Romeo and Juliet" and "Westside Story"? That answer is simple - none.

How many students would better benefit from the consumer math course offered at many high schools as an alternative to algebra and geometry. A consumer math course, like a practical English course, need not be considered a waste of time, but with good teachers, the courses can be thoughtful, provocative and insightful.

The problem goes deeper than attacking the types of courses many high schools offer in an effort to deal with the wide range of their students' abilities, needs and knowledge. The editorial, and unfortunately much of the public, fails to realize high school teachers are not miracle workers. If students reach high school without having learned the rudiments of any subject, how are they ever to learn the more complex matters.

The problem must be traced back to the elementary schools. Studies should focus on the early, formative years in students' lives.

How can students be expected to learn at school when parents do not encourage learning in their own home? How many parents take "quality" time to look at their children's homework? How many of these same parents will help a child with a problem area - reading for example? The numbers of parents working as part of the education process is undoubtedly low.

So don't look to the high schools for miracles. Don't look to the Shawnee Mission South's of the state and say "Gosh, their curriculum must be really good, and ours should be just like it." Remember their curriculum includes many of the courses some consider "easy" or watered down, and without these courses, some students would not make it.

Reports praising or ridiculing the public education offered in the United States are not going to make much difference. It must be realized that parents play the key role in education and should be credited or blamed for many of the problems facing today's

Let's look for the real cause behind the problem instead of trying to fix the problem after the disease has already spread.

University's role

Editor

I have noticed how the 8:30 to 12:30 classes tend to fill up quickly. Now, let's assume that there are between 280 to 1,000 "students" involved in sports. Let's don't assume they get priority when they want to schedule class time because they do. My, my such convenience. They say they need the priority so they can go to practice in the afternoon.

I feel that if they are so devoted, the first thing on their mind when they wake up would be sports. Why not give them the excellent opportunity to practice from 8:30 a.m. to XX:XX? And in doing so they could continue their education after 12:30.

Maybe what we need is two schools in Manhattan, one for sports and the other for the learning sector of the population. But the critics say that K-State would not exist if it did not have sports. It is unbelievable that only the athletes are keeping this University open.

A student's final notice of leave is a degree related to a scholarly major, not sports. Why doesn't the administration, which allowed afternoon practice, convenience the students who are here to receive a degree, by changing practice time to the morning? The reason we're here in the first place is for the degree, isn't it.?

Waste still issue

Editor.

The selection of Nebraska for the nuclear waste dump does not get us in Kansas off the hook. There is already talk about placing it in southeast Nebraska, as close to the Kansas border as possible. This would mean that all the waste from four states would be transported through northeast Kansas. This is one of the unjust features of the compact system—that people who have derived no benefit from the production of nuclear waste are subjected to the hazards that go with moving all this stuff to one place.

It is said that society has a problem with all this waste, and that is why we must build these monumental concentrations of poisonous material. It would be more accurate to say that the Wolf Creek, Kerr-McGee and Bechtel plants have a problem. They can't go on making enormous profits unless they can get rid of the waste. We are expected to watch the trucks roll by and believe they are looking out for our interests and safety.

They want to build a five-state dump so the developer can run a lucrative business, not because it is the best or safest way to handle the problem. And once the dump is established, there is little standing in the way of enlarging it to include the waste from even more states, or of redefining it to include "high-level" waste.

I feel that the people who are profiting from nuclear industry should bear the responsibility for the waste, and that the more equitable arrangement would be for Kansas to withdraw from the compact and deal with what waste is generated within the state, without all the transportation risks. This is not an issue of people vs. people, state vs. state. It is an issue of exploitation vs. justice.

OSU envies Kansas

Editor,

On Nov. 23, I happened to be in Russell and read an editorial in The Wichita Eagle-Beacon titled, "Fun? and games" about the hapless and hopeless performance of the K-State and the University of Kansas football

I am a professor at Oklahoma State University and am familiar firsthand with institutions (OSU and the University of Oklahoma) that take football very, very seriously. Having lived in Oklahoma since 1981, I have seen and heard a good deal, academic and athletic, about the different institutions of the Big Eight Conference.

Kansans should be proud of their institutions of higher learning — they are truly superior. I think that KU is the strongest institution academically in the Big Eight. It certainly has the best library and faculty. K-State consistently ranks far above other land-grant colleges in the region.

Here in Oklahoma, we have first-rate football teams and second-rate universities. In Kansas, it's just the opposite. I envy your good fortune. Citizens of Kansas: Keep up the good work!

One final note: I know of four professors here at OSU whose children go to KU. If you were to ask the faculty of KU how many of them sent their children to OU or OSU, they would (rightfully) laugh in your face. People who are serious about education would never attend Oklahoma colleges or universities.

Crass behavior

Editor,

I attend most K-State basketball games. Student behavior at the Nov. 30 game leads me to write to the Collegian. Each season it seems the rude comments and boo's become more personal and degrading to opposing team members, coaches and officials.

When a team comes to play in Ahearn, they are K-State guests. Booing the visiting team is one thing; calling players "Buckwheat" and obscene names is not only rude, it is uneducated and unacceptable. Imagine inviting your friends to your home and then spending the evening making racial slurs and mocking their behavior! Imagine our players going to other schools to play and being on the receiving end of these comments.

The K-State student behavior is an embarrassment. It is hoped that education makes everyone more open and accepting of all people regardless of color or affiliation. From comments I hear on the alumni side of Ahearn, most parents think you students need your mouths washed out with soap or just plain spanked. College is a great place to grow up. Student behavior at basketball games is a good place to start.

Editor,

I am a 33-year-old single parent living in Jardine Terrace. I am a graduate student in special education, after completing 7½ years in the Army as a behavioral science specialist. When I returned to K-State last spring, I was delighted and relieved to discover the KSU Child Care Cooperative. I had visited Stonehouse, but they were filled to capacity at the time.

I think the cooperative is a viable part of the university community. Despite the arguments against financially supporting the cooperative, I ask everyone to look beyond their own personal benefits and look at the overall benefits to the University. As a nontraditional student returning to K-State, I pay fees for services that I do not use or need, but I realize that these services are necessary for the overall benefits to the University.

I think the students have to start looking at the overall benefits and the needs of the University to recruit and retain qualified faculty and non-traditional students. The cooperative can help in the recruitment and retention of students with families.

As a prospective teacher and as a parent, I empathize with the teachers. I previously worked there as a teacher's aide but had to quit because I was not making enough money to pay for my daughter's child care. If the cooperative wants to maintain qualified, dedicated teachers and continuity in child care, then we must financially support the cooperative in order for the teachers to be adequately paid.

I have been very pleased with the quality of care my daughter is receiving at the cooperative. I would hate to see the cooperative close down because it was unable to provide the teachers with an adequate salary. I would hate to see the University lose the services of the cooperative. I am asking the students to consider the overall benefits of financially supporting the KSU Child Care Cooperative. This is our chance to make a difference.

Unpaid fines halt students' registration

By Vera McMinimy Collegian Reporter

For some K-State students, registration last week provided an opportunity to ease their conscience.

Between $17,000 and $18,000 in unpaid parking tickets was collected during registration, said K-State Police Chief Charles Beckom.

Beckom said the amount of fines collected this semester was about the same as in previous semesters.

"The biggest problem we have is everyone waits until the last minute to pay their ticket," Beckom said. "It would make the system work better if they paid their ticket when it was

After 14 days, a second letter tells the student the ticket is overdue. The third letter informs the student that until the ticket is paid, the student will be unable to enroll.

Campus police send a report of unpaid parking tickets to the Registrar's office, said registrar Don Foster. The office then flags a student's records in the student information fines, emergency loans or housing bills. Also, a student cannot enroll or receive transcripts until the overdue fees have been paid.

Dorothy Griffin, head of circulation for Farrell Library, said about 180 students had their records flagged last semester because of unpaid library fines. The amount of fines is about the same as past semesters, she said

The Department of Housing has no estimate of the number of students who have not paid their housing bills for the fall semester, but the number is about average, said Robert Cox, Approximately 200 to 300 students had their records flagged because of unpaid emergency student loans, said Doug Ackley, head of cashiers and loans in the Controller's Office.

were issued last fall due to the financial aid delays, he said.

Kevin Martin, junior in biology, waited 45 minutes to pay his parking ticket. He said he did receive the notices about the ticket. But, he did not have the money to pay the fine when it was due.

Although it is expensive to send staff to Ahearn Field House to collect the fines, Beckom said it was more convenient for students. If students had to pay the tickets at the campus police station, it would slow their fee payment, he said.

Approximately $50,000 in unpaid parking tickets is still outstanding. It is possible for departments other than campus police to collect delinquent fees in Ahearn during registration, Foster said. Other departments do not set up tables in Ahearn because the number of students who owe money is not large enough to make it efficient.

Farrell Library has considered collecting fines in Ahearn during registration because it would be convenient to the students, Griffin said. But, because all of the records are on the computer, the process would be too difficult for the library staff.

Ackley said the Cashier's office decided not to collect unpaid emergency loans in Ahearn because security is not heavy enough to protect the files.

American couple granted asylum in Soviet Union

By The Associated Press

MOSCOW - An American couple who came to Moscow as tourists have been granted political asylum after choosing life in the Soviet Union as an "alternative to capitalism," an official said Tuesday.

Foreign Ministry spokesman Gennady I. Gerasimov identified the Americans as Theodore Branch, 43, and Cheryl Branch, 40, and said they were "experts in the field of mass communications" from Pennsylvania. Branch's father, Clarence Branch of Erie, Pa., said his son was "stupid" for deciding to live in the Soviet Union because "there are so many millions wanting to get out of there. Why would he want to go over there?"

Branch, 77, said his son had worked for a radio station in Mount Dora, Fla., and that he left for Moscow against his advice and the advice of others.

"He talked about it, but a lot of people tried to talk him out of it," the elder Branch said. He said his son had met a Soviet woman in the United States who wanted to go back to her homeland. "She just painted him a rosy picture," he said. "She probably got homesick."

The couple, which the elder Branch said has no children, had been living in Erie with him and his wife, Lavera, 73, before they left to visit the Soviet Union.

They arrived in Moscow last month, "declared their unwillingness to return to the United States and asked for permission to live here as immigrants," Gerasimov told reporters at a government news briefing.

Gerasimov and the official Tass news agency said the Branches were granted political asylum by the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet, the nominal parliament.

U.S. Embassy spokesman Richard Gilbert said he could provide no information about the Branches. But he added: "Americans have the right to live wherever they choose."

In Washington, State Department spokesman Charles E. Redman said he had no reason to doubt the two Americans had decided to live in the Soviet Union, and he said they had no connection with the U.S.

government. Gerasimov said the Branches wrote the Presidium that "in the Soviet Union, priority is given to law and order, legislation provides equal opportunities and possibilities for all, which is an alternative to capitalism."

He said the couple would be given jobs in their field of expertise, and that they had already been provided with accommodation.

Kremlin officials assert 70 years of socialism in the Soviet Union has created a society that is fairer and more humane than the West, and state-run media gave prominent display to accounts of foreigners who choose life here.

In contrast, the departure of Soviets to live abroad is rarely reported, and the disenchantment and sorrow of Soviet emigres cut off from their motherland is a recurring theme in the media.

NEW ORLEANS - An estimated one in three Americans inherits a newly recognized form of cholesterol that is linked with triple the usual risk of heart disease, according to research released Tuesday.

"We have identified a new genetic trait that may predispose to heart disease risk," said Dr. Ronald M. Krauss of the University of California at Berkeley.

Although Krauss has not pinpointed the gene that's responsible, he said its hallmark in the bloodstream is a substance called dense

About one-third of the population has relatively large amounts of dense LDL, and they are three times more likely than usual to suffer heart attacks, Krauss said.

Not all of these people will have heart attacks, and dense LDL itself may not even be the culprit. Instead, it may be a genetic marker, or signal, that they are at higher than usual risk.

Krauss said that such people may be unusually susceptible to the dangers of bad living habits that are often associated with heart trouble. These include obesity, a high-fat diet, lack of exercise and poorly controlled blood pressure.

Dense LDL can be measured with a blood test, he said. "I think it will serve a useful pur-

Use noodles to stretch food dollars

It's happened again, it's time to make the dinner. East week we used up your final cans of runa fish. Now all you have left are those nasty, dusty bags of noodles. Remember those? You bought 10 because they were only $1.

After you bought them and ate one or two bags, poodles by themselves started to get pretty tiresome. But you hate to throw them away, after all, you did pay a dime for each of them.

Don't despair. Now is the time to get out those bugs of noodles and cleverly disguise them so people will never know you're serving old pasta

Look onward for some delicious and devious ways to turn those ordinary noodles into a delight, Nine students left Tuesday for Warrensburg, Mo., to attend the American College Theatre Festival.

Part of the festival is the Irene Ryan Drama Competition. Winners of the competition receive a scholarship which was founded in 1972 by Irene Ryan, alias Granny Clampett.

There are 12 festivals yearly for different divisions. K-State competes in region five, comprised of Nebraska, Kansas, Missouri and Iowa.

In order for students to compete, they have to have been in a production that their university has entered in the festival. Universities are allowed to send two students for each production.

"We (K-State) have a very good record at regionals," said Lewis Shelton, associate professor of speech. "The students here have done well in the Irene Ryan competition in the past."

Shelton said that last year one K-State student, Nancy Sloan, was spotted at the festival and ended up landing a part on the daytime drama "The Bold and The Beautiful."

Another K-State student who participated in last year's competition is Elizabeth Sherby, senior in theater. Sherby is a three-time participant in the regional Irene Ryan Scholarship auditions.

Candidate speaks about Union's role

By Vince Huser Collegian Reporter

A university's union is more than a place to relax, it is also part of a student's life, said William Smith, director of The Wichita State University's campus activities center, during his talk Tuesday in Union 212.

Smith is one of four final candidates seeking the position of Union Director at K-State. The four were selected from more than 50 original applicants by an 11-member search committee.

He addressed the role unions play on campuses, where unions are headed in the future and his philosophies on unions. "K-State has one of the best student unions in the country," Smith said. "A union should be part of a student's life." Smith also said that a union is a

Ringwald movie confusing, pointless

By Gary Leffler Collegian Reviewer

Good movies originate with an outstanding idea. And logic dictates that bad movies will more than likely begin with less than outstanding ideas. Unfortunately, "For Keeps" falls into the latter category.

"For Keeps" is the latest vehicle featuring Molly Ringwald, who it seems will forever play high school seniors. Her character, Darcy, is the editor of the school paper and has big dreams of becoming a journalist. Darcy is pretty, smart and very much in love with Stan. Oh, yes, she's also pregnant.

This is not exactly a refreshing and original starting point for a film. And it doesn't get much better. In essence the original idea was flawed, dooming the film before it could get off the ground.

In fact, the opening credits effectively destroyed any hope of a miraculous recovery for the movie. What was billed as a romantic comedy about teenage love and family was smashed by opening credits that roll against microscopic close-ups of the fertilization process. Science had conquered romance even before the oil on my popcorn could

Movie Review

What's really confusing about "For Keeps" is its ping-pong act of slapping the audience around between drama (disguised as melodrama) and comedy (disguised as hokey one-liners). Is this movie supposed to be funny? It's not. Is it supposed to be dramatic? It's not.

Even more confusing are the strong statements offered to the audience about teenage pregnancy. This is undoubtedly a serious ously. Yet the ending of the film is a heartsand-flowers ballad that only reinforces the idea that teenage love and parenthood can really work out beautifully, without the teenagers sacrificing any of their dreams.

Most other aspects of the production were also subpar. The acting was external, vague and easily forgettable. The writing, too, was simplistic and uninteresting. The abundance of cliches was so monstrous that I felt as if I were watching a Godzilla versus Rodan flick.

One interesting point in the film was the story line between Darcy and her mother. Darcy's mother wants to be more than a mother. She wants to be a friend. There's a lot of the typical routine about sharing experiences, honest talks and even a trip to Europe to pal around. However, when the baby arrives, Darcy's mother shuns both daughter subject and the film begins by treating it seri- and granddaughter, refusing to be part of the mistake.

Eventually, Darcy's mother is willing to try again, but Darcy tells her that she doesn't want friendly companionship. She simply wants unquestioned love and understanding in short, a mother. This was a worthy idea that needed more exploration. This could have been the foundation for a better film.

The relationship between Darcy and Stan was dull and phony from square one. They go on the typical romantic camping trips, and when the baby arrives, they get an old, rundown apartment and try to make ends meet.

They have the typical problems with the typical results with a few typical gurgles thrown in from the baby.

Very little about "For Keeps" is worth the full admission price. Granted, there are a few one-liners that will evoke a chuckle, and the story line between Darcy and her mother is intriguing. But other than that, the bits and pieces worth saving could have been spliced together and used as a bad after-school

"What's really confusing about 'For Keeps' is its ping-pong act of slapping the audience around between drama (disguised as melodrama) and comedy (disguised as hokey one-liners). Is this movie supposed to be funny? It's not."

Hollywood can keep "For Keeps." And if Molly Ringwald doesn't start doing more than "D+" movies, she may indeed be in high

City grants residents' wish for increased pet adoption

City commissioners Tuesday accepted only one change suggested by residents to the final version of an animal control ordinance required for the building of a new regional animal shelter.

The change, allowing four animals to be adopted by one family in a year, raises the number of pets that may be adopted by two from the original ordinance.

Raising that number gives those who would keep the pets, until a permanent owner is found, more time to find a permanent owner. Approximately 50 Manhattan

Survey reveals students fear organ donation

By John La Barge Collegian Reporter

When the human brain ceases to function and efforts to sustain life by mechanical means have been exhausted, death is inevitable. Yet surveys reveal most people are still reluctant to become organ donors.

A team of K-State psychology researchers was formed in 1985 to determine why so few people are willing to be organ donors.

"Most people have a problem dealing with something that presupposes their own death," said James Shanteau, professor of psychology and research team member.

A survey conducted by the K-State research team revealed that more than 70 percent of the respondents would be willing to donate an organ, but only 15 percent had actually signed the back of their driver's license, thereby consenting to become a donor.

"The primary reason for not donating is the belief that death will be declared prematurely for the sole purpose of obtaining donated organs, which is untrue, Shanteau said.

Many people believe if they sign their donor card then they are committed to donate, but next of kin always have the last say in the matter, he said.

"Many people are hesitant to donate organs because they believe doctors may provide inadequate care if they knew their patients were potential donors,"

People who sign their donor card should tell their family about their wishes to avoid confusion if the situation should arise, he said.

A survey of 137 K-State students revealed they were unaware of a nationwide need for organs.

Statistics provided by Shanteau indicate that about 25,000 people received corneal transplants in 1985 and 20,000 more are on a waiting list. In addition, about 6,000 people receive kidney transplants each year, and about 8,000 remain on a waiting list.

Soviet children's labor exploited in push for fast industrialization

By The Associated Press

MOSCOW - The Soviet prosecutor's office says criminal exploitation of children performing menial labor on state farms kills hundreds of students and cripples thousands more

A report on the rare protest by the nation's top law enforcement agency was disclosed in an article written by a correspondent for the official Tass news agency for Tuesday's edition of the national labor newspaper Trud.

The prosecutor's office complained that children as young as 10 are brought into farm labor collectives where they put in 12 hours a

The report referred to the case of a fourth-grade boy in the far east Primorsky region who fell asleep in a bunker and was buried alive in grain.

It also reported that about 100 students at a trade school in the Ural Mountains city of Sverdlovsk contracted dysentery when forced to clean potatoes in "unsanitary conditions" and that 135 recently were infected with brucellosis at a Central Asian cattle farm.

The article credited Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev's campaign for "glasnost," or more openness about social problems, with disclosing what it called widespread callousness toward the welfare of children in the rural work force.

The Tass writer also said, however, that influential forces in the government and Communist Party hierarchy opposed publication of his article detailing violations of child protection laws.

Officials of the Soviet Health Ministry refused to discuss the subject with Tass, and a senior official of the Komsomol party youth organization warned the writer against publication.

'We are pushing through a resolution on expansion of the use of children in labor, and such publications only interfere with that effort," the reporter was told by the Komsomol official identified as A. Rybakov.

The organization's desire to bring more minors into the work force was not explained, but it is a likely outgrowth of Gorbachev's economic reforms that require faster and higher-quality production with minimum resources.

The Tass article in Trud marked the first public criticism of the longstanding practice of recruiting children for farm work, although the author suggested that some child labor is necessary.

At harvest time, children throughout the nation are bused to state farms to harvest potatoes and other crops. The children of farmers and students living at secondary schools specializing in agricultural studies often spend half their day in the fields during the growing season.

"There is no need to fear calling children to work," the article said. But it warned that those responsible, especially farm managers, would be held accountable for the welfare of minor workers.

Mention of a letter of protest from the prosecutor's office to the Ministry of Education and the state committee of the agricultural-industrial complex gave official weight to the report apparently aimed at stemming exploitation.

The report said the prosecutor's office issued the protest "in connection with legal violations of occupational safety and child protection. Because of this, hundreds of students die in our country every year and thousands suffer crippling injuries."

The prosecutor's office said the number of serious accidents among working children under 14 has been growing, with 35,000 reported in 1986, the most recent period for which statistics were given.

FLOUR SALE

"The fact of the matter is that irresponsible attitudes toward children have been growing," said the state prosecutor's senior adviser on judicial matters, identified as G. Polozov.

Polozov lashed out at a poor attitude toward child safety throughout the country, complaining that organizations created to protect children from unsafe school and work conditions exist in name only.

Throughout the country, students 14 and older can enroll in special trade schools to learn skills for farming or industry. As part of their course of study, they spend much of their day on the factory floor or farm fields performing the same work as adult laborers. About a third of the nation's secondary students are enrolled in trade schools.

Interest in lottery still strong in state

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - The Kansas Lottery's second "instant-win" game is going well, and interest in statesponsored gambling has not flagged, a lottery official said Tuesday.

Mike Grogan, deputy lottery director, termed sales "tremendous" and said they may even be a little better than those at the start of the lottery's first game, which ended several weeks early, after officials said ticket sales had outstripped expectations.

SALE TIME UD=FCOV=R Aggieville

The second game, "Match 3," began Dec. 30. It features $1 tickets with latex patches that buyers scratch off to see whether they have won a prize of up to $5,000.

Grogan also said the lottery agency plans to schedule a $100,000 drawing to end the game. Contestants will be chosen weekly from among those who send in five losing tickets to the lottery agency's Topeka headquarters in an envelope available where tickets are sold. The first game ended officially with a $100,000 drawing Saturday.

K-State scrapes out win

By Tom Morris Sports Writer

Chances are neither K-State nor The Wichita State University will use Tuesday

K-State struggled for most of the contest after Saturday's near-perfect perfomance against the University of Oklahoma, as they scrapped out a 58-47 win over their intrastate rivals in Aheam Field House.

But the final score is not indicative of how night's game in this season's highlight films.

With K-State leading by eight, 55-47, with 32 seconds left, WSU Coach Eddie Fogler was whistled for two technicals after a looseball pileup which resembled a football play. Mitch Richmond, who finished with a gamehigh 24 points and eight rebounds, nailed three of the four free throws to finally put the 10-6 Shockers away.

"It's never over, but we obviously felt better (after those free throws)," said K-State Coach Lon Kruger, whose team improved to

All Fogler had to say about the play was: "I knew what I was doing - the game was over."

The outcome was actually decided in the opening minutes of the second half when the Wildcats opened up a nine-point lead after Buster Glover nailed a three-pointer from the

"We jumped off the blocks in the second half," said Kruger, after his halftime speech involved telling his players to have more composure and patience.

Glover appeared to be in a three-point contest with WSU's sophomore guard Joe Griffin, who was three-of-three from no man's land, and led the Shockers with nine points. Glover made two-of-three attempts from three-point range.

"No, I wasn't actually in a contest. Steve (Henson) just penetrated and made the shot open for me," Glover said.

Everyone agreed the start of the second half was the turning point of the game.

"It was very important," Richmond said. "We knew (WSU was) going to come out and try and try to establish their momentum. We knew we had to get some key buckets and turn the pace around."

"We finished things a little better in the second half which really made the difference," Kruger added.

If it weren't for Richmond and guard Will Scott in the first half, K-State might have never survived the night. Richmond had 13 points and Scott chipped in seven of his nine points during the opening 20 minutes to pace the 'Cats to a slim 25-21 halftime lead.

Wichita State borrowed one of K-State's ploys it used against Oklahoma by slowing the offense and playing aggressive defense. It worked, as the 'Cats shot just 47.6 percent (20-of-42) from the field and were 20 points below their season average.

"It was different at times tonight because...it seemed in terms of ball control Wichita State had the ball quite a bit more than we did. They were very patient...and made us spend a lot more time on our defensive end of the floor," Kruger said.

Injury bars player

By Jenny Chaulk Sports Editor

Something was missing from The Wichita State University Shockers' lineup Tuesday night.

Something big. Or, rather, someone big. Sasha Radunovich, a 6-foot-10 import from Titograd, Yugoslavia, was sidelined about an hour before game time with an aggravated right-elbow injury.

The 235-pound junior averages 14.5 points and 7.4 rebounds per game and is a vital cog in the Shocker offensive machine.

Without Radunovich, the Shockers were able to muster a mere 47 points, about 30 below their per game average.

Radunovich's replacement, Dwayne Praylow, twin brother of Shocker starter Dwight, held his own in the rebounding department, grabbing 7. But his 4-point performance on the offensive end of the floor just wasn't enough to overcome the absence of Radunovich.

Shocker Coach Eddie Fogler, however, wasn't blaming the loss on the missing element. He said playing without Radunovich "is just part of basketball."

"We lost to a better team," he said. "They beat us fair and square.

"(K-State) came up to our place last year without (Mitch) Richmond and Norris Coleman and I didn't hear anybody saying anything on their part."

Fogler was referring to last season's Shocker 63-60 win over the Wildcats in Wichita. K-State won the second contest the game.

in Manhattan, 79-67, and Tuesday night's win marks the third time since 1970 either team has captured back-to-back wins.

K-State Coach Lon Kruger thought Radunovich's absence was a bit more important.

"I would think Sasha would make a big difference," Kruger said. "He's one of the better players in the (Missouri) Valley (Conference), so obviously I would think that would affect them considerably."

Fogler said Radunovich has not practiced a lot during the last two weeks, but "he'd gut it out on game nights."

Radunovich said ordinarily when he warms up before games, his elbow feels "all right."

"But this time," he said, "that didn't

"I don't think we executed well enough to win this game," he said. "It just wasn't there. We couldn't get the ball inside to out post people much, and almost all of our plays are designed to get the ball inside because that's the closest place to

Lady Cats shooting to get back winning ways

By Daran Newschafer Sports Writer

K-State's Lady Cats will try to turn things around tonight in Lincoln, Neb.

The Lady Cats stand at 7-7 overall and 0-2 in the Big Eight Conference. They have lost their last three games, including a 96-65 pounding from University of Oklahoma Saturday. They will take on their third conference opponent, the Nebraska Comhuskers, at 7:30 p.m. in the Devaney Sports

K-State's last three losses have come against three Oklahoma schools: Oral Roberts, Oklahoma State, and Oklahoma. K-State Coach Matilda Mossman is hoping turning the team bus north will also turn her team's play of late around and get them back on the winning track.

But Mossman only wishes it was that easy. "When you look at who is leading the Big Eight Conference, you see Oklahoma State at 2-0, Oklahoma at 2-0...that's who we just played," she said. "Now we play Nebraska, who is also 2-0 (and 12-2 overall.) So we have to not get down on ourselves, but continue to go out and do the things that we need

"Nebraska has a very high-powered offense," she said. "With veterans like Maurtice Ivy (18.9 ppg) and Amy Stephens (15.9 ppg), they are capable of really taking charge of a basketball game."

Mossman said Cornhusker guard Sabrina Brooks, who comes off the bench, is also scoring in double figures. So the Lady Cats will have their hands full when trying to stop their three-game losing skid.

However, Mossman said the key to K-State turning itself around is not so much dependent on who it plays, but rather on the way K-State itself plays.

"Yes, we have been playing some very good basketball teams, but we have to start helping ourselves out a little. We have to stop making it easy on our opponents by not kilfing ourselves," Mossman said.

Mossman was referring to K-State's game Saturday when the Lady Cats turned the ball over 34 times. Twenty nine of those turnovers happened before K-State was able to get a

"In the Oklahoma game we killed our own effort one-third of the time without making our opponent really work. That is something that we really have to work on," she said. Mossman said K-State will be without the services of sophomore guard Carol Smith for the remainder of the season. Smith, who suffered a stress fracture in her left femur, missed the first part of the season and returned to the Lady Cat lineup over the Christmas break. A recent bone scan showed the fracture had still not healed completely, and the team has decided to apply for a medical hardship ruling for a redshirt season for

'Cats' victory anything but pretty

Ugly, ugly, ugly. After treating Ahearn Field House fans to one of the sweetest, prettiest games in years Saturday with an upset win over the University of Oklahoma, K-State didn't give the sellout crowd much to get excited about in Tuesday night's 58-47 win pver The Wichita State University. Nice win. OK game. Ho-hum. Sure, the 'Cats were scrappy on defense, hustled from start to finish, fought hard - all that kind of stuff. But after the OU win, a letdown was inevitable. Not a big letdown, mind you. But a letdown nonetheless. "I think we were...pretty well (motivated). Maybe not as much as we should have been," K-State point guard Steve Henson said with a hint of hesitation in his voice. "I knew Coach was worried a lot about that." And K-State Coach Lon Kruger should have been worried. Big wins like the one over OU aren't easy to remove from players' minds and Wichita State didn't shape up as a slouch opponent, either. With a loss to the Shockers, every smidgen of Commentary momentum gained from the Oklahoma game would have gone straight to the circular file.

"Coach told us after our win (over OU) that all the good feelings after the game would be negated if we lost three days later," Henson said.

So, K-State went out and beat the cross-state rival Shockers in a game even Kruger admitted was "not a pretty affair."

Even the sellout crowd of 11,220 looked bored. The excitement and intensity that characterized the crowd during the Oklahoma game was missing and understandably so.

Following a game like that with a next year. better one would have been next to impossible.

Another contributing factor in the unsightly, hum-drum appearance of Tuesday's game was the absence of WSU center Sasha Radunovich, the Shockers' leading scorer and rebounder and a native of Titograd, Yugoslavia. Seems that big Sasha had a flare-up of an arm injury he sustained last summer when he wrecked his parents' Yugo.

Radunovich is unquestionably Wichita State's main man, averaging 14.5 points and 7.5 rebounds per game. With his banging inside game and soft touch from outside, Sasha presents a unique threat. Without Radunovich in the lineup, the Shockers didn't rate much of a chance to make a game of it against K-State.

And this is to say nothing of the oh-so-entertaining 'Commie' chants the student section could have directed at Sasha. Oh well, maybe Wichita State will come back to town

As far as this year is concerned, though, the 'Cats need just two more wins against that nameless school located 80 miles down 1-70 to claim the undisputed state championship.

But before the 'Cats can start thinking about breaking that ninegame losing streak against the University of Kansas and Coach Larry Brown Jan. 30 at Lawrence, they have to get past a pair of mediocre Big Eight Conference foes, Oklahoma State University and the University of Colorado. Both contests will be away from Ahearn Field House, and no Big Eight team has a conference road win this year.

No doubt Kruger would accept a pair of ugly wins at Stillwater, Okla. and Boulder, Colo, just as he was able to take last night's less-thanattractive win over WSU.

When it comes time to pick teams for the NCAA tournament at the end of the season, every win is a pretty one. Even the ugly ones.

"They want to give her a chance," Barney Deary, head of umpire development for the minor leagues, said Tuesday.

No woman has ever umpired in the majors. Postema has advanced farther than any female empire. Postema, 34, has been in the ors for 11 seasons. She has the American Association.

"It's our intention, to give her as long and serious a look as possible on her merits," NL President Bart Giamatti told the Miami Elerald. "I want to give her a chance." Postema's opportunity corner Katy Feerley said.

at a time when Commissioner Peter Ueberroth has pushed for more minority hiring, particularly for blacks and Hispanics. The NL is downplaying Postema's gen-der, although promoting her would fulfill baseball's goal.

Posterna worked a handful of spring training games for the American League in 1984 and 1985. She was the plate umpire at last year's Hall of Fame game in Cooperatown, N.Y., and got high marks from her supervisors.

It is highly unlikely Posterna will begin the season at the major league level. The NL already has four minor league ampires under contract, but Posterna could get one of two openings for the relief pool, which falls in because of vacations and illness.

There's a chance if she does well she sould get one of those positions," NL spokeswoman

Officials reject site for satellite

From Staff and Wire Reports

K-State officials have decided against a site near McCain Auditorium for the $6 million satellite telecommunications network which will be built on the campus.

Officials are now expected to decide by the end of the week whether to locate the facility southeast of the Veterinary Medicine Center or at Umberger Hall, which houses continuing education

The new facility will house the Educational Communications Center, which will dispatch satellite programs across the state. A satellite dish will be installed, probably at a location separate from the main building, so that it remains free of the static and interference caused by surrounding buildings.

K-State was selected for the facility because of the large number of specialty programs offered by the University and the outreach responsibilty that accompanies land grant status. The satellite will enable K-foreign languages and calculus for high school students. The center will also broadcast information on current public issues and provide the state with access to campus events such as Landon Lectures.

State to offer electronic instruction. Course areas will range from food inspection for USDA inspectors to committee.

The Board of Regents is currently applying for a federal grant to help finance the installation of a system to link the other regents institutions and Washburn University with the satellite communications center.

George Miller, vice president of administration, said the McCain site was ruled out because of "a number of factors in considering the feasibility and the problematics.'

One factor was that putting it there would preclude further expansion, especially in the music department. He also mentioned access, landscaping and building appearance as influential factors.

Miller said President Jon Wefald has been given ulternative site recommendations from two subcommittees.

Dennis Law, professor of landscape architecture and head of the advisory committee on campus development, said preserving the beauty and proportion of campus structures and avoiding an "environmental problem" was a priority of his

Dollar's devaluation cuts subscriptions to library journals

By Karen Allen Collegian Reporter

Rising inflation and devaluation of the U.S. dollar against foreign currencies have caused the cancellation of $300,000 worth of library journal subscriptions for the 1988-89 year, according to Brice Hobrock, dean of Nearly 25 percent of the journals acquired by the K-State library are from European publishers, he said, adding that the cost of those journals rose 46 percent, or $142,800, in 1986-87.

The library was able to maintain all the titles last year by shifting book money to subscriptions, but Hobrock said he was not happy with the consequences.

"Books primarily support undergraduate work, whereas periodicals support research," he said. "If you drop more books, you hurt both undergrads and non-science subjects."

Hobrock said that "popular" subscriptions, such as Time and Newsweek, are regularly used by the undergraduate population and are fairly cheap. The expensive journals are generally science-based and are used by graduates doing research

A subscription for a brain research magazine cost the library $3,826 last year, Hobrock said, adding that the cost will rise to $4,825 in 1988.

Sharing periodicals with the University of Kansas is one avenue being pursued by the library administration to retain some of the more expensive

"The only drawback is that federal copyright laws state that a library may make only five copies from a single magazine over five years," he said. "After that you have to pay a copyright charge, which can get quite expensive.'

Hobrock said K-State was able to enter the devaluation period in a much stronger position than most universities because of supplements from the legislature a few years ago. But those reserves are almost gone, he said, and cancellations will have to be applied for the 1988-89 year.

The faculty will play a big part in deciding which subscriptions will be cancelled, Hobrock said.

Diversity challenges new dean

By Becky Howard Staff Writer

Among framed pictures on the walls of Thomas Isenhour's office is a set of photographs of a small plane - his own plane, which he and a partner used to fly and give lessons in. For the dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, flying is a "mental sport" and a "nice mental discipline" - which seems to reflect the personality of the man in charge of the University's largest college.

"I'm the kind of person who wants to learn and grow all of my life," he said. "That's the nice part about being a part of a university you are immersed in all of these thinking people."

Profile

Isenhour, who began his duties last October, replaced William Stamey, who retired July 1 of last year. Most recently Isenhour was dean of science at Utah State University, a position which he said was "rather limiting" compared to his current task. He has described the College of Arts and Sciences as "a university in itself."

"Being dean of arts and sciences brings me in contact with leading students teachers and scholars in all disciplines. This is the most exciting, intellectual environment I can imagine. I learn daily about diverse intellectual achievements both ancient and modem," he said. "It's a terrific challenge, but that's what's neat about life."

Isenhour, whose background in chemistry will allow him to teach chemistry at K-State next fall, said reading books related to the area of arts and being acquainted with professionals of diverse backgrounds has helped him become familiar with the humanities and other nonscience disciplines.

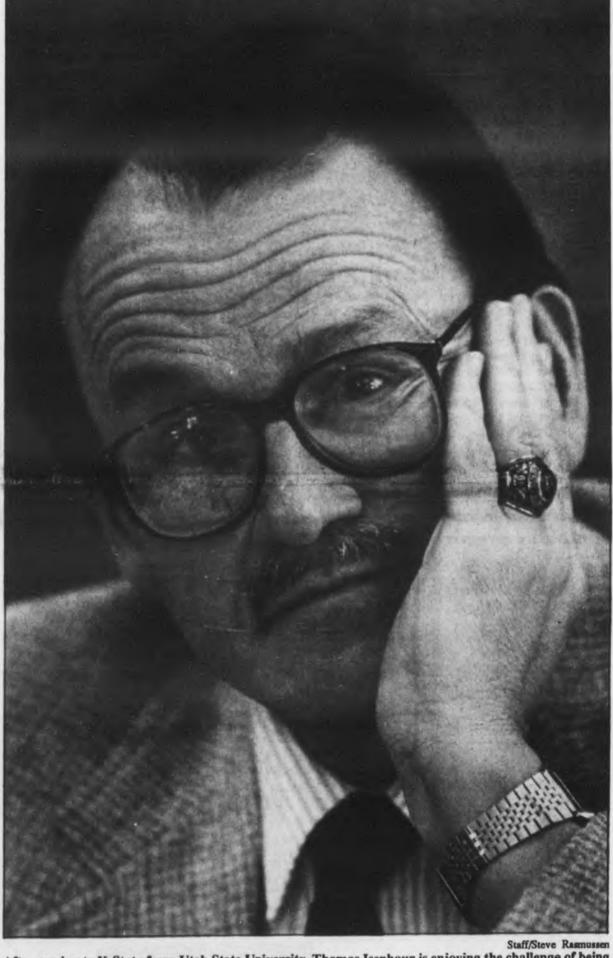

He has also been visiting with all of the faculty in the college's 24 departments as part of his own education process for his job.

"The College of Arts and Sciences has a real strong and exciting faculty. Some of the things they are doing are just tremendous. But there is a resource problem," he

"The resource base (at the University) is very thin. The quality of faculty far exceeds the right for Kansas to claim it. We are reaching economic times when we are losing those faculty at a rapid rate. The danger is that better financial institutions could rob us into mediocrity."

Isenhour is also concerned about a lack of central support resources, which he says can put a limit on what students and faculty can sity's peer institutions is made, that's a devastating loss." Isenhour said the college is financially lagging behind.

"The College of Arts and Sciences, compared to our peer institutions, is about $2 million underfunded," he said. "Out of a budget of about $22 million, that's almost 10 percent. You take away 10 percent of IBM or General Motors or any other major corporation and Although Isenhour has been at the University only a short time, he can already see K-State's potential which is "to become a much greater university."

"There is not a single problem on this campus that can't be solved without some reasonable financial resources. And you can't always say that about a university," he said.

As for living in Manhattan, Isenhour quotes Sidney Sheldon from his recent book Windmills of the Gods, which describes the Junction City and Manhattan communities: "It's a nice place to live, but I wouldn't want to visit there."

"I really like Manhattan. I like the geography and the blue sky. And it's easy to get across town,"

Reagan: Aid refusal would be 'mistake'

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - President Reagan said Wednesday that Congress will commit "one of America's most tragic mistakes" if it refuses to give more money to Nicaraguan House Speaker Jim Wright, D-Texas, accused Reagan of pursuing a military victory and the overthrow of the Sandinista regime.

There was a sharpening of rhetoric on both sides as supporters and opponents of rebel aid tried to marshal forces for a showdown vote next month that will sustain the Contra force or effectively put it out of business. The White House angrily rebutted charges that the administration was trying to sabotage the peace process in Central America.

"The Democrats, Chris Dodd and others, they want a surrender," said presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater. "They think surrender is the best way to achieve peace. We disagree."

Dodd, a Democratic senator from Connecticut and opponent of Contra aid, had said the administration "ought to at least see whether or not that peace process can succeed" before pressing for more Contra aid. Replying to Fitzwater's statement, Dodd said, "These smear tactics are only further evidence of how desperate the people in the White House are to keep their failed policy

Reagan will submit a new aid request late this month, probably next Tuesday. A Republican congressional source said he would seek upwards of $100 million. The House will vote on the request Feb. 3.

If the House approves the request, it will go to the Senate the next day. If it is rejected in either house, both sides agree it would be the end of the line for the Contras,

"We're at a critical juncture," Reagan said. "If Congress votes down aid this time, the decision may well be irrevocable, and if that happens it's my great fear that we will have abandoned all hope for democracy in Nicaragua and peace in Central America."

Speaking to an audience of Contra-aid supporters invited to the East Room address, make or break vote on the freedom fighters" the term he uses for the Contras.

"If we abandon them now, if Congress votes down aid, we will be abandoning the only real cause for peace and freedom in Nicaragua," the president said. "We will be consigning the peace process to an obscure footnote in history and handing the Soviet Union one of its greatest strategic victories since World War II." Reagan said, "This vote will be remembered by the American people either as the time we acted to support freedom and kept our mainland secure or as the the beginning of one of America's most tragic mistakes. "Of course, the consequences for Latin Reagan said, "this is the moment of truth, the American would be even worse: an emboldened communist left would once again step up the offensive in El Salvador, Costa Rica. Guatemala and Honduras," Reagan said.

> Meanwhile, Speaker Wright said "the sudden speed with which the administration ... was plowing straight ahead with more military money before even waiting to test the sincerity of the new concessions offered leads me to the reluctant conclusion that those in charge of administration policy do not really want a peaceful settlement."

"They want a military solution, aimed at the overthrow of the government of Nicaragua by force of arms supplied by the United States," Wright said.

Farmer finds 'stone' in patch

FREETOWN, Sierra Leone - A potato farmer dug up one of the largest diamonds ever found in this mineral-rich country, but it was broken into three pieces in a dispute over whether it was real, a government official said Wednesday.

The unidentified farmer found the 307-carat gem Friday while digging up what he thought was a stone in his potato patch in the eastern Kono district.

The man and a friend broke the stone into three pieces following an argument over whether it was really a diamond or

Officials of the National Diamond Mining Corporation confirmed it was a diamond.

Supply shortage creates stink

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia — There is a serious shortage of medical supplies in Belgrade clinics, and patients have started bringing their own soap to raise the level of hygiene, a newspaper reported Wednesday.

The Vecernje Novosti daily said the shortages were caused by a financial squeeze affecting the city's state-run health service, which also resulted in a 20-day delay in paying December salaries to its staff.

"The lack of drugs and medical supplies, including ... soap, detergents and alcohol, has already affected the work of dental and some X-ray (departments)," said the daily.

"Hygiene has fallen to the lowest possible level, and even disposable items have to be sterilized for multiple use," said the report, adding that patients are bringing along their own soap to help overcome the shortages.

Teens kill for jar of pennies

AUSTIN, Minn. - Neighbors of an 86-year-old man who police say was killed by two teen-agers for a jar of pennies shake their heads in disbelief when they talk about the victim and the two 16-year-olds.

"You feel it's going to happen in Chicago or New York; now it's next door," said Jane Felten, a secretary at St. Augustine Roman Catholic Church, where both the victim, Michael L. Fink, and the suspects attended services.

"They murdered this man for a jarful of pennies. Isn't that sad," said Carol Kuettner, executive director of the Mower County Senior Center, where Fink was a frequent visitor.

Police arrested the teen-agers, whose names have not been released because they are juveniles, on Monday, three days after a neighbor found Fink's home on fire.

Snow buries part of Kansas

GOODLAND - Road crews dug northwestern Kansas out of deep drifts of blown snow Wednesday and freed the backup of stranded travelers on Interstate 70.

"They have done an excellent job getting streets and roads open. Most all the streets are open. You're not going to go very fast, but you can get around," Cheyenne County sheriff's dispatcher Leta Henderson said of conditions in St. Francis in the extreme northwest corner of the state.

"We had a lot of wind and a lot of drifting," she said, adding that the snowfall there was estimated at between 10 and 18 inches.

Hearings set for new lottery

TOPEKA - The Senate Federal and State Affairs Committee decided Wednesday to hold hearings on a bill the Legislature must pass to approve Kansas' agreement to join the Lotto America multi-state lottery.

Sen. Ed Reilly, R-Leavenworth, the committee chairman, told the panel the hearings would be this morning.

Sen. Bill Morris, R-Wichita, initially proposed sending the bill to the full Senate without having hearings, saying time was of the essence. The first game in the multi-state lottery is scheduled to start Feb. 3. Lottery officials will conduct practice games Jan. 28-30 at retail outlets.

However, Morris changed his mind and proposed hearings on the bill after Attorney General Robert T. Stephan told the committee the multi-state lottery's first game could start before the Legislature passes legislation approving the contract.

Stephan said last week the Legislature would have to pass legislation approving the lottery commission's contract with the other states. Kansas entered into the agreement in September.

The other states are Missouri, Iowa, Oregon, Maryland, West Virginia, and Rhode Island, along with the District of Columbia.

LAWRENCE - One of the organizers for a group that had pushed for passage of a city ordinance amendment banning discrimination against homosexuals expressed disappointment at the city commission's refusal to take action on it.

Liz Gowdy of Citizens for Human Rights was especially critical of remarks by Commissioner Sandy Praeger, who said during the debate Tuesday night she didn't think laws should "get out in front of societal changes."

Praeger said that passing laws that don't reflect the views of the majority constitute a "tyranny of the minority."

After the commission voted 3-2 not to take action on the proposed measure, Gowdy remarked, "If Abraham Lincoln waited for the slaveowners to free their slaves before issuing the Emancipation Proclamation, we probably would still have slaves today.'

Still, she said that with more education and documented cases of discrimination, perhaps the commission will change its mind.

Jim Mullins, president of the Alliance of Citizens for Traditional Values, a group that fought the proposed amendment, said he was pleased by the commission's vote.

"Until you prove that discrimination exists, why should you have a law prohibiting it?" he said.

More than 100 peopled crowded into the commission chamber for Tuesday night's debates. Many of them had voiced their views at an emotion-packed hearing last week.

The commission was considering a recommendation from the Human Relations Commission to amend the human rights ordinance to prohibit discrimination based on sexual orientation in employment, housing and public accommodations. The center of the controversy was the protection the amendment would give homosexuals.

Mayor Mike Amyx, who cast the deciding vote against taking action on the recommendation, said it came down to one question: "Is there a need to change our ordinance at the present time? From all of the information I have received I do not believe that I can at this time."

Before the meeting, Commissioners Mike Rundle and Dennis Constance declared their support for the amendment while Amyx and Praeger both said they were leaning against it.

Commissioner Bob Schumm, who had been undecided, concluded that it was not the time to change the ordinance.

"I do think there is prejudice, but I seriously doubt there is a high level of discrimination in the three areas we are talking about," Schumm said.

There had been complaints about discrimination against homosexuals ranging from slander to egg-throwing to death threats, but Schumm said the proposed amendment would not address most of those incidents.

He said none of the officials and associates he contacted during the past week reported any incidents of discrimination in housing, employment or public accommodations.

Praeger said that federal or state governments had already acted on all other categories included in the Lawrence human fights ordinance before they were dealt with locally, reflecting a change in societal attitudes.

The Lawrence's ordinance, passed in 1983, prohibits discrimination based on race, sex, religion, color, national origin, age, ancestry or handicap.

Hart pledges to resolve contribution allegations

By The Associated Press

Democratic presidential contender Gary Hart pledged on Wednesday to get to the bottom of allegations concerning illegal contributions to his campaign, while Republicans Bob Dole and Jack Kemp feuded publicly over Social Security.

Dole, in Iowa, defended his 1985 support for freezing Social Security cost-of-living increases, while Kemp said the two candidates' views on the retirement system marked "a fundamental difference" between them.

In New Hampshire, meanwhile, Hart faced questions on a new controversy as his rivals prepared for a minority-sponsored debate Wednesday night in Iowa, where the Feb. 8 caucuses will provide the first formal test for the Democrats.

Five of the candidates were participating in the debate. Hart and Tennessee Sen. Albert Gore Jr. were skipping it.

The questions for Hart in New Hampshire concerned a report that Stuart Karl, marketer of Jane Fonda workout and Playboy videos, had bankrolled campaign expenses through illegal contributions in Hart's 1984 presidential bid and again in 1986 and 1987.

For Hart, who has been trying to overcome questions about his personal life by stressing high moral standards in his public life, the latest disclosures were seen as a new blow in Iowa.

"He was in deep trouble at an organizational level," said Iowa Democratic Party spokesman Phil Roeder. "He might get buried by this."

The Miami Herald, whose disclosure of his relationship with model Donna Rice prompted Hart to withdraw from the race for seven months, said Karl has chauffeured Hart in Lear jets and helicopters, paid a monthly salary of $3,000 to Hart aide Dennis Walto, and covered 1984 campaign expenses such as car rentals and printing costs.

"We're looking into all the allegations. ... I don't know anything about the details," Hart said. "We will comply with all the laws and regulations."

Hart said he will "hold myself responsible for whatever happened and not shift any blame to anyone else." But at the same time, he said, 'Obviously a candidate cannot know every detail" of his campaign.

Karl declined to answer questions. In Iowa, Walto said he had a job with the video producer and was not on Hart's payroll while being paid by Karl. "I was a volunteer" for Hart, he said.

Federal Election Commission spokeswoman Sharon Snyder declined to say whether the agency is investigating.

$1,000 contributions to a presidential candidate, and corporations are barred from making any contributions. The law bars assigning an employee to work on a candidate's behalf for more than an hour a week unless that work is reported as a contribution, subject to the same limit.

One former Hart official said it was common for the 1984 campaign to contract for services from supporters, such as car rental agencies, who did not expect to be paid. A second former campaign official said Karl had bankrolled many campaign expenses. Both former officials commented only on condition their names not be used.

One said Walto was a full-time advance man for Hart while on Karl's payroll.

Among the Republicans, Dole and Kemp clashed in what has become an increasingly bitter dispute over Social Security - an item of particular sensitivity in Iowa with its large and politically active elderly groups.

Dole, the Senate Republican leader from Kansas, suggested that if he had sided with Kemp against a taxraising compromise in 1983 the system might be broke by now. "I don't know what we'd be sending out in Social Security envelopes today," Dole said.

And he said he voted to freeze Social Security cost-of-living increases in 1985 "because I was worried about the deficit."

Kemp responded that tax increases backed by Dole were not needed to save the system from bankpruptcy.

Freedom laws lack consistency

Now that Martin Luther King Day has passed, along with the variety of celebrations and observances that accompanied it, our sleepy Kansas campus can settle back into the comfortable gloom of winter, confident that racism has been ripped out of our life like a large weed.

Maybe we'll even take a minute out of our busy day to praise the federal government for designating a special day to remind us just how bad racism was. In fact, maybe we'll feel so good about the fact that racism is so scarce in Kansas that we'll kick up our feet on the table and relax with a little TV while we ponder the lack of prejudice in our midst.

However, maybe while we're flipping through the channels on our TV, we'll run across the American Cablevision channel out of Kansas City. In that case, there is a good chance we'll soon be watching a program produced, directed and starred in by the Ku Klux Klan.

Yes, Dorothy, here in calm, quiet Kansas the Ku Klux Klan has chosen a station from which to broadcast their programs completely unedited by any other source. Now don't blame American Cablevision. They don't want the KKK on their station any more than anyone else would want the stigma of associating with this white supremacist group.

In fact, when first approached by Klan members, the station refused to air a series of racist tapes, saying their contract did not require them to run any programs that were not produced locally. The next step taken by the Klan members was obvious.

They decided to produce the programs locally, knowing that American Cablevision was under contract with Kansas City to give broadcast time to any program locally produced. Even more humiliating for the station, not only do they have to air the racist program but they also have to train the KKK members on how to use the equipment to produce the program. Klan members, who intend to take advantage of the Cablevision contract, will soon have free license to broadcast their racial bias on television.

There is, however, one way to avoid racial conflict on the airways. American Cablevision could use its editorial control to tone down the Klan programs, preventing as many offensive racial slurs as possible. This is where the federal government comes in.

Remember the federal government - the same one that passed Martin Luther King Day? Well, that wasn't all it passed. It also passed the Cable Communication Act in 1984, which keeps the cable company from having any editorial control at all over the programs it runs on its community-access channel. Therefore, the Klan can run whatever program they desire while the Cablevision people take the blame.

This opens up all sorts of questions about what is allowable on community-access channels. By the same law, would excessive profanity or nudity be acceptable? I don't think so. But is it any worse for children to watch nudity than for them to watch one color of human being berated by another?

Our ever-sensitive government - which decided on one day that high school students shouldn't be able to print stories about teenage pregnancy in their school paper (although I'm sure it would offend only a few students) has decided that it is perfectly fine to let extremist groups air whatever they wish, although many people will undoubtedly be offended.

The government's desire for control is misplaced. When the owner of a station does not wish to air a program that will be seriously offensive to many, yet is required by law to broadcast it, there is something wrong. What a way to celebrate the birthday of Martin Luther King Jr.

U.S. destroying Gulf peace plan

The U.S. foreign policy in the Persian Gulf continues to be inconsistent, and it is still not clear as to why the United States is engineering a vast military buildup in the Gulf. Officially, the United States is claiming that it has sent its naval forces to the Gulf to protect international shipping and to ensure freedom of navigation within Gulf waters and the sea of Oman, but one only has to examine the evidence to see that the administration's actions don't match its words. A brief look at the inconsistencies in the U.S. policy may suggest other possible reasons for deep U.S. involvement there.

Serious U.S. involvement was triggered by two events. The first event was the Iraqi attack upon the USS Stark, in which 17 American sailors died. Even before the Iraqi government had the chance to officially acknowledge and explain the reasons behind the attack, the U.S. administration called the attack a "mistake" on the part of Iraq and announced that Iraq had been pardoned and should be more careful when choosing targets in the future! The following day, Iraq officially declared that it had made a mistake. The U.S. administration not only forgot about the incident and loss, but it also made a loan to Iraq for the amount of $1 billion, and the U.S. media quickly switched their focus away from Iraq to Iran!

The second event was when Kuwait asked the United States to reflag and escort three of its oil tankers. It seems the U.S. administration had been waiting for this invitation because it offered to reflag and escort 11 tankers instead.

Kuwait is a vital ally of Iraq and allows Iraq to use its ports for military as well as commercial purposes. It has allowed Iraq to use its Bobiyan Island as a base from which to bombard Iranian cities. Iraqi planes frequently use Kuwaiti airspace to attack Iran, destroying industrial and civilian targets

In spite of all these facts, the U.S. administration insists on reflagging Kuwaiti tankers and still claims neutrality in the Iran-Iraq conflict. The inconsistencies in the policy seem to exist for the purpose of distorting public opinion. Otherwise, while the U.S.

makes little sense to spend millions to escort tankers in the Persian Gulf while the United States itself is only receiving a very small portion of the oil that they carry.

Since the United States increased its military presence in the Persian Gulf, attacks upon tankers have doubled according to reports by Lloyds of London. Iraq is responsible for more than three-fourths of these attacks. Reflagging has caused some Arab states in the Gulf to become more involved in the Iran-Iraq conflict, creating more tension and opportunities for bloodshed. The destruction of Kuwaiti oil platforms, the damaging of American-owned tankers and reflagged Kuwaiti tankers are all examples of what happened due to increased tensions. Prior to the U.S. reflagging operation, such incidents never happened. Also prior to the American military buildup, there was no need for mine sweepers because there were

So far the United States has lost three helicopters and their crews. A mine sweeper was totally destroyed and its 40 crew members lost. The United States has attacked and destroyed one Iranian commercial ship, three Iranian boats and two Iranian oil platforms, while its mission is supposedly to protect the oil. As a result of these attacks, more than 12 Iranians have died. Iraq has increased its attacks on tankers, and international waters have become unsafe for navigation. One confusing claim is that the presence of more than 30 U.S. warships, mine sweepers and 30,000 American military personnel will put an end to the Iran-Iraq war. It must be noted that the United States Rahimi is a graduate student in economics.

decided to increase its military might in the Gulf exactly at the same time that the U.N. Security Council signed the resolution which asked both Iran and Iraq to cease fighting. The resolution states that no country should make any attempts to escalate tension in the region, and so the inconsistency of the U.S. policy becomes evident. The U.S. military buildup has not only increased tensions but has considerably reduced the chances for a

Since the U.S. military buildup began, Iran economy is suffering a huge budget deficit, it has not expressed any opinion about the resolution, and the buildup has contributed sharply to Gulf tensions. U.S. foreign policy is largely responsible for the failure of this resolution, which at present has little chance

> An increased U.S. military presence in the Persian Gulf has not reduced tensions nor has it been able to secure the waters for navigation. Then, why does this vast naval force remain? Jimmy Carter said the cost of the present involvement in the Gulf is more than the value of the oil exports. Still, we do not have an answer to our question. Casper Weinberger, former secretary of defense, gave a clear-cut response to our question. He said we are there to overthrow the Iranian government in the long run.

> The British Broadcasting Company has repeatedly stated the United States is looking for an excuse to start a war with Iran. Edward Loadwalker, a military adviser to Reagan, stated we are there to threaten Iran and to aid Iraq in its efforts to reduce Iranian oil exports. He asserted Iraq must step up its attacks upon Iranian ships. Several statements have been made that show the same kinds of intentions.

> There is clear evidence that the United States is trying to start a war with Iran, despite what officials may claim. I do not believe Americans want to enter a war that will be tied to a policy of inconsistency and confusion. The memories of the Vietnam War are still fresh in many minds. Now is the time the American people should demand an explanation from their representatives as to why the United States is really in the Gulf.

Regents plan telephone network for audio, visual communication

By Jeff Schrag Collegian Reporter

Kansas regents' schools may eventually be linked by one of the most advanced and cost efficient telecommunications networks available, said Nil Whittington, associate director of academics for the Kansas Board of Regents.

The new telecommunications network is intended to enable other universities in the state to access the satellite communications center to be built at K-State, Whittington said.

By annexing the KANS-A-N network - the state of Kansas' telephone system — with a codec machine, regents schools will be able to engage in two-way audio, twoway video communication. The codec machine encodes audio and telephone lines to another codec driving to a centralized location,

Once the machines are installed, the system will cost $1 per hour during the day and approximately 15 cents per hour at night. The cost for alternative systems varies from $6 a minute for satellite time and $100 per hour for guaranteed access to telephone lines for two-way communication, Whittington said.

Kansas pays for the unused KANS-A-N lines even though most state offices are closed in the evenings. The codec network would be most active during these uncrowded Courses could be offered via the codec system to students at any of the other schools. In each instance, all parties would have total visual and audio contact without bulky equipment - just a video camera, a TV monitor and a telephone jack, Whittington said.

Most classes currently conducted via telecommunications systems use only two-way audio and one-way video, she said.

People can succeed in the business world regardless of their background by applying the education they've acquired and understanding the environment, said Wayne Franklin, guest speaker at a public forum held Wednesday in the Union Big 8 Room.

Locals bottle homemade brew

By Chuck Horner Staff Writer

Some sources credit its origin with the Mesopotamians in 4200 B.C., and an ancient Assyrian tablet mentions that it was carried on board Noah's Ark. However, most simply drink and enjoy beer without contemplating its origin.

Beer is available in cans, bottles and kegs of all sizes, in innumerable types and brands, and has been a part of American life ever since the landing of the Mayflower.

The making of beer in quantities adequate to quench the thirsts of the masses has by-in-large been relegated to the large corporate breweries, but if paying $5 to $6 for a sixpack seems outrageous, beer can be brewed at home for a fraction of the cost, and with significantly more satisfaction, according to local home-brewers.

Home brewing is not new. In fact, the Massachusetts Legislature passed an act in 1798 encouraging the brewing of beer, stating "the wholesome qualities of malt liquors recommend them to general use as an important means of preserving the health of the citizens of this and a home-brewer who has taught beer-making classes for University for Man, said he has avoided buying beer for over seven years by brewing

"I bought this store in 1980, and the beer-making items were already stocked," he said. "I had thought about discontinuing them, but people kept coming in to buy the items.

"I finally read the books and about three months later I took a beermaking class at UFM and I've been home-brewing beer ever since," he

Taylor said all the necessary equipment to brew beer can be purchased for about $22, but for those willing to spend about $45, they can get some of the nice-to-have items that will enhance beer making, including enough materials to make the first five gallons of beer.

"The five basic ingredients of beer are malt extract made from barley, sugar (preferably corn sugar), water, hops and brewer's yeast," he said.

Taylor said home-brewed beer should always be brewed in dark colored 12-ounce, long-neck bottles.

"There is a significant interest in beer-making. Every time UFM has a class, there are eight to 10 participants. About 400 to 500 people a year come in here buying beer-making items. There is even a beer-making club in Topeka," he said.

Dean Creighton, graduate student in food science, said he learned to make beer along with yogurt, tofu and wine in a food fermentations

"Most home-brew averages 5 to 6 percent alcohol, but you can vary the amount of alcohol by the amount of sugar added to the beer up to a point. If too much sugar is added, the yeast won't work properly," he said.

"Home-brewed beer costs about 19 to 20 cents a bottle and you can make up to 200 gallons a year per person in your household, but you can't sell any," Creighton said.

The "Home Beermakers Guide" by Leigh P. Beadle lists the following items of equipment as essential to Add three cups of sugar and stir again until until completely dissolved. Bring mix to a boil for two minutes, then pour it into the four gallons of cold water. Stir the entire mix thoroughly or the hot mix will sink to the bottom. Pour a fresh seven gram pack of brewer's yeast into the beer and after 10 minutes, stir thoroughly.

Step 2.

Secure the airtight lid by placing it over the fermenter, then press down near the inside edge of the lid until you feel part of the lid snap on, then press firmly around the outer edge until it is completely sealed. Fill the fermentation lock two-thirds full with water and fit it moderately into the hole in the lid.

remain in the fermenter for seven days to settle. Room temperature must be over 65 degrees.

Step 3.

Siphon the beer carefully off the yeast layer into bottles containing a level half-teaspoon of table sugar. Be careful not to put in more sugar than a half-teaspoon or you will risk having the bottles burst. Cap the bottles and give each one a quick twirl upside down to dissolve the sugar.

Allow to age upright at room temperature for at least 15 days. Chill beer and mugs prior to serving. Pour slowly without stopping into a large beer mug, leaving behind the slight yeast layer from the bottom of the bottle.

Import sales rising

By The Chicago Tribune

CHICAGO - Corona vows it will pass Heineken as the nation's leading imported beer this year, but officials of the Dutch company disdain the high-flying Mexican brew as a fad, albeit one of mega-proportions.

Meanwhile, upstart Australianmade Foster's boasts that it has become the "Coke" of beer in the United States, and Molson of Canada promises its southern neighbors a "step up from American beer with a heartier and crisper taste."

The war among foreign beer producers intensified last year as sales of imported beers in the United States rose 5.5 percent in the first 10 months and domestic beer sales remained flat, according to Beer Marketer's Insights, a West Nyack, N.J., industry newsletter.

Fueling much of the imports' rise in recent years has been Corona, leap 82 percent, to 25 million cases from 13.7 million in 1986.

"We are projecting we will pass Heineken in 1988," said Mike Mazzoni, executive vice president and general manager of Barton Beers Ltd., the Chicago-based importer of Corona in 25 of the 33 states in which it's distributed.

"We see Corona as a super-fad," said Leo Van Munching Jr., the president of Van Munching & Co. Inc., the New York-based importer of Heineken. "But they are certainly viable at this point."

Heineken has had things pretty much its own way since Leo Van Munching Sr. began importing the Dutch beer just after Prohibition ended in 1933.

In 1986 Heineken led the field with 35.8 million cases. It will finish first again for 1987 when the final figures are in, but with diminished which last year saw its U.S. sales numbers, Beer Marketer's Insights predicts.

Van Munching's struggle to stay at the top comes at a time when the rest of the beer world is mystified by Corona's success.

The beer made by Cervenceria Modelo S.A. De C.V. in Mexico City has developed a cult following, similar to what Coors enjoyed when it was unavailable east of the Mississippi River, said Eric Shepard, executive editor of Insights.

Corona's success has been phenomenal, considering that its numbers are coming from only 33 states, Mazzoni said. It is not distributed in the heavily populated Northeast and

Corona has more than a 56 percent share of imports in the states where it first came in," Shepard

In 1983, 1984 and 1985 demand for Corona far outstripped supply.

So, Barton canceled its advertising for the brew in those years.

When a brewery expansion sent more beer north to meet demand, Barton spend $3.5 million in advertising and promotion in 1986 and nearly tripled that to $10 million last year, Mazzoni said.

In recent years, he said, Corona was such a hot summertime seller that Barton had to put distributors on a rationing system. As once was true for Coors, absence seems to make the throat grow drier.

Competitors, though, demean Corona as a "yuppie" beer and say trend-chasers squeeze a lime into it to make it palatable.

"If it's so wonderful to put a lime into, why don't people put a lime in their Bud?" Van Munching said. "Certainly Bud is a far superior beer to that."

Mazzoni contends that Corona's success can be traced to its similarity to American beers.

'Corona delivers taste without the heaviness of the European beers," he added. "In surveys, the one word that keeps showing up is 'drinkability.' (Beer consumers) can drink Corona the same way they drink Lite or Bud."

A rival of Mazzoni's applies the same comparison to explain the popularity of his favorite brew, Molson Lager.

"For people who are used to an American beer, the taste profile of a Canadian is not a dramatic change, but it is a step up in terms of heartier and crisper product," said Peter Fearon, president of Martlet Importing Co., of North Hills, N.Y.

Fearon said sales of Molson in the United States increased about 4 percent last year - the same rate of growth as all Canadian imports. Molson continued to be America's favorite Canadian import.

As for Corona topping Heineken

this year. Fearon has serious doubts. "Heineken is an awfully formidable competitor that does an awful lot of things right," Fearon said. Last summer, Corona's rise began to level off, Mazzoni said. But he said the summer figures are being compared to numbers established the previous summer, when the supply surged dramatically because of new brewing capacity.

The slowdown, however, occurred about the same time that an unfounded rumor surfaced in Nevada. At the beginning of the peak beer-selling summer months, a rumor began circulating that Corona had been tainted with urine.

Though Mazzoni discounts any connection between the slowdown and the rumor, he seethes when he recalls the difficulty dealing with the blatantly false story. "It cost us millions of dollars."

Student saves man's life, receives Red Cross award

By Robert Clasen Collegian Reporter

The Riley County Chapter of The American Red Cross has issued only two Certificates of Merit in its history. During a presentation at their Manhattan offices Wednesday afternoon, Katheran Price, freshman in pre-med and a nurse at St. Mary Hospital, added her name to that list.

"This is the highest award given by the American Red Cross," said Enell Foerster, chairman of the health and safety committee of the local chapter.

On May 8, 1987, while driving home from work, Price stopped her car in front of a house on Ft. Riley Boulevard and ran up to where she noticed several people gathered around a man who had fallen in his Hurbert Neyer, 79, had collapsed of a heart attack while mowing his lawn.

Price immediately began adminis- him. tering cardiopulmonary resuscitation after finding no pulse, and maintained it for about 12 minutes, until an ambulance arrived.

"A policeman was asking me if he could move my car," Price said. She had parked it on Ft. Riley Boulevard. "I didn't care about my car, I had other things on my mind," she said.

"There is no question that the early resuscitative efforts set the stage for his eventual recovery," Roger Reitz, doctor of internal medicine at Memorial Hospital, wrote in a letter to the Red Cross.

"I was just happy to hear he had recovered," Price said.

At the presentation, Neyer, accompanied by his wife Vida, finally met the woman who saved his life. "It's good to see you again," Price

Neyer said he was feeling OK, as

"I can't do anything I want to, but I can do more than I could for a while," he said.

Price said she would like to see Kansas become one of the first states to require CPR training before acquiring a driver's license, and is pushing for manditory CPR training in high schools. She hopes her actions will help to focus the public's attention on the importance of CPR.

She said Kansas high school students are required to take drivers education.

"Why not also require CPR training?" she asked. "It's just as important as the work we are doing on AIDS and drugs."

The American Red Cross Certificate of Merit, signed by President Reagan, is given for selfless and humane action.

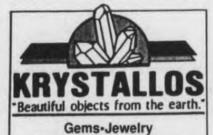

"I think this (Price's action) exemplifies that old saying 'people helping people," Foerster said.

Simmons looks to next year

By Russ Ewy Sports Writer

Lance Simmons is re-evaluating his role on K-State's men's basketball team. But not by choice.

A pre-season knee injury caused Simmons to be redshirted. So now, instead of coming off the bench and putting in solid minutes of play, he sits on the sidelines watching and cheering for his teammates.

"The coach (Kruger) and I decided that it might be better for me to have an extra year to mature more, to be a little older and to have me around, I guess," Simmons said. "I wouldn't be able to play again until playoff time ... even then, I'm not sure if I could come back."

The 6-foot-5 forward finished strong last season, replacing Norris Coleman in the Wildcats' last five contests. He also started the season strong, earning a spot in K-State's top five during the 'Cats' first 14 games before Coleman regained his eligibility.

While practicing last fall, Simmons fractured his knee after a shot.

"I was going up for a shot, and when I came down it gave out and snapped," he said. "I wasn't quite sure what it was, so I went to the doctor and found out that it was fractured."

Even though he has accepted the fact he cannot play this season, Simmons finds it difficult to be a

"From the bench it's kind of hard to watch them play. I want to get out there."

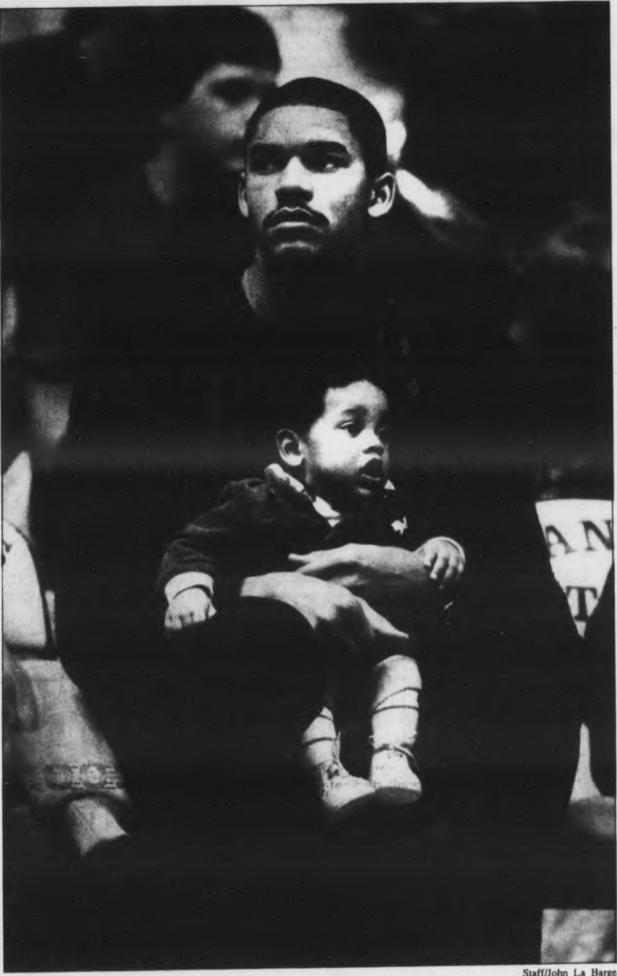

But he appreciates what his teammates are accomplishing.

"The group out there is working real hard," he said. "Hopefully, we will contend for the Big Eight (Conference) title."

Simmons has already set his sights on the 1988-89 season, and with the progress in rehabilitating his knee after surgery last November, he plans on working with the team in practice as soon as possible. "My knee is coming along fine. We're doing a lot of work trying to get it back in shape," he said. "When I start practicing again, I'll help push them along in practice.

"Next year, I hope to come back and be able to play without being scared of hurting my leg again," Simmons said. "I want to go out and play my best and try to keep the team winning. I'll be back and, hopefully, contribute a lot."

K-State Wildcat Lance Simmons and his seven-month-old son Orlando sit on the bench during half time of the K-State-Oklahoma game Saturday night. Simmons is out because of a knee injury.

Ligament damage most common

By Chad L. Sanborn Staff Writer

You've done it too many times to count. You drive the right side of the lane, right hand dribbling the ball. As you push the ball behind your back, switching from the right to the left hand, you plant your foot. The head fake to the right is simple enough, but this time when your body goes left -

SNAP. Injury to the anterior cruciate ligament — the ligament which runs from the front of the shin to the back of the knee - is the most common knee injury. It also happens to be the worst, said Dr. Guy M. Smith, director of not be repaired - patients may the Ericksen Sports Medicine Clinic in the Lafene Student Health Center.

Damage to the anterior cruciate, unlike damage to other ligaments, cannot be repaired by sewing it back together. A new ligament must be constructed, he said.

Smith, in a handout he prepared for patients with the injury, says the ligament, along with the posterior cruciate ligament, keeps the knee from sliding forward and backward on itself.

More importantly, he says, the anterior cruciate keeps the knee from followed by a long period of rotating excessively when turning.

Although the torn ligament need instead choose to restrict their activities, maintain good muscular strength and wear a knee brace failure to repair it within 10 to 14 days will allow the ligament to start to atrophy. If never repaired, it will shrink and disappear. There are many different surgical procedures for this type of injury, but Smith only recommends one: the vascularized patellar tendon reconstruction - replacing the torn ligament with a tendon from the kneecap.

However, it is a difficult surgery rehabilitation.

Rehabilitation consists mainly of patients' regaining normal range and then normal strength, he said.

There is no way of preventing the injury, Smith said - not even with knee braces.

"Knee braces are the pet rocks of sports medicine," he said. "All evidence suggests that knee braces don't prevent knee injuries. That is about $60 to $100 per player (wearing a brace) that is wasted money."

In the fall of 1987, the Eriksen clinic treated over 760 injuries, Smith said, an estimated one-fourth of which were knee injuries. The injuries ranged from torn ligaments to mild cases of overuse.

Solid play falls short; K-State loses 82-72 to ranked 'Huskers

By Chase Clark Sports Writer

After leading by six points early in the second half, the K-State women's basketball team lost 82-72 to the nationally-ranked University of Nebraska Tuesday night in Lincoln.

Nebraska, 14-2 overall, raised its Big Eight Conference record to 3-0. The Lady Cornhuskers were ranked 25th in the nation in the latest poll.

K-State, after maintaining a narrow lead for the first 30 minutes of play, hit a cold streak and was not able to get many shots off before Nebraska took the lead.

"Free throws were the difference in the ballgame." -Matilda Mossman

"I'm extremely proud of our team," K-State coach Matilda Mossman said. "I thought we played as well tonight as we are capable of playing. We did everything we needed to do to win. We outrebounded Nebraska. We outhustled Nebraska. We shot a better field goal percentage than Nebraska, but they shot more free throws than we did and as a result they won by 10."

Free throws made the difference in the game. K-State and Nebraska each hit 28 field goals, but Nebraska was 25-37 from the charity stripe. K-State only received 21 shots from the free-throw line, connecting on 16.

"(Free throws were) the difference in the ballgame," Mossman said. "We felt that way during the ballgame, we felt that way after the ballgame and the stats sheet confirms

With 0:53 left in the game, K-State pulled within eight, 78-70, but that was as close as the Lady Cats could get. Nebraska outscored K-State 50-38 in the last half.

"We didn't play intimidated at the beginning," Mossman said. "We got off to a good start and hit some shots early, and that helped us. In the second half, we had a six-point lead. We went down the floor a few times and didn't get a shot at the basket, and let them come back down and score.

"That was another difference in the game - when we weren't able to score. That's been our story all year long. We go through too many spurts for too long where we can't score a basket," she added.

The Lady Cats are still looking for their first conference win after losing their first three games to the University of Oklahoma, Oklahoma State University and Nebraska.

Janet Madsen continues to lead the Lady Cats on offense as she collected 19 points against Nebraska to lead the team. Diana Miller scored 15 points, only five of which came in the second half. Hazim was the only other Lady Cat to score in double figures with 15 points.

At the 16-minute mark in the first half, Nebraska's Maurtice Ivy scored her first basket of the game and became the all-time leading scorer at Nebraska and the seventh-highest career scorer in the Big Eight with 1,845 points. Before the game was over, Ivy scored 25 points to lead Nebraska.

Flores resigns; has 'no regrets'

By The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Tom Flores, saying he was worn out after nine years in the pressure cooker, retired as coach of the Los Angeles Raiders Wednesday.

"I've won. I think it's time to smell the roses. It's time for me to step aside," Flores said. "I have no regrets. I've experienced just about everything you can."

Flores, 50, guided the Raiders to a 5-10 record in 1987, their worst showing in 25 years.

Overall, his teams had an 83-53 regular-season record. They won three AFC West championships in his nine years as head coach. In the post-season, his teams were 8-3. But the Raiders, who managed the only two Super Bowl wins by AFC teams in the 1980s, lost 14 of their last 19 games. They were 8-4 in 1986 before losing their last four games to fall out of playoff contention.

"I'm not burned out, I'm just tired," Flores said at a packed news recent years.

conference. "It's time to go on to another challenge. Obviously the nine years of the pressure cooker have worn me out a little bit, so I'm going to take a little rest.

Team owner Al Davis said it was Flores' decision to step down and indicated it would be a while before he would name a replacement, although it has been speculated that he might hire a black.

"No one asked Tom Flores to retire," Davis said. "This is what he wanted to do. Tom will continue to serve the Raiders as an adviser, special projects, and will always be a part of our organization.

"I would hope that the Raiders would have a new head coach by the league meetings in March. I haven't thought about it and I won't discuss it. The last time it took about a month. It's a very big, a very tough decision."

Team that's hot' will be Big Eight champion

From Service Bureau and Wire Reports

Three Big Eight Conference basketball teams are ranked in this week's polls. Iowa State is ranked 10th by the Associated Press, its highest ranking by AP since Feb. 19, 1957, and 12th by United Press International. Oklahoma, after losses to Louisiana State and K-State, dropped to 11th both polls, while Kansas is ranked 16th by AP and 18th by UPI.

Two other conference schools, K-State and Missouri, also received votes in AP's poll. If this isn't an indication of how tough the competition is in the Big Eight, nothing is.

Nebraska Coach Danny Nee gave his philosophy on the Big Eight race: "The team that wins the Big You'd better win the home games and get hot at the end."

The Huskers were one of three teams who did just that last weekend. They defeated Missouri, 70-68, K-State knocked off Oklahoma, 69-62, and Iowa State beat Kansas 88-78.

Nee said the Huskers' victory was a statement for the also-rans of the Big Eight - the Cornhuskers, Oklahoma State and Colorado.

"The three of us have the ability on any given night to be competitive with anyone in the league," he said.

It seems conference teams have been taking Nee's statement to heart. Prior to Wednesday night's games, the home teams had won all six Big Eight games played. Overall, league teams are 46-7 at home. They are 22-22 on the road, and

The Cowboys will be an inspired team when tipoff rolls around Saturday. After the Colorado game, Coach Leonard Hamilton said his team reaped the benefits of the win.

"This is a great confidence builder from top to bottom," Hamilton said. "Confidence is something that comes from success, success comes from execution and execution comes from doing it day after day, over and over."

Akroyd's attempt at satire successful

By Jeff Schrag Collegian Reviewer

I am a sucker for outrageous

More often than not, I am a sucker for Dan Akroyd's brand of outrageous comedy.

This week, I am a sucker for his latest movie, "Couch Trip."

Dan Akroyd plays John Burns, a patient in a mental hospital who is too intelligent for his situation in life. He receives more respect from the patients and staff than the hospital administrator does.

Therefore, when the hospital receives a phone call from a Beverly Hills lawyer who wants the hospital administrator — a psychiatrist — to temporarily replace a radio talkshow doctor, Akroyd is able to con his way out of the hospital and into the job.

Once in California, Akroyd's character is a smashing success. Of course, he violates the "seven forbidden words" taboo during his radio show. Of course, he violates every code of ethics for practicing psychiatry. Of course, he gets moviebeauty Donna Dixon to fall for him.

Movie Review

He plays the classic movie clown who gets away with everything; one who knows just enough about people to wiggle his way out of anything.

Akroyd and the supporting cast of almost-famous actors, who play the doctors and lawyers, do a marvelous experience. Chevy Chase's cameo is a highlight.

However, Walter Matthau's character is weak. His role is so underdeveloped he almost lacks personality. This is due more to the weakness of the script than to Matthau's acting abilities.

Furthermore, Donna Dixon appears to have been thrown into the movie just to add a beautiful woman to the cast. Her addition is like adding another toe to the human foot. It job of making the show a worthwhile makes no difference in function, just in appearance.

> With the exception of Matthau's and Dixon's performances, I found the movie well-done.

> Akroyd's character is never too smart or too perfect. The picture always remains believable. As a doctor, he never really cures anyone. He just tells them they are not alone with their problems, making them feel that they belong. Maybe that's what psychiatrists do anyway.

Akroyd is able to combine two of the most successful elements of American comedy into one solid character.

First, he is a con man. Some of this country's most popular humor is based on con-man satire. Groucho Marx, Milton Berle and Chevy Chase all have used it successfully. Perhaps the American psyche feels it must be tricked into laughing.

Secondly, he is "larger than life," shouting and clowning his way out of awkward situations.

Police reinforce grounds to prevent calf maulings

By Melinda Tiemeyer Collegian Reporter

Surveillance and traps have been set up to prevent further attacks by dogs on K-State research livestock.

The action stems from three different attacks made on research calves last October and November near Call Hall in which seventeen calves were injured by two or more dogs.

Jim Morrill, professor of animal nutrition, said several of the calves had more severe injuries to their legs than others, but are now recovering.

The calves most seriously injured had their ears bitten off and holes in their skulls.

"Dogs tend to go for their ears or hind legs. Calves tend to recover a little easier from damage to their ears than to their legs," Morrill said.

One calf died from its injuries. The area where the calves are being kept is now enclosed with a "dog proof" fence. Morrill is hoping the fence will be high enough to keep all unwanted animals out of the area. Charles Beckom, chief of K-State police, said the police are doing "about all we can do" to prevent further attacks. To aid in the capture of the dogs, the police have purchased a special trap. "What we prefer to use is known as a sane trap," Beckom said. "It's one that secures the animal in a way that does not hurt the animal." Beckom said the trap is a steel cage set up with bait. Once the animal goes inside to get the bait, the door slides down and traps it. Beckom stressed that it is extremely difficult to identify the dogs that were responsible. A number of dogs that fit the description have been picked up by campus police. The owners of the dogs were informed of the consequences if they allow their dogs to run free.

"We feel like after the number of people we've talked to that we possibly have talked to the individuals who own the animals," Beckom said. "But to come out and say this is the person whom we can definitely prove - beyond a shadow of a doubt at this point we can't."

Campus police have also assigned officers to monitor the area from time to time in the event that the dogs

Signature required to add most classes

By The Collegian Staff

Beginning today, most students adding a course must have a letter of permission from their instructor and their adviser's signature.

Only the students in the College of Arts and Sciences, the College of Business Administration and the Graduate School are not required to have their adviser's signature. Students in the College of Engineering need both their adviser's and dean's signature.

Beginning Jan. 24, all students must have a letter of permission and their forms must be signed by both their adviser and dean.

The drop/add center, in the basement of Farrell Library, has been processing about 2,000 students each day, said Donald Foster, University registrar.

But that number is beginning to decrease, and will continue to fall until Feb. 17, the last day to drop a course without a "W" on the student's record, Foster said.

"As far as we know, the participation of students seems to be normal," said Foster. "I estimate the numbers to be similar to those of last semester, that is between 7,000 and 8,000 at this point."

Aquino's defense secretary resigns

By The Associated Press

MANILA, Philippines -The defense secretary said today he submitted his resignation because the communist insurgency had grown "alarmingly strong" because the government failed to address the welfare of the people.

The secretary, Rafael Ileto, told reporters he submitted his resignation last week but had withheld announcement because "I did not want to create any disturbance," presumably around last Monday's regional elections.

Spokesmen for President Corazon Aquino were not immediately available for comment. Their secretaries said they were too busy having lunch.

Ileto, a 1943 West Point graduate and a former vice chief of staff, was appointed Nov. 23, 1986.

In his spare time, he prefers doing things that "aren't a mental waste." For that reason, no television can be found in the Isenhour household. "It's a distraction I'd rather not have," he said. "If I want to waste my time I'll read a Sidney Sheldon novel." Isenhour has a rule that he reads at least one book a week that is not related to science.

"I spend a large part of my time reading," he said.

He also enjoys jazz, movies, motorcycling, spending time with friends, flying and writing poems. "I also shoot a pretty good game of pool," he said. His poetry includes feelings and impressions of himself, he said, adding it is a creative outlet for him.

"I enjoy being a scientist, but I also enjoy intellectual experiences of all Flying was something Isenhour had always been interested in, but couldn't afford until he was older. "It's not the daredevil sport people than anything," he said. Isenhour's interest in motorcycling began at age 30 after he purchased a moped. That interest has think it is. It's a mental sport more burgeoned to the point of rebuilding motorcycles and taking crosscountry trips.

"Motorcycling is the same kind of sport, as hiking and backpacking, which I used to do when I was younger," he said.

It was a motorcycling accident this summer that prevented Isenhour from beginning his role as dean sooner. He was traveling to Manhattan from Washington, D.C., when lightning struck the ground near his motorcycle as he was driving through Kentucky, causing him to lose control of the vehicle. He still walks with a limp from his accident, which resulted in a broken leg.

"I guess if you're going to dance, you have to pay the piper occasionally," he said.

Since Isenhour arrived at the University, he said the transition from Stamey's leadership to his own has been a smooth one.

"Academic leadership is different in that people are very fair to change. What you do is continue those things being done well and you bring your own new and different ideas to things. Anytime you change a job like this, it ought to be an exciting change," he said.

"What determines the quality of a university is the faculty. It's not like you get a new quarterback and winning depends on whether or not he throws a pass," he said.

Hobrock issued a letter to the faculty explaining the situation in December, and he hopes to have a listing of the journals to them by the beginning of February. "We won't know the final decision until June," he said. Although no final guidelines for cancellation have been set, each department will most likely have to cut a certain percentage of subscriptions, said Nelda Elder, associate professor of libraries.

"It will most likely be an across the board cut," she said. "Each department will lose an even percentage."

Since most of the expensive journals are limited to science subjects, Hobrock is concerned that some nonscience departments will feel discriminated against.

"I am trying to reassure the discriminated groups, but I can't guarantee anything," he said. "It is true that a lot of programs will be hurt."

So far most of the faculty has been supportive, Hobrock said.

Files may help defendants in case against Wolf Creek

TOPEKA - Two people being sued by the principal owner of Wolf Creek nuclear power plant testified Wednesday they want to use secret files they obtained from the plant to spur investigations into worker complaints.

The two also said the 68 files from the company's confidential "Quality First" program could have affected electric rates in the past, and may affect rates in the future.

THE RIBBON

It's Simply Good Taste!

(A documentary from South Africa) The Ribbon is a Peace Ribbon which was created by South African women, black and white, in an effort to make their voices heard in a cry for a just resolution to the escalating conflict. This film follows the journey of the Peace Ribbon (which was over 500 meters long) over an eight month period of time. It offers a perspective that is not often seen, that there are women in South Africa who are desperate to make a contribution to the struggle for justice and peace.

multi-state lottery bill

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The Senate overwhelmingly approved a bill Thursday that would give formal approval to Kansas' agreement to participate in a multi-state lottery.

Approval came on a 28-6 vote, after the Senate suspended its rules to push the bill up for final action and after the Senate Federal and State Affairs Committee endorsed it earlier in the day. The measure now goes to the House, where quick action also is expected.

Gov. Mike Hayden said he expects to have the bill on his desk before the end of next week. Rep. Robert H. Miller, chairman of the House Federal and State Affairs Committee, said his panel will have hearings on the bill Monday.

That legislation is moving," Hayden said during a Statehouse news conference. "At least at this point, the plans for its movement are on a schedule that would allow us to participate in the multi-state lottery.

"If it clears everything (in the Legislature) it could be here Tuesday night, but it will probably be here Wednesday or Thursday, in which case I think we'd be all right."

During debate, Sen. Edward Reilly, R-Leavenworth, chairman of the Senate committee, said the Legislature would be able to withdraw Kansas from the multi-state lottery at any time. He added that the gover-■ See LOTTERY, Page 12

Senate OKs Editor: Black, white freedom related

By Chad L. Sanborn Staff Writer

In a passionate and charismatic speech, Lerone Bennett Jr., historian and senior editor of Ebony magazine, said increasing freedom for blacks means increasing freedom for whites, just as decreasing black freedom decreases white freedom.

Bennett delivered an all-University convocation Thursday morning in McCain Auditorium to about 600 people, including students from the Manhattan, Junction City and Topeka school districts. He spoke as part of the University's activities honoring the birthday of slain civil rights leader Martin Luther King Jr.

"We are condemned to walk this road together. You can't penalize black Kansas without penalizing white Kansas."

-Lerone Bennett

"The world is full of witnesses on this point: White students and white women discovered their own freedom in the '60s in the struggle for black freedom," he said. "In fact, it can be argued that King and the movement he led freed more white people than black."

There is no way to help, hurt or save one group of people without helping, hurting or saving another group, Bennett said.

"We are condemned to walk this road together. You can't penalize black Kansas without penalizing white Kansas," he said.

Bennett said King's birthday - a national holiday for the grandson of a slave - marks the real beginning of America's reconciliation with itself.

At one point in the speech Bennett asked all the young people in the audience who had ever seen a Jim

Decline of computer science majors reflects current nationwide trend

By Chris Wilhelm

Collegian Reporter

Although the number of companies that are unable to fill computerrelated jobs is increasing at a tremendous rate, fewer students nationwide are majoring in computer science.

Virgil Wallentine, head of the Department of Computing and Infor-mation Sciences at K-State, says the decline is attributable to the realization by students that computer science is more than mastering Space

"In 1983, many students came in with the idea that all they had to do was play video games to get a degree," Wallentine said, adding that the department had approximately 600 computer science majors five years ago. That number has since been cut nearly in half, to its current low of 350.

We are now getting better quality students coming into this discipline, and they realize that they are going to have to work," he said. "In 1983, 50 percent of all students going into computer science should never have been computer majors.

"Many of the students were thinking in terms of the prestige involved with being a computer science major and not the work that was required of

Wallentine said another reason for the decline is that students think the job market is decreasing because of the failure of several companies that manufacture personal computers.

"So many PC companies have no real development," he said. "They only have integration, which isn't really what computer science is all about. Even if a PC company had a good product, with the rapid change in the market, after six months their product has already become obsolete."

Robert Meier, professor of computer information systems at Fort Hays State University, said the Kansas economy is partially to blame for the declining number of students. "One of the reasons for the

is that most students majoring in that area from Kansas usually go into the oil or aerospace fields, and (those fields) have slowed down their businesses tremendously," Meier said. "We are trying to bring a more diversified group of recruiters to our campus this year instead of putting all of our eggs into one basket."

Although the number of students enrolling in computer science at K-State has gone down each of the last five years, the number of students decrease in computer science majors actually graduating with a computer science degree has increased, Wallentine said.

"I think we do a much better job of advising our students now," he said. "Our majors courses used to have 80 students per class. We are down to 40 per class now with an optimum size class set at 25 students."

Although other universities have made their entrance requirements more stringent for computer science majors, K-State has not gone to these measures. However, Wallentine said that could change.

"I feel that our course requirements for CS majors are pretty rigorous - we've never had an easy curriculum here at K-State," he said. "If the lack of qualified computer science majors drives salaries up over the next few years and we see a tremendous growth in the number of CS majors, we might have to go to something like that.

"What we are interested in is getting good students here at K-State. Students with a good math background usually do the best in the computer science curriculum."

Figures provided by other Kansas regents universities indicate K-State is not alone in its declining number of computer science students. Other schools experiencing a drop include the University of Kansas, Pittsburg State University and Fort Hays State University. The only two regents universities that have shown an increase are the two smallest programs, at The Wichita State University and at Emporia State University, ■ See COMPUTE, Page 12

Manhattan groups to give both sides of abortion issue

By Victoria Ohmacht Collegian Reporter

Despite the passage of 15 years and endless debate, the Supreme Court decision legalizing abortion remains highly controversial.

Today is the anniversary of the decision, and representatives of two local organizations will be on campus defending or protesting the decision.

National Organization for Women will provide pamphlets and information on the decision from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. in the Union. The Great Commission Students, a youth group affiliated with the Great Commission Church, will meet at 11:30 a.m. across from the International Student Center for an anti-abortion march through campus. The march is scheduled to end at the Union courtyard at noon, followed by speeches and presentations until 1 p.m. For a ruling that has been a law for more than a decade, Roe vs. Wade remains a controversial topic. The decision has been challenged by religious groups, members of the medical community and even U.S. Constitution scho-

Three areas of objection to Roe vs. Wade have evolved since the 1973 decision, said Orma Linford, associate professor of political science. The first objection is voiced by the religious community, she said. "In the last decade, there has been a resurgence in the political participation of the religious right. They are very fundamentalist and they are against abortion," Linford said. Other anti-abortion forces include the Moral Majority and the Catholic Church, as well Members of the Manhattan as individuals who object to abortion on moral grounds. A second objection stems from the Supreme Court's use of the term "right of privacy" in the decision. Although the Constitution does not specifically guarantee this right, the court concluded based on earlier cases - that references to privacy justified the right. The court then ruled this right included a woman's decision to end a pregnancy.

"There is a group of people who believe the Constitution should be interpreted literally," Linford said. Former Supreme Court nominee Robert H. Bork supports this theory.

"For most of our history, (the Supreme Court) has believed in a 'living Constitution' - that the text should be interpreted to satisfy the demands of whatever generation is current," Linford said.

Contras call for commission

SAN JOSE, Costa Rica — A Nicaraguan official called Thursday for an international commission including representatives of the major U.S. political parties to monitor an amnesty for the Contras.

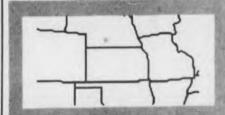

The official, Deputy Foreign Minister Victor Hugo Tinoco, also reiterated that the leftist government was willing to permit U.S. humanitarian aid to the rebels as part of a cease-fire Tinoco is the leader of a Sandinista delegation that arrived in San Jose late Wednesday for cease-fire talks with the rebels next week.

The peace talks are scheduled for Jan. 28, one day after President Reagan is expected to ask Congress for more aid for the Contras. Contra leaders met with peace mediator Cardinal Miguel Obando y Bravo on Thursday and said they would take Tinoco told a news conference Thursday afternoon that his government was proposing creation of an international verification commission to guarantee that full civil and political liberties were granted to any Contras who lay down their arms, accept amnesty and rejoin civilian life in Nicaragua.

He said the commission should be made up of representatives of the United Nations, the Organization of American States, the eight Contadora nations and the Republican and Democratic parties of the United States, among other groups.

Kansas bank fails; first in 1988

TOPEKA - State Banking Commissioner W. Newton Male declared the Cedar Vale State Bank insolvent and closed it Thursday, but the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation said the bank would reopen today as a branch of the Chisholm Trail State Bank of Wichita.

It was the first bank to fail in Kansas this year, although the FDIC had to pump $5.3 million of new capital into the Peoples State Bank and Trust Co. of Ellinwood on Jan. 7 to keep it

Male said in a brief statement that he had taken charge of the properties and assets of the Cedar Vale State Bank and named the FDIC as receiver.

It is the only bank in Cedar Vale, a community of about 850 in Chautauqua County about 30 miles east of Winfield.

"Upon completion and final assessment of the most recent examination, a determination was made (by Male) that the Cedar Vale State Bank was insolvent," the banking commissioner's office said.

Traveling cat, owner reunited

LOS ANGELES - Felix the frequent-flier feline hugged and nuzzled her owner Thursday in a tearful airport reunion arranged after the cat was coaxed from the belly of a jumbo jet where she made her home for 29 days.

"Oh, look at her. She looks so well," cried Janice Kubecki as the cat was put in her arms at Los Angeles International Airport.

"Look, Mommy. She's hugging you," said her 4-year-old daughter Nadine. "I missed you, Felix."

It was true. Felix put her front paws around Kubecki's neck and clung.

Felix, a 2-year-old calico and female despite the name, became a celebrity after she escaped from her traveling box in the cargo hold of a Pan Am Boeing 747 on a journey from West Germany to Los Angeles on Dec. 3. She flew more than 179,000 miles and made at least 64 stops on three continents before she was discovered by airline personnel.

Cat and master were toasted with champagne and caviar in the reunion at the Pan Am terminal. Felix didn't seem to mind the fuss, blinking curiously in the bright television lights and sniffing at microphones thrust in her muzzle by TV reporters anxious for comment.

On the 11-hour flight from London, she nibbled on tuna, steak and caviar and took a cat nap on the lap of Jane Ford, a Pan Am employee who adopted her when she was put in quarantine after being found in London.

Reagan: More aid to Contras

WASHINGTON - President Reagan plans to ask next week for a watered-down military aid package for Nicaragua's Contras, but congressional Democrats said Thursday that even the scaled-back request will provoke a confrontation over U.S. policy when it comes to a vote in two weeks.

A senior administration official said Thursday that the aid request which Reagan will argue for in his State of the Union speech Monday will be close to $50 million, with the bulk of that amount earmarked for non-lethal items.

Other officials in the administration and on Capitol Hill said only about 10 percent of the package will be for lethal supplies. The reason, these officials said, is that the rebels were well armed by an earlier $70 million in lethal aid and their need now is primarily for ammunition, which is cheaper.

One administration source, speaking on condition of anonymity, called the request a "sustainment" package which would not enhance the rebels' warmaking capability. Much of the rest of the package is made up of transportation and communication equipment, as well as food and medical supplies, the official said.

But White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said no final decision has been made on the amount to be sought, and he cautioned reporters against using a $50 million figure.

Nonetheless, any such amount would be far less than the $270 million military aid package the administration had prepared last year.

Agents surveying houses for radon gas Study continues into second year

By Vera McMinimy Collegian Reporter

Forty-six houses in Riley County are being tested this winter in the second year of a survey by the Kansas Department of Health and Environment to determine if radon exposure is a serious health threat in Kansas.

Results from a survey of 25 homes last year showed Riley County with the second highest level of radon exposure in Kansas. However, Kansas has a low level of radon exposure compared to other states, said Craig Schwartz, KDHE radiation control

Radon is an odorless, radioactive gas that occurs naturally in soil, rocks and building materials. It comes from the natural breakdown of

High levels of radon exposure may be associated with an increased risk of developing lung cancer. Scientists believe radon causes 5,000 to 20,000 deaths from lung cancer each year.

Although radon has always existed, its potential health threat is a recent concern, Schwartz said.

"People are making homes more energy efficient and radon levels can increase with homes tightly closed up," he said.

Approximately 1,600 houses will be tested by KDHE with assistance from the Environmental Protection Agency. This testing is the second part of a survey continued from last year, when about 1,000 homes were every county in Kansas either have been or will be contacted by KDHE to participate in the survey, Schwartz said. Only single-family, owneroccupied dwellings are being tested. If homeowners are willing to participate, they receive a radon detector in the mail.

A two-day measurement is taken in each house. The radon detector is placed in the lowest point of the home during the winter when the house is closed.

The measurement is taken during the worst possible conditions, and it may not be representative of the actual radon exposure, Schwartz said. It is useful only as an indication of

After two days, the homeowners mail the detector to the EPA for analysis and complete a questionnaire about the occupancy and structure of the house. The homeowners then receive an interpretation of results and recommendations from

Since the survey began in December, about 400 homes have been contacted, and KDHE plans to complete the survey by April, Schwartz said.

Counties with the highest population will have more homes tested, but at least six homes will be tested in each county, he said.

After the additional 1,600 households are tested this winter, KDHE plans to identify areas in the state that have a higher level of indoor radon concentration.

No conclusions will be reached until the second part of the survey is

While radon in outdoor air has a low concentration and causes little concern, it collects in enclosed areas, he said.

completed, Schwartz said.

Homeowners discovering a high concentration of radon may conduct their own follow-up study. In a follow-up survey, a radon detector is placed in the house for a year. This provides a better indication of the average radon level, because the level varies greatly from season to

Schwartz said he was unsure how many people whose homes contained high levels of radon in the first part of the study are doing follow-up tests. KDHE does not have the resources to conduct the year-long tests, he said.

"We really aren't making recommendations for homeowners to have tests done until we complete the survey and know more about radon levels in the state of Kansas," he said. "The only type of risk is over longterm exposure of 40 to 50 years."

Radon levels may be reduced in homes by first sealing cracks in the foundation and between the basement walls and floor, he said. A cover over a sump pump may also help. Closing the basement from the rest of the house may also lower radon levels, he said. Another way to reduce radon levels is better ventilation in the KU administrator rejects condom vending proposal

By The Associated Press

LAWRENCE - A top Kansas University administrator has rejected a recommendation by a campus task force on AIDS that vending machines containing condoms be installed in men's and women's rest rooms in campus buildings.

The rejection was part of Executive Vice Chancellor Judith Ramaley's response released on Wednesday in response to the task force's recommendations.

Ray Davis, the task force's chairman, said he was encouraged by Ramaley's reponse because it supports "all of the crucial" recommendations made by the task force.

But Michael Foubert, the chairman of the Student Senate Task Force on AIDS, called it "a very cautious, parent-popular approach" to a potentially serious health and social problem on campus.

"Who's this directed to? Who's going to be most offended - some parents and some legislators, and it's designed to satisfy them," Foubert

In the memo, Ramaley endorsed all the task force's recommendations on education.

But Ramaley said that dispensing condoms in campus rest rooms "may suggest implicitly that the university supports a certain value pattern or is not cognizant of or sensitive" to the variety of attitudes, values and practices among the university community regarding sexual behavior.

She said a facility such as Watkins Memorial Hospital is the proper environment for dispensing information and devices for prevention.

But Foubert said that the hospital does not provide the needed privacy.

"You can have all the brochures and the condoms in the world down there, but you're not likely to have a student buy one with 80 other people in the lobby," he said.

Davis agreed, and said not allowing the machines "protects students from ideas" that can help them develop their value and belief systems.

Ramaley also rejected the task force's recommendation that a parttime coordinator be appointed to implement the educational goals.

Senate hears Childcare Co-op, K-State budget presentations

By The Collegian Staff

Student Senate heard presentations Thursday on topics ranging from child care to K-State's budget for fiscal year 1987-88.

Marlene Reed, graduate student in special education, asked Senate to consider a bill allowing funds from student fees to help finance KSU Childcare Cooperative.

The cooperative cares for children of faculty and students. A forseeable problem with this program would be convincing most students, who are not parents, that the program is needed, Reed said.

The funds for this program would come from an increase in student fees each semester, Reed said.

Among other issues discussed by Senate was the 1987-88 University budget. For fiscal year 1987-88, funding for the budget is coming from such sources as state appropriations, federal land-grant funds, student fees and interest from student

Hart's faults not limited to sex drive

"Should rumors and gossip be widely printed? Should reporters tell untruths to obtain sensational responses? What are the limits? In the occasionally exciting prying into a candidate's minutes and hours, are we not obscuring the years of a lifetime and undramatic acts of courage, fortitude, and determination that reveal true character?" - Gary Hart

On the same day the sale of three-wheelers was banned and Heather Locklear tearfully confessed on "Dynasty" that what she really needed was someone to make love to her, I became aware of yet another blatant threat to common sense. Yes, I finally realized that former Colorado senator and part-time tabloid star Gary Hart was actually serious about re-entering the Democratic race for president of the United States.

Now wait, some of you may retort, Gary Hart is an eloquent orator who reflects the views of a considerable number of American liberals. He is a hard-working and competent politician, and we should not allow the small mishap with Donna Rice to shape our opinion of the man as a potential presidential candidate. Furthermore, Hart is essential in this stage of the game, bringing forth certain vital issues that have apparently been ignored by all other candidates.

However, one can hardly use Donna Rice alone as a reason for America's dislike and constant ridicule of Gary Hart - not at all. Behind those witty statements and that Kennedy-clone facade lies a chronically selfcentered individual who is once more placing his ego before his politics. It seems hardly reasonable to classify Gary Hart as a competent politician if the ability to make good judgments is an essential trait of a hopeful presidential candidate. Hart exercised bad judgment in daring the media to catch him committing indiscretions and then permitting himself to get caught. His subsequent withdrawal from the presidential race was another instance of bad judgment: permitting his personal life to cloud his political

By leaving the race, Hart lost the respect of all Americans who had hoped he was intelligent enough not to let his sex life be the determinant factor in his decision to run for president. Perhaps worst of all, however, was his Commentary sudden move to re-enter the race, claiming a pretentious "patriotic duty" and undermining his party and fellow running mates.

And just what issues has he returned to champion?

When Hart quit last spring, he said he believed other national leaders would enter the race and that his unique "ideas for strategic investment economics, for military reform and for enlightened engagement would be adopted and put forward by others." According to Hart, these items have remained unaddressed.

Not quite so.

The Jan. 12 issue of the journal In These Times broke down the three main segments of the above quote and came to the following conclusions:

"Strategic investments" refers to rebuilding America's economic foundations by appropriating more funds for education, factories, public works, and energy production resources, among other things. It's a good idea, and it is also constantly echoed by Democratic candidates Paul Simon and Jesse Jackson, among others.

Hart's second item, military reform, is addressed by practically all Democratic candidates. Hart's self-styled "unique" plan to maintain an effective conventional force while drastically cutting nuclear weaponry is the basis for virtually every liberal platform

Perhaps it is in his last point that Hart diverges most from his fellow Democratic contenders. By "enlightened engagement," Hart means using "the force of change in the world of nationalism, of world markets and of dispersed power as the basis for a new internationalist foreign policy." After deciphering the muddled terminology, one might construe his purpose to be a glorified justification of benevolent imperialism, not unlike Kennedy's "Alliance for Progress."

Fortunately for the rest of the world, candidates Paul Simon, Michael Dukakis and Jesse Jackson present a contrasting approach to foreign policymaking. Seemingly archaic terms such as "self-determination" and "freedom" seem to be part of the above politicians' platforms.

It seems very improbable that a majority of Americans would choose to elect someone as fickle and blindly self-absorbed as Gary Hart. Aside from his sexual appetite - or lack of control thereof - Hart has continually proved that good judgment is not at the top of his list of good qualities. Is this the caliber of leadership America wants in the White House?

Perhaps the simplest way to dismiss Gary Hart is to compare him to another infamous American politician, as did an editorial letter to the Des Moines Register on Dec. 27.

"Gary Hart's decision to re-enter the Democratic race represents Nixonian delusion and arrogance. 'It is I before thee in the presidency' (to borrow from a grammatical rule)....," the letter said.

Mudslinging strategies will not impress voters ing should not be part of a strategy to win an election in a sophisticated country.

The two Republican candidates' accusations range from moral incompetence to narrowmindedness to criminal activities. And it is only January; the convention is not until August.

Sure, mudslinging can be fun to watch, but it takes too much attention away from meaningful debate, which voters need to make a rational choice between the candidates.

Call it mudslinging, dirt digging nents rather than promote personal or good ol' politicking. Whatever ideas. The candidates, however, the name used, the blows George must think ridiculing opponents' Bush and Robert Dole are exchang- positions - instead of stating their own — wins more votes.

> However, the real terror comes when mudslinging candidates win elections. If they are willing to stoop to such depths when campaigning, imagine the tactics they would employ in a governmental position of power.

Voters need to dispel political analysts' ideas that their votes go to the candidates who have the wittiest put-downs or the least dirt on them. The United States is top old for that A country priding itself on demo- kind of perverse democracy. Voters must let politicians know that they

THE GREATEST SAFEGUARD AGAINST THE CRASH OF '29 HAPPENING TODAY...

Categories fit people's personalities People steadfastly resist being classified. "HOU CAN'T OPEN OFFICE WINDOWS TODAY. "HOU CAN'T OPEN OFFICE WINDOWS TODAY." System's accuracy not perfect

People steadfastly resist being classified. According to J.R. Harper this is perfectly justified as human beings are dynamic entities. Everyone has certain inherent characteristics and attitudes which constitute their personality. Most people conform to a set behavior pattern in their daily lives. In any case, it is enlightening to examine some ways people are categorized.

First, consider the optimists, pessimists and realists. Simply stated, an optimist is a person who has a cheerful outlook towards life, while a pessimist is someone whose outlook is dull. A familiar example often mentioned in this regard refers to "half a glass of water." An optimist would assert that the glass is half full, but a pessimist would shake his head and say it is half empty.

Now stretch this example a little further. Take this same glass of water and throw most of it away. Now the optimist would say there is very little water in the glass, but the pessimist would lament that there is hardly any water in the glass. In this case, both of them are being realists — they are stating the fact! An optimist can always be a realist but the same is not true of pessimists.

This can be explained if one considers that everybody has a given set of talents, resources and constraints in life. Optimists visualize more than what can be realistically achieved. In the process of obtaining it, these optimists are quite likely to make full use of their available resources. Pessimists however probably would not consider these resources sufficient enough and end up not using them. But the world needs both types as "optimists

Another interesting classification is that of introverts, extroverts and ambiverts. Introverts are shy, reticent people, whereas extroverts have a forward and talkative personality. The former are taciturn while the latter are comfortable in asserting themselves in public. The major reason for such a disparity is supposed to be environment. But can one say a pair of twins brought up in the same family and who study in the same college would both be the same type? I do not think one can confidently answer this question.

traits are inborn. A significant number of people do not belong to either category. These constitute the ambiverts, which simply implies people possessing characteristics of both types.

Though it may not require a degree in psychology to tell the introverts and extroverts apart, it does require an understanding of human nature. There are some people who may seem extroverts on the surface, but are inherently introverted - they are fighting hard to cover up their introvertedness.

The terms monists and dualists are difficult to define. Monists are people who believe 'minds are what brains do,' implying it is the physical brain which controls the activities of your mind and body. On the other hand, dualists feel the mind does not have any physical dimension and the brain is simply a means to channel its power.

It is a monist who would toy with the idea that if one deciphers the detailed working of the brain, one can explain life and thought. But the dualists consider the mind to have a "mind of its own," which cannot be explained. They would believe in a supreme being, more popularly called God. Thus someone who believes in God is automatically a dualist, or else they are contradicting themselves. But one does not have to be a monist if one does not believe in God, as dualism is explained by considering the mind and the brain to be separate entities.

In mathematical terms, the monist idea is the mind is a subset of the brain. Whereas the dualist idea is that there is an intersection between the mind and the brain, which could well be an empty set.

Finally, I wish to consider the quantumleapers and the plodders. Qunatum-leapers are people who leap through life in quantums, while plodders are ones who keep plodding through time. The leapers wait until the last moment and then start working. Either they succeed or fail. Plodders start working from the beginning. They work slowly and steadily, trying to get their work finished. Plodders, also, either fail or succeed.

The familiar quantum-leapers are your classmates who study for their exams on the last day - some of them obtain A's, others flunk. The plodders in your class study through the semester - some do well, others badly. It is important to find out which of these two philosophies would bring you success. A lot of times, it's not easy to change from one type to another. Since efficiency is defined as the ratio of output to input, it's evident that quantum-leapers are more efficient than plodders. But it's very likely that a quantum-leaper may behave like the proverbial hare, and the competing tortoise-like plodder may win the race!

Aid must end

I have heard it said countless times by supposedly concerned individuals. "I know it's wrong, but I can't change it." I see this as a cop-out of our democratic freedoms and an excuse to do nothing. In the meantime the rich get richer, the poor get poorer, the deficit grows, homelessness increases and corporate farms expand. Everyone said the death penalty couldn't be stopped in Kansas, but it was by a small number of people who sacrificed some of their time and energy that could have been spent on something more enjoyable.

If a fraction of the time and resources that are spent on sporting events in this country were directed toward public service, many of our problems could be solved.

On Feb. 3 there will be a vote in Congress on Contra aid. The importance of this vote cannot be over emphasized. If this vote is defeated in either the house or the senate the contra war on the Nicaraguan people will end. Contra aid already approved will continue until Feb. 29 to allow the contras to either disband and leave Nicaragua or rejoin the society. This is the best opportunity we have to stop this cruel war. Now is the time to call or write your congressman and senators. There are those who believe these calls and letters are a waste of time. This is simply not true. Please do what you can to stop the

DUI law needed

Re: The Collegian editorial titled "Stiffer DUI Penalties Violate Accused Rights."

Once again, people are using the Constitution out of context to protect those who have broken laws designed to protect society.

First, driving is not a constitutional right but rather a privilege for those who are responsible enough to handle it. Driving a 4,000-pound vehicle while inebriated is hardly a prudent act, as it endangers everyone in or near the path of the drunken driver. Driving drunk is a blatant abuse of one's privilege to operate a motor vehicle and should be dealt with by swift punishment.

As far as due process goes, the accused is tested on the spot. If they are found to be in violation of the 0.1 percent breath alcohol content they are arrested, informed why they are being held and read their rights: definitive due process. Suspension of a driver's license until trial is not unreasonable for playing such a dangerous game with human lives.

Maybe the American Civil Liberties Union should focus their energy on protecting the victims of criminal acts rather than those who commit the acts.

Bad check cashing at Union gives writers costly problems

By Steve Walker Collegian Reporter

The number of students writing insufficient funds checks is increasing, but it's still only a small problem, said Jack Sills, acting Union

About 1 percent of all checks cashed at the Union are returned due to insufficient funds. The maximum amount a check can be cashed for at the Union is $50. But the average returned check is less than $16.

A $5 check can end up costing $100 worth of problems if someone lets it go far enough.

"It seems to indicate that (bad checks) are not intentional. It's more of a miscalculation on (the students') part," he said.

Bad checks written to the Union go through an automatic process,

Once the Union is notified by its bank that a check has been returned, the Union sends a certified letter to the check writer stating the check was bad.

If the letter is not picked up from the post office in five days, it is forwarded to the Riley County Attorney's office.

After this, it is out of the Union's hands, said Jack Tolman, Union

If the certified letter is picked up,

Staff Illustration/ Rob Squires

the check writer has seven days to settle with the Union. If the student doesn't settle with the Union, the check is then sent to the county

When the county attorney's office gets involved, it will send the writer of the check a letter asking them to take care of the check before a warrant for arrest is issued.

This usually takes care of the problem, said a Riley County official.

Students who write a bad check can end up paying not only a bank's overdraft charge, about $12, and the Union's charge of $10, but court costs could total another $80 if they still refuse to take care of the bad check.

A $5 check can end up costing

$100 worth of problems if someone lets it go far enough, Tolman said. The problem is kept to a minimum for the Union by placing offenders on its "not acceptable list."

Tolman said the University works with the Union by not allowing students to go through registration if they haven't taken care of fines at the Activities 'key' to Union's role, candidate says

By Jeff Stead Collegian Reporter

The Union is a part of the University community and it is important for the Union staff to understand that, said Jerald Mock, candidate for the job of Union director.

Mock spoke before an open forum of about 25 people Thursday afternoon in Union 213. He was the second of four candidates for the job to speak.

"The staff of the Union must have a sense of commitment to the goals of the University. We must tie into the common purpose and hold the University values high. As members of this community, we must collectively pursue the education of the whole student," Mock said.

In the recruitment of students, the role the Union should play is that of a showcase of facilities and services to help prospective students understand the role of the organization, the services available and the educational value of getting involved, Mock said.

"A good activities program means a better place to live. Students will stay in a place when they feel good about it and this in turn helps them sell other students on the institution," he said.

The creative activities offered by the Union are the key to the retention process because they set the stage for being involved in leadership positions and also provide programs of interest to students in fulfilling leisure-time activities, he said.

The future of the collegiate union lies in its ability to change with the times and provide the services and experiences necessary to meet the needs of the students and the university community.

It is important that the Union staff in general and the director in particular know the University community by being good community members and becoming involved in the life of this community personally, he said.

It is also important that the campus community be involved in Union management. Faculty, staff, alumni and students should be used on boards to form focus advisory groups for specifie programs and overall Union management, Mock said.

Mock received a bachelor of science degree in business administration from K-State in 1972. He joined the K-State Union recreation staff in 1963 and directed the recreation staff from 1965 to 1974. After leaving K-State, he became the operations manager for the University of Wisconsin Union South.

Dishes 'run away with the spoons'; Union looks for wayward utensils

By Paul Branson Collegian Reporter

The Union cafeteria has a problem: Dishes are disappearing, trays are vanishing and forks are fleeing.

Where are these wayward utensils going? Malley Sisson, assistant director of the Union, has a theory on where 1,800 forks plus thousands of other utensils go each year. "Students have been known to occasionally borrow our equipment," she said. "This is not a type of thing, but people have borrowed our things and taken them to their homes, apartments, fraternity or sorority houses."

But in some cases the utensils are just lost, kind of like the lone sock that disappears in the dryer.

"Sometimes there are not any places to sit out here in the dining room," Sisson said. "People will get their food and take their tray with them. They may be in the Stateroom, they may eat out here in check-out-a-knife-fork-and-spoon the concourse. Faculty and staff may take their trays with them to their office."

Often the trays and dinnerware do not make it back to the cafeteria and are left at the site of the last feeding frenzy.

Another likely place that a few hundred forks could go is the trash dumpsters around the Union.

"We're a self-bussing system," Sisson said. "You take your tray up, you put your paper in the trash, the rest you leave on your tray. It's not unusual for a customer to dump the silverware in the trash."

Due to the hours and cost involved, the Union cannot afford to go through its refuse for lost silverware, she said.

For those in possession of cafeteria property, the Union is for-

Young debaters to compete here

By The Collegian Staff

More than 160 high school debaters will be at K-State today and Saturday to compete for the state's top honors.

Representatives from 32 schools will compete in the state high school debate championship, which is sanctioned by the Kansas State High School Activities Association.

The tournament will start with an assembly at 3:15 p.m. today and end with an awards ceremony at 4:30 p.m. Saturday in Union Forum Hall, said Ed Schiappa, director of debate.

The topic to be debated is whether the U.S. government should adopt a policy to increase political stability in Latin America, Schiappa said. For the tournament the 32 schools will be divided into four categories according to school size: 6A, 5A, 4A and 1-2-3A. Eight teams will compete in each category.

Each school will have teams of five or six students with four competing and one or two alternates, Schiappa said. The divisional debates will be across the campus with 6A schools competing in the Union, 5A schools in Denison Hall and 4A and 1-2-3A schools in Eisenhower Hall. The tournament will consist of seven rounds - three today and four tomorrow, Schiappa said.

This is the first time in 15 years that the state championship has been held at K-State, he said.

"We are pleased to have this tournament here. It is the most prestigious tournament around so we are very pleased to have it on campus. It gives (the debaters) a chance to look us over and us a chance to look them over," he said.

The K-State debate team will be helping with the judging, tabulations and handling the hospitality for the tournament.

Neglected daughter to face amputation

By The Associated Press

GARY, Ind. - Doctors on Thursday amputated the frostbitten lower legs of a 9-year-old girl who police said had been locked by her mother in the attic of an abandoned house.

Darlwin Carlisle was in satisfactory condition after surgery, said Dr. Victoria Dvonch, a surgeon at Wyler Children's Hospital in Chicago.

"Everything went well. She's awake and alert," Dvonch said. "Things look very good, much better than we expected.'

The girl's legs were amputated 5½-6 inches below the knee, Dvonch said, adding that it is unlikely any further amputation will be necessary and that the girl will be fitted for artificial legs in about two

"It wouldn't surprise me if she was the kind of kiddo who gets up right away," the surgeon said. "She has no negative words about any of her experience. She's concerned about her mother and what's happening to Lake County Prosecutor Jack F. Crawford filed a felony charge of child-neglect Thursday against her mother, Darlwin Britt, 24. She was ordered held on $50,000 bail. If convicted, she could receive up to 20 years in prison.

Play draws on Moses, King similarities

Faiths represented in biblical portrayal

By Ann Iseman

Arts and Entertainment Editor

A Jewish playwright, a former Christian minister, a free-thinking Protestant, a Presbyterian and a Jewish actor are all part of the play, "No Other Gods," performed Thursday night as a part of Martin Luther King

The play is the story of Moses and how he liberates his people, the Hebrews, from slavery in Egypt.

Norman "Doc" Fedder, a speech professor and the playwright, said the play is relevant to King and his struggle because "(King) was trying to free his people like Moses was freeing his people.

"Many people came to see him as Moses," Fedder said. "Remember in his speech when he said, 'I have seen the promised land. I might not get there, but I have seen it.'

"It's really ironic that (King) didn't make it. He was shot and he didn't get to see the promised land," Fedder said. "Just like Moses. He didn't see the promised land either."

The variety of religious faiths represented by the actors and the writer of the play are significant because the play is not for any one faith, said Bruce Kellogg, graduate student in English, who is Aaron, Moses' brother in the play.

"No Jew or Christian would be upset after seeing the play," Kellogg said. "It is just basic truths."

The play is also sponsored by a variety of religious organizations, including American Baptist, B'nai B'rith Hillel, Ecumenical Christian, Lutheran, Roman Catholic and St. Francis Episcopal campus ministries.

The story line of the play is based on the Bible, Fedder said. But Fedder also used scholarly interpretations of the Bible to give the characters more

The title of the play, "No Other Gods," comes from the second commandment, which says, "There shall be no other gods before me."

"The God of Hebrews and Christ- questions God and the Hebrew's ians is the God of love and justice," Fedder said. "They shouldn't worship anything else like greed or tyranny."

Fedder wrote the play last year after studying seven plays based on the story of Moses and writing a paper on the subject.

Fedder said he wanted to show that being a leader or a prophet is not easy. He portrays Moses as a stumbling, stuttering man who is unsure of himself and doesn't really think he's the right man for the job.

"Moses is not a superhero like Charlton Heston in the movie version," Fedder said. "He is not a saint to be worshipped."

Fedder said his play reveals that it isn't easy to be a believer or to have faith. His play is about love and justice and forgiveness.

When Moses is denied entry into the promised land, he is angry and feels betrayed by God, Fedder said.

But when the the other characters forgive each other and begin to live and love peacefully, Moses says, "I think we've got something promising here."

"You don't have to go anywhere to reach the promised land," Fedder said. "Just have love in relationships and (the promised land) is there.

"This play is the spirit of the Lord," Fedder said. "It's not the letter. The whole spirit of the Bible is love and justice, not attacking any particular race."

Fedder said the idea of the play is that Moses, like King, just wanted all people to live together with love and justice, not hatred or prejudices.

Moses' desire for this is evident by his sorrow at having to kill the Egyptians in order to free the Hebrews. "His dilemma is that, in order to resist evil and do justice, he has to do evil," Fedder said. The other three characters in the play are Aaron; Miriam, Moses' sister; and Zipporah, Moses' wife. Miriam is conservative and believes strictly in the letter of the law, Zipporah is a free-thinker who

Arkansas invite first test

Improving record team's goal

By Russ Ewy Sports Writer

K-State's women's tennis team is looking for its depth to help them land a place in the middle of the Big Eight Conference pack this spring.

The team begins its season today by competing in the Arkansas Invitational.

Fourth-year Coach Steve Bietau hopes his team improves on last year's standing. He is also hoping to get good individual performances from the nine members on the squad.

"Obviously we want to improve our standing in the Big Eight," Bietau said. "We were sixth place last year and I feel that we can be fourth or fifth this year. Another goal would be to have an individual, or an individuals doubles team, qualify for a Big Eight championship."

campaign.

"We lost our number one player for the last two years and at this point we don't have anyone that strong in singles. However, we gained three players who are close to that level and a couple of them are strong doubles players, so that helps us in terms of depth and it helps us in terms of our doubles teams. We're stronger and more competitive now, although we're

"Well, we're actually playing two dual matches this week. We've been practicing for about ten days and we're just interested in getting some competetion against teams that are of the caliber of the better schools in the Big Eight. Conference 'surprise' next test as Lady Cats look for league win

By Daran Neuschafer Sports Writer

K-State's Lady Cats took one big step Wednesday night when they gave the nationally-ranked Nebraska Cornhuskers all they could handle in an 82-72 loss in Lincoln, Neb.

Even though they did not come away with a victory, Coach Matilda Mossman hopes her troops will take an even bigger step Saturday by winning their first Big Eight Conference game of the season when they travel to Boulder, Colo., to take on the Colorado Lady Buffs.

"Our kids played a great game against Nebraska. We know that, and even though we didn't come away with a win, we are still happy with the effort," Mossman said.

"As far as our confidence goes, something has to happen," she said. "Our kids have continued to keep their confidence up, and that's good, confidence stays up."

The Lady Cats, who stand at 7-8 overall and 0-3 in the Big Eight, could have a good chance of picking up that all-important first conference win Saturday. Colorado, 10-6 overall and also winless in the conference at 0-3, has been a little bit of a surprise around the league this year-and not a pleasant one for Lady Buff fans.

Colorado was a pre-season pick to make a strong bid at capturing the Big Eight crown. They returned all five starters from last season, as well as four others. But early conference losses at home to Oklahoma and Kansas have left the Lady Buffs in a must-win situation if they plan on making a run at the Big Eight title.

"I think them being 0-3 in the conference is the biggest surprise in the league this year," Mossman said.

"They have everybody back from last year, and had a good recruiting would contend for the title. They assist performance. have got excellent individual talent, but they just haven't put it together as a team yet," she added.

Sophomore forward Janet Madsen, after another impressive game against Nebraska, continues to lead the Lady Cats. Madsen had teamhighs with 19 points and 11 rebounds against the Cornhuskers. It was her eighth straight game to score in double figures this season.

"Janet has been our catalyst. Even when things have not gone well for the team, she continues to have tremendous games," Mossman said. "And the Nebraska game proves that with her 11 rebounds. For a 5-foot-9 player to do the things she does inside is outstanding.

Mossman, who is still looking for the best line-up, started freshman Nadira Hazim at the point guard position. The Topeka native responded

K-State, 'Superman' gear up for Cowboys

By Bill Lang Sports Writer

Oklahoma State men's basketball Coach Leonard Hamilton does not sound positive about Saturday's game with K-State. In fact, Hamilton talks as if the Cowboys, 9-6 overall and 1-1 in the Big Eight Conference, will end up with another loss.

The Wildcats, 9-4 overail and 1-0 in the conference, will invade Gallagher-Iba Arena Saturday for a 3:10 p.m. tipoff.

"K-State (9-4 overall and 1-0 in the conference) is a very sound and very well-coached team," Hamilton said. "They have a fantastic player in (Mitch) Richmond, a guard who will fight the whole game in (Steve) Henson, another guard who can bury the 3-pointer in (Will) Scott and a couple of big guys down low who just get the job done.'

The reason for Hamilton's outlook is the Cowboys have suffered through an up-and-down season one Hamilton says has been "inconsistent."

"We've had a very inconsistent year," he said. "(Center) Sylvester Kincheon hasn't had as good a year as what he should be having and (guard) Todd Christian is in a shooting slump."

Add to that the departure of 7-foot-4 Alan Bannister, a redshirt last season and the tallest player in the country, and it's easy to understand Hamilton's discontent. "Alan just wasn't comfortable here at Oklahoma State," Hamilton said. "It had nothing to do with the Oklahoma State University." The key to an OSU win, Hamilton said, is to keep pressure on K-State team. He just wasn't comfortable at guards Scott and especially Henson. "They are both extremely talented players and both handle the press well," he said. "If we can slow them down and keep them from hitting the open man, we have a shot at winning. Right now, I'd have to say that Henson is the key to their team's success. He's the key to whole game."

Slowing down Big Eight Playerof-the-Week Richmond is also vital to the Cowboys' success. Right now, Superman is playing for K-State," Hamilton said of Richmond. "The only difference between this superman and the other Superman is that he doesn't have a cape." K-State Coach Lon Kruger said he isn't worried about OSU's attempts to shut Henson down. He said the Cats have other outlets to go to.

"Steve's been giving us really good leadership and quality playing time," he said. "But every team, when looking at their opponent, will look at the play of the point guard."

As for the possibility of another low-scoring game, Kruger gave the impression that he didn't mind.

'It's difficult to say what the score is going to be," he said "W. or the other team has the posession they can do what ever they want and if they choose to slow it down, they'll slow

NOTES: Saturday's game will be broadcast by the Big Eight/Raycom Sports Network...K-State is hitting the road for three straight games. Following the contest at OSU, they travel to Colorado Wednesday and Kansas Jan. 30...This season, the 'Cats are 5-2 on the road. Those two losses were to Purdue, 101-72, and Southern Mississippi, 91-89, in overtime.

Football committee adopts rule changes

By The Associated Press

MISSION, Kan. - Defensive teams will have the opportunity to score on point-after attempts if they block a kick or intercept a pass, under a change adopted by the Football Rules Committee of the National Collegiate Athletic Association.

Under the old rule, the ball would be dead, but now the defense can advance it and will be awarded two points if it reaches the opposite end zone. But the defense still can't advance a fumble on a point-after ing a three-day session ending Wednesday.

In other changes, the committee deleted the rule prohibiting the same team from taking consecutive timeouts, made goal post support padding mandatory next season and said mouthpieces players must wear will be yellow starting in 1990, so that those not using them can be more

It also increased the penalty for illegal use of the hands from five yards to 10, and said a team loses the opportunity for point-after tries on a fumble if the ball is recovered by an The committee, meeting in Kansas offensive player other than the one

Track team to compete in Missouri

By The Collegian Staff

K-State's track teams open the 1988 indoor season today at the Missouri Invitational at Columbia, Mo.

Teams scheduled to compete in the men's division are K-State, Missouri, Wichita State, Southern Illinois-Edwardsville, Western Illinois and Southwest Missouri State.

Competing in the women's division are K-State, Missouri, Iowa, Southern Illinois-Edwardsville, Western Illinois and Southwest Missouri State.

The Wildcats have only been practicing since Jan. 13, so this "low-key," non-scoring meet is the perfect opportunity for K-State to begin competition, Coach John Capriotti said.

"This team is going to have to take a slow approach to the indoor season," Capriotti said. "This meet will let us see where we are as far as training is concerned."

Missing today's meet are sprinter Jeff Reynolds, jumper and sprinter Felicia Carpenter and distance runner Jacque Struckhoff. Reynolds is recoverning from tendonitis, Carpenter recently underwent minor surgery and Struckhoff won't begin serious competition until the middle of the season, Capriotti said.

Tonight's competition begins at 6 p.m. with the women's high jump and two-mile relay.

Broncos lose, 'Skins gain player

DENVER - Rejuvenated by a two-day break, the Super Bowl-bound Denver Broncos returned to the practice field Thursday - without wide receiver Vance Johnson. Coach Dan Reeves put his team through a 1 and one-half workout in the team's indoor practice facility.

"Our emphasis right now is on conditioning," Reeves said. "We did a little work on the game plan, but we want to save most of that for next week. We won't really focus on Washington until we get to San Diego on water at annual contract the second of the s

Monday. You don't want to build up for the game too soon."

Johnson, Denver's leading receiver, hopes to be ready for practice next week.

Johnson suffered a bruised groin in a playoff game Jan. 10 against Houston. Four days later, he developed internal bleeding and was hospitalized, forcing him to miss the AFC championship game against Cleveland, won by Denver 38-33.

Released from the hospital on Monday, Johnson has been ordered to take it easy until doctors are satisfied the torn blood vessel has repaired itself.

HERNDON, Va. - Art Monk practiced with the Washington Redskins Thursday for the first time in more than six weeks as the team began preparations for the Super Bowl. Monk, the No. 2 receiver in team history, ran pass patterns and agility drills during a two-hour session at Redskin Park.

Monk had previously been working out on his own after being placed on the inactive list Dec. 9 with a partially torn medial collateral ligament in his right knee.

Coach Joe Gibbs said. "It's something we from the opposition.

will evaluate as we go."

While Monk refused to talk to reporters after the workout, his teammates had plenty to say and certainly seemed encouraged that he could be in the lineup for the Jan. 31 game against the Denver Broncos.

"It's great to have Art back," wide receiver

Gary Clark said. Entering this season, Monk's 270 catches were tops in the NFL over the last three years. Although he was limited to only 38 receptions this year due to his injury and the 24-day "He looked good out there," Redskins players' strike, he still commands respect

AIDS committee informs campus of disease facts

By Alison Neely Staff Writer

As part of a new awareness program, K-State students, faculty and staff are now receiving the most current AIDS information available.

The comprehensive awareness plan to combat acquired immune deficiency syndrome has been developed by the Committee on Communicable Diseases. The two goals of the program are to disseminate information on the prevention of the disease and how to handle AIDS patients in the workplace, said Fred B. Newton, director of the Counseling Center.

The awareness program is the second half of a two-fold process begun in 1986 by the Kansas State University Committee for AIDS, ARC (AIDS-Related Complex) and AIDS Virus, said Cindy Burke, health educator with Lafene Student Health Center.

The first half was a campus AIDS policy approved by former University President Duane Acker. A new policy is being written to be approved by President Jon Wefald, Burke said.

The awareness program is being conducted in three separate

A public relations campaign, which began last December, is providing additional educational information for campus and community media, primarily through the use of news releases. In addition, an insert based on commonly asked questions and answers about AIDS appeared in Tuesday's Collegian.

A specific program has been developed to disseminate information to students. The program will be conducted with the help of student volunteers from Omicron Nu honor society, residence halls, Student Senate and select premedicine, pre-physical therapy and pre-nursing students provided through the College of Arts and Sciences, said Susan Scott, associate dean of student life. The information sessions will be conducted in residence halls and greek houses. All student organizations will receive a letter describing the program and encouraging them to set up a presentation time for the members, Scott said.

As another part of the awareness program, the Committee on Communicable Diseases endorses making condoms more available by placing them in vending machines in strategic places on campus.

"We're trying to say to people, 'Look, this is the predominant way to prevent AIDS.' We're suggesting that availability should be there in appropriate places for students," Newton said. "(There is) no excuse for not having safe sex. We're after protection.'

Condoms are currently available on campus at Lafene Student Health Center, at both the pharmacy and LaFemme Clinic.

The vending machine proposal is being explored by the administration with the help of the Student Governing Association, said Robert Krause, vice president for institutional advancement.

Movie Review

The show opens with one of the most clever introductions I have seen. They briefly show the three main characters as children. While focusing on the children only a minute per character, each of their personalities is established for the rest of the movie. William Hurt plays Tom Grunick, a very handsome sportscaster who, by sheer good fortune, moves up to local anchorman and then to a network. His talent is not good reporting, only good anchoring.

Aaron Altman is almost the opposite. As portrayed by Albert Brooks, he is a brilliant reporter and writer, but provides the best laughs in the movie when he attempts to anchor the weekend news. His character is somewhat the bad guy, but his acting is the best.

Jane Craig, played by Holly Hunter (Raising Arizona), is the apple of each of their eyes. Her character personifies living at one's limits, both professionally and emotionally. But she can be sympathized with, and

The movie makes an excellent comment about television anchorthey handle sexual relationships. men. The familiar stereotype is that all anchors are blond, beautiful and brainless. Apparently, most Americans do not consider the ability to effectively host a television news broadcast a legitimate talent. This movie takes the opposite approach. In one of the most important and enlightening - scenes, Tom (blond, beautiful and brainless) gives the art of anchoring. Apparently, it is much more than just reading words off a glass plate in front of the camera lens.

Aaron (smart, sophisticated and sorry-looking) some instruction on

"Broadcast News" also touches upon other areas of photojournalistic ethics. Namely, where does a reporter draw the line between creative storytelling and creative dramatics?

None of the three stars are incredibly famous actors, but perhaps after this movie they will be. Together they provide an almost perfect ensemble, especially in the way

There seem to be two predictable story lines - boy-meets-girl and two-men-dualing-over-one-woman. But the ending is expected and unexpected at the same time - the best of both worlds. Very refreshing.

My only criticism is that I wish more emphasis would have been given to a scene where a tape is produced and ran across the studio just seconds before the New York studio plans to broadcast it via satellite.

I loved "Broadcast News" because it was well filmed, well directed, well acted - just plain well done. Above all, it has a few good points about a medium that most of us are overly exposed to, and overly ignorant of. The fact that one of my favorite actors (Jack Nicholson) plays a cameo role didn't dim my affection

Do yourself a favor. Grab a friend and treat yourself to the best movie of the year.

"The lottery has provided some valuable income to the state," he

Under a law passed by the Legislature last year, the state will receive 30 percent of the gross ticket sales. Forty-five percent of the money generated by gross sales will go back to lottery winners, and the state will spend 25 percent on administrative

Of the money the state keeps, 60 percent will be used for economic development projects, 30 percent to reimburse the counties for the costs of the statewide reappraisal and 10 percent to relieve prison overcrowding.

The first game in the multi-state lottery is scheduled to begin Feb. 3. Kansas lottery officials will conduct practice games Jan. 28-30 at retail The other states in the multi-state agreement are Iowa, West Virginia, Rhode Island, Oregon, Maryland and Missouri, along with the District of Columbia.

The Senate's quick action came after Attorney General Robert Stephan told Legislators last week that they must approve the contract the lottery commission has entered into with other states for it to become official. The lottery commission entered into the agreement in September.

The issue of legislative approval was raised last week by the Rev. Richard Taylor, president of Kansans for Life At Its Best, the state's temperance organization.

Taylor cited an opinion issued by Stephan a year ago saying the Legislature must approve any contract entering Kansas into a multi-state

Reilly said the Legislature would not be able to alter the contract because any changes would have to be approved by the other states and the District of Columbia.

Lottery Director Larry Montgomery has said he had assumed the Legislature approved the multi-state contract when it passed the law implementing the lottery last session.

Taylor told the Senate Federal and State Affairs Committee that Kansans had never voted whether they wanted to join a multi-state lottery.

"Poor people see only the prize," he said. "They don't understand that millions and millions of people must lose if jackpots are large."

"We would like to see people work together to help prevent unwanted pregnancies, but we are put on the defensive every year because (antiabortion groups) keep trying to reverse this. We have to spend our money and energy fighting this when we could all work together to find to a way to prevent unwanted pregnancies." If the abortion question is again brought before the Supreme Court, Wisneski said she would like to see the court "listen to both sides. We are not interested in saying this is right and this is wrong. We are interested in people getting all the facts, and then a decision being made the way it should be in a court of law.

Knight claims Jesse is his best promoter. Every Friday and Saturday night, Knight's brother and sister-inlaw take Jesse to a bar in their hometown of Randolph where everyone gives Jesse quarters and the only songs anyone hears all night are the A and B side of Knight's record.

Knight has framed all of his awards, records, important letters and even the $50 bill he received when he placed 3rd in the Marlboro Country Roundup in 1986. He also autographed 50 of his records and gave them to friends.

"You never know," Knight said. "They might be worth something someday. Just think if Elvis would have done that."

Knight is no longer Lance of Lance Romance and the Heart Attacks, the '50s group he sang with in high school, but he's still singing every chance he gets.

And he's hoping that someday his nephew will have more competition as Doug Knight's biggest fan.

The court ruled that the state could not regulate abortion in the first trimester of pregnancy. In the second trimester, the state could only regulate in the interest of maternal health. And in the third trimester. the state could forbid abortion because the fetus could possibly survive outside the womb.

Since 1973, abortion has become increasingly safer in the first trimester, but technological advances have also improved the chances of survival for a fetus outside the mother's womb. Second trimester abortions can now result in a living fetus.

Linford said she believes Roe vs. Wade will not be reversed.

"I think it is too important," she said. "It signaled an important event in the development of individual rights in this country.

"It was a very important step in the development of women's rights, and even though there is a very vocal opposition, I don't think it is going to be overturned."

Abortion opponents have become better organized since 1973 and have created a powerful lobbying force around the nation. One purpose of today's march is to influence local politicians, said Dan Walter, campus coordinator of the Great Commission Students.

"We want to educate the University community on the dangers of abortion and inform people of the alternatives to abortion, as well as influence political representatives," Walter

Apartment fire spreads quickly

Damage is termed extensive

By The Collegian Staff

Investigators are still seeking to determine the cause of a fire Saturday at the Rosemary Apartments, 327 Fremont St., that caused extensive damage to the 12 apartments in the building.

Battalion Chief Jack Roets of the Manhattan/Riley County Fire Department said the fire started in a basement hallway and spread up the east wall of the building to the

"That fire was rolling pretty good," Roets said.

Roets said the damage was estimated at $20,600, but he expected the damage estimate to be increased because of the large amount of smoke damage to the contents of the building.

Roets said it was not possible to state that arson may have been the cause of the fire.

Kathi and Terry Iverson looked at the building as firefighters searched for any other signs of fire in the structure.

"All our stuff was in our apartment," Iverson said,

He pointed out his apartment by saying it was the one with charcoal starter fluid in the window.

"We were going to have a bar-becue at 6:30," he said.

The couple had just returned from the grocery store when a neighbor in the building knocked on their door and told them there was a fire in the building.

After saying friends would be arriving for the barbecue, Iverson said, "I guess we'll be going home with one of them."

Roets said all occupants of the building found lodging for the evening.

He said the blaze was a secondalarm fire because an aerial ladder truck was summoned to the scene. Two pumper trucks were also used.

Roets could not say when the results of the investigation would be made public.

Coronary victim dies after acquittal in murder retrial

By The Associated Press

OVERLAND PARK - James C. Hunter Jr. died Sunday of an apparent heart attack, four days after he was acquitted during a retrial on charges stemming from a 1985 crime spree that left four people dead in northwest Kansas.

Hunter was driving with a friend Sunday morning when he began suffering chest pains, said his father, James Hunter Sr. The two stopped at a fire station, and Hunter later was taken to Shawnee Mission Medical Center.

Hunter was pronounced dead at 11:25 a.m., a hospital official said. The Shawnee Police Department said preliminary results of an autopsy indicated death resulted from coronary failure.

Hunter had no history of heart problems but had experienced chest pains during the retrial in Hays, his father said. The ordeal of prison and the retrial apparently contributed to his death, the elder Hunter said.

"I'm sure it had a hell of a lot to do with it," the father said from his Overland Park home. "I still can't believe he's dead."

convicted of two counts of firstdegree murder in June 1985 during his first trial in Colby. The Kansas Supreme Court ordered a retrial on the grounds that the judge had failed to properly instruct the jury on the defense of compulsion.

Hunter maintained he was hitchhiking near Wichita and forced to go along with the crime spree on Feb. 13, 1985. The dead included a Grainfield restaurant manager, two men who were abducted from a Levant grain elevator and shot along a county road, and a suspect killed in a shootout with authorities.

Robert Lewis Jr. of Atwood, who defended Hunter, said he was shocked when Hunter's father told him about the death Sunday. "We'd just got him his life back,"

Lewis said. "He was going on with the rest of his life." Lewis said he'd spoken Friday night with Hunter. He said he knew of no health problems his client was suffering. "The family's just devastated by it." Lewis said. "This is a family that's held on to the faith that everything would be all right some day, and it finally was. And then this Special Prosecutor Randy Baird, reached at his home in Topeka, said: "I hate to see that happen to anybody, regardless of how I felt about him." Lewis acknowledged that some Hunter, 36, of Amoret, Mo., was people who thought Hunter was guilty would believe justice now had been served, but added that "justice was done in Ellis County. I don't think anyone knows why someone

Faculty blames loss on state's poor image

By Robert Short Collegian Reporter

Kansas' image problem is one of the reasons the state lost out in its bid for a $4.4 billion federal project, some K-State faculty said.

"A research scientist looking for a place to establish a lab is not going to settle in Kansas," said Kenneth Brooks, associate dean of landscape architecture.

Kansas was eliminated from a nationwide competition last fall for the location and construction of a superconducting supercollider that would rank as the nation's largest civilian science project.

"The failure of Kansas to make the final list could be attributed to many factors - most of them political," Brooks said. "Inherent image problems of Kansas" contributed to the state not being selected. I was disappointed, but not surprised, that Kansas was not selected."

Richard Forsyth, associate dean of architecture and design, said the proposal should have placed more emphasis on the practical attractiveness of the building site and less on the economic aspects.

The size of the planned supercollider would require a very stable earth plate, one that Kansas was perfect for, Forsyth said. The supercollider would have been built on a 7.863-acre tract south of Topeka in Osage County, near the Pamona Reservoir.

Brooks said the Pamona site would have been excellent for the facility. But, Kansas was not eliminated because of any apparent physical deficiency in the site.

"Being chosen for this facility would have been a real shot in the arm for Kansas' image," Brooks

Not only did Kansas lose bragging rights for the location of the project, it also lost the revenue the supercollider's services would have generated, said Herman Donnert, professor of nuclear engineering.

Donnert said K-State would have benefitted from the relatively close location of the facility. Although the University had no ties with the project concerning research during the planning stages, Donnert said interaction would have been likely in the Since Kansas had never put together a proposal for a facility of this nature before, Brooks said the state's inexperience probably affected the outcome. Mark Lapping, dean of the Col-

Former Dole aide subject of federal inquiry

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - The financial transactions of a bankrupt suburban Kansas City company that had business ties to Dave Owen, a former chief fund-raiser for Kansas Sen. Bob Dole, are under investigation by the Securities and Exchange Commission, The Kansas City Star reported Sunday.

Former officials of Birdview Satellite Communications Inc. of Overland Park, SEC is examining the company's activities prior to its bankruptcy filing in August 1986.

Owen was a stockholder in Birdview, served as a paid consultant to the company and once brokered a $250,000 land deal with the company through Charles A. Ross, Birdview's founder and former president, the newspaper said. A spokesman for Owen said Saturday that Owen said his transactions involving Bird-

Kan., told the Star in a copyright story that the view were "entirely proper." Ross declined to discuss the SEC probe. Sale of stock held by company officers and directors appears to be part of the SEC inquiry, according to former company officials. One official said the land sale also was under scrutiny. The SEC as a matter of policy will not comment on its investigations. Two former Birdview officials told the Star that the company agreed to pay Owen

$100,000 for advertising Birdview on a tele- 1987 before he became national finance vised golf program that never got off the ground. The work was done by G and S Productions, which a spokesman for Owen called a "spinoff" of Golfun Productions Inc. Golfun was owned by Owen and received a $250,000 loan from the Elizabeth Dole blind trust.

Owen was appointed as the trust's investment adviser when it was created in 1985. He was removed from that position in the fall of chairman for Dole's presidential campaign.

The Johnson County businessman and former Kansas lieutenant governor resigned Jan. 14 as Dole's campaign finance chairman after revelations about his financial ties to the blind trust.

Owen has denied wrongdoing, but admitted he "should have been more careful with the appearance of some of my activities."

Shamir may meet with Arabs

JERUSALEM - Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir told visiting U.S. Jewish leaders Sunday he was ready to meet Arab leaders "openly or secretly" but persisted in his opposition to an international Middle East peace conference.

In the occupied West Bank city of Ramallah, hundreds of Palestinian youths clashed with Israeli soldiers and one Arab was seriously wounded, the army said. But a fragile calm held in other parts of the occupied territories, seized by Israel during the 1967 Middle East war.

Theodore Mann, the president of the American Jewish Congress, and Henry Siegman, the group's executive director, brought Shamir messages from Jordan's King Hussein and President Hosni Mubarak of Egypt.

Shamir's spokesman, Avi Pazner, said the two Arab leaders urged Shamir to endorse an international conference. Mubarak proposed that before the talks, the Palestinians pledge to refrain from anti-Israeli violence for six months and the Israelis promise to stop building settlements in occupied territory, Pazner said.

Shamir did not respond directly to the messages but explained his opposition to the idea of an international conference, said Pazner.

Pazner quoted the prime minister as saying he wanted to meet Mubarak and Hussein "face to face, openly or secretly, formally or informally, to discuss peace with them."

World AIDS summit to be held

LONDON - Health officials from 145 countries are gathering in London this week for a world acquired immune deficiency syndrome summit at which they will plan a global assault on the deadly epidemic.

The three-day conference, which opens Tuesday, will be the largest meeting of government ministers ever held on a single health problem, according to the World Health Organization.

The U.N. agency, based in Geneva, and the British government are co-sponsoring the event.

"The conference, we believe, is going to mark another critical turning point in the global mobilization against AIDS," Dr. Jonathan Mann, the American director of WHO's Special Program on AIDS, said in an interview with The Associated Press.

Health ministers from 131 countries and government advisers from 14 others have registered for the World Summit of Ministers of Health on Programs for AIDS Prevention.

Princess Anne, the daughter of Queen Elizabeth II, will deliver the opening speech.

Attending from the United States will be Surgeon General C. Everett Koop; Dr. Robert E. Windom, the No. 2 official at the Department of Health and Human Services; Dr. Gary Noble, deputy director of the Atlanta-based Centers for Disease Control in charge of AIDS activity; and Dr. Peter J. Fischinger, AIDS coordinator for the Public Health Service.

This summit deals mainly with government efforts to control the spread of acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

Doles' new book contains error

WASHINGTON - It's the kind of mistake than can make a Kansas Jayhawk see red. No, make that crimson.

A newly published autobiography of Sen. Bob Dole and his wife, Elizabeth Hanford Dole, contains an error about the university that the Kansas senator attended in the early 1940s before he joined the Army.

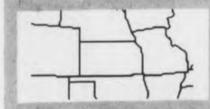

A caption for a photograph of Dole in a track meet says, "In the fall of 1941, I entered Kansas State University at Lawrence. With a little talent and a lot of perseverance, I was able to break the tape at a quarter mile."

Dole actually attended the University of Kansas at Lawrence. He left KU to enlist in the Army in December 1942.

Walt Riker, Dole's press secretary, says the senator was told of the mistake immediately after the first printed copies of the book arrived in his office.

Riker couldn't recall his reaction, however.

"We're the senator for all colleges and universities in the state so we'll take it in that spirit," says Riker.

Waste shipping to begin in 1992

OMAHA, Neb. - Shipment of low-level radioactive waste into Nebraska for a waste dump to serve five states is expected to begin in 1992. Shipping and nuclear energy industry spokesmen say the process will be safe.

"There's no such thing as zero-risk, I suppose, but when it comes to approaching zero risk, the way we handle our lowlevel waste is about as close as you can get," said Mark Gautier, a spokesman for the Omaha Public Power District.

Trucks and trains have hauled radioactive materials for more than 30 years. Trucks haul the same radioactive waste across Nebraska now, spokesmen said.

Accidents in the trucking industry have happened, but there's never been a radiation injury or contamination, said John Currie, safety director for the American Trucking Association.

The same is true for the rail industry, said Pat Student, manager of hazardous material for the Union Pacific Railroad Co.

Hazardous materials are shipped through Nebraska. Burlington Northern Railorad ships spent nuclear fuel from the Nebraska Public Power District's Cooper Station at Brownville into Iowa. Union Pacific hauls high-level radioactive remmants from the damaged Three Mile Island nuclear power plant in Pennsylvania to a storage site in Idaho. And trucks haul low-level radioactive waste across Nebraska from power plants, hospitals and other sources to storage sites in Nevada and Washington.

WASHINGTON - An impending congressional showdown over the Reagan administration's policy of aid to the Nicaraguan Contra rebels has triggered a round of intense lobbying aimed at about five dozen "swing" lawmakers.

But many of those who are in the center of the storm of persuasion say they are relatively unaffected by it, and are watching developments in Central America before they make last-minute voting decisions.

tonight's State of the Union speech, then follow it with a formal request to Congress on Tuesday or Wednesday.

Under an earlier agreement with Congress, consideration of the aid issue will be on a fast track. The vote in the House, which is expected to be the major battleground, is scheduled for Feb. 3. Should the House approve the request, it would then go to the Senate for a vote the next day.

Reagan, who has mounted a vigorous public campaign for a Contra aid package in recent days, will continue renew his plea for aid to the rebels in He will discuss the matter Wednesday, in what the White House has billed as a major address to the Reserve Officers Association.

The president also will make a pitch on Friday to a group of civic leaders, and may make a nationally televised address on the eve of the House vote.

With the exception of those speeches and the formal submission of an arms-control treaty to the Senate later in the week, Reagan has cleared his calendar to lobby members of Congress by telephone and in

Plan creates awareness of students' importance

For a decade, the percentage of the state's budget dedicated to higher education has declined. But that doesn't matter. The young do not have a voice in the United States. Manhattan.

Over the last five years, America's youth have remained virtually inactive while various governmental authorities have slowly stripped them of rights and privileges they once held.

Once upon a time, many states allowed anyone over the age of 18 to drink at least 3.2 beer. That right has been withdrawn.

Once upon a time the law of the land said students do not shed their constitutional rights when they walk into the school house door. Since the Hazelwood case, their constitutional rights have been withdrawn.

Remember Prohibition? That was the last time the government stripped rights from people over the age of 40. That population did not stand for it. Prohibition was consequently repealed.

Finally, the state is giving the education of its youth - and thus its future - a higher priority. However, it will probably never fund the entire Margin of Excellence proposal.

The young do not have a voice in Sometime during this semester, Student Senate will study a plan that may give the students of K-State a voice, at least within the city of

Based on a plan which was successful in Montana, the Senate will consider a plan involving the distribution of stickers that read, "I am a K-State Student." Students are to place the stickers on checks, to demonstrate the revenue the University brings to the community.

It may not send merchants marching on the capital with signs and banners protesting the lack of adequate funds for higher education. But it may make them more inclined to sign a petition or write a letter. And it may make them realize that students are important.

Students need not be voiceless. They need not be content with lessthan-citizen status.

The efforts of Student Senate to give students more of a voice should be applauded. The youth of this country are more than just its future - they are also its present. Any movement toward making them more vocal, any movement toward helping them assume the rights and responsibilities of full citizens, is a movement toward better democracy.

Students dread, await classes

When they have given out their office hours and written their names on the board, professors, on the first day of class usually find an excuse to say, "Damn."

Then the professor laughs. His laugh tells the class to laugh also.

They cuss to show they are human beings like the students. They want to be average Joes, just one of the guys

He might even let it slip that he drinks by saying something like, "I won't be in my office Tuesdays because I descend into Aggieville for lunch that day.'

Usually I am disappointed on first days, not because the professor cusses or drinks, but because he will not talk until the bell

He stands silent in the corner, unless there are papers to shuffle or chalk to find. I always hope for professors who will talk before class. I hope for ones who will talk about basketball or anything non-academic. If I do not get such a professor, I hope at least for one whose name rhymes with a lot of words. It makes writing limericks easier. I like names like Dreep. There once was a prof named Dreep Whose cigars made my flesh creep He chewed his glasses

In all of his classes

And put all his students to sleep. I hoped that for once the first two rows of my lecture classes would not be filled completely with girls. But they were. I bet they would kill any boy who dared sit in the front

I hoped no one spilled coffee on the slanted floor in a lecture class. I did not want coffee in my books.

I hoped my desk would have some new graffiti. I think brand-new desks come covered with lists of the greek houses. Maybe I Commentary should list the residence halls.

I hate the 10 minutes before class begins. I pretend not to notice the people sitting near me because during the first days there is not any homework, tests or notes to start small

Seats fill up in a checkerboard fashion. People leave a chair gap on each side. The gaps get filled only when there is no other

Some people save seats. This is stupid. Sitting down and then getting told that the seat is saved feels terrible. Seat choice during the first days is important. You usually end up sitting in that place

It is easier to sit in the same place. Your excuse can always be, "I sat here yesterday."

Otherwise it looks like you are trying to sit by My last name begins with the letter "S."

My high school's alphabetical seating chart placed me in the back on the left side. I was scared when I realized I still sit there. The people around me still tend to have "S" names also.

So I sit in silence until the bell rings, and the professor springs into action. He adjusts the podium and says something that amounts to "Good morning, class."

The professor calls the roll and laughs at his mispronunciations. He will ask Christine if she goes by Chris. He will decide that the class should play a get-to-know-each-other

I hate get-to-know-each-other games. I stand, say my name and major and sit down. The guy next to me decides he is in a therapy group and spills out his sad life story.

Some people say dogs look like their owners. I say professors look like their subjects. A philosophy professor looks like an ancient Greek, and British literature professor like an Anglo-Saxon, and a clothing professor looks like a model.

Students take notes madly the first few days. This later dwindles. But notes are the students' best weapon. Professors want attention and taking notes tells them that they have

They began taking notes only when he was in the left half of the room. Soon he paced only in that half. The class kept halving the area where they would take notes and the professor was soon standing still.

But I am amazed because I know the people I am ignoring will soon be friends. The professor will soon be talking about basketball before class.

Because this semester we will talk about homework and tests and whether we studied. We will stop each other on campus next semester to find out what's new.

I like the beginning of classes. There is still a chance that finally, a professor will understand and appreciate my answering style. There is a chance that the study group will be fun. The chance has not left yet, not in the Peace may instigate violence

People looking to stay out of arguments often expound on the idea of peace. Peace is the goal every person and every nation is supposed to be chasing.

Every day people hear how to pursue peace. From their churches they hear how "inner peace" will save their souls and put their minds at rest. From their politicians they hear how a policy will bring "peace to the region."

Peace means stability and security. Nations are willing to pay for peace for these two goals. It is something few can make a plausible argument against.

But if it's the sole objective, you had better prepare for peace because it can be unsettling.

Some nations are more successful at attaining peace than others. Taiwan has been relatively peaceful since it became independent, albeit the country was under martial law for more than 35 years. It was peaceful and prospered, but its people had to pay for it.

More than one country has found poor people are usually fairly peaceful. The people are kept poor enough so they must worry about food more than anything else. Meanwhile, the government's policy balances a few gifts with a few more physical threats.

This program often maintains peace because the odds against the people are too great. If they try a revolution, it is bound to be smashed by the present government. And if they are successful, who's to say the next administration will grant any of the benefits that the previous one did? Their life may not be much, but hell - it's peaceful,

Peace, evidently, is easy to accomplish, depending on how much people are willing to pay for it. So what if it costs a few lives? It must be worth it since so many people say peace is the only way to make "the world a Commentary DOLL safer and happier place to live," as a church commercial arbitrarily put it. So if peace is not the objective, then war must be. Not a comforting thought. Most people would prefer peace, with all its faults, to fighting in the streets. The question does not have a yes-or-no answer. Disturbing peace sometimes means ending some wars. For instance, the fighting in Israel is the result of enforced peace. The Israelis wanted the security of peace. This meant keeping the Palestinians under thumb. The cost of peace was high, but necessary. Peace forbade the Palestinian flag to be flown, told them where they could live, and limited their work oppor-

Editor

Of course, that kind of perverted peace is not all the commercials say it is, but "real" peace is - like the peace existing in the United States.

Yes, the U.S. style - where peace is based on mutual fright in foreign policy. If we are as frightened of other countries as they are of us, then peace will ensue. If the balance is thrown off, then peace will end. Now there's "real" peace.

On the domestic side, things are more or less peaceful. No rebellions or revolutions and little yelling, even though millions of people are unfed, uneducated and unemployed. Many Americans are not suffering like people in other countries who are systematically oppressed, but, considering their lot, they keep curiously silent.

In part, this is because Westerners are taught to be civilized by being quiet. If they want something done, they are supposed to use the channels made for the purpose. When they change situations with improper strategies, they do not receive legitimacy from people or institutions.

The hippies, the civil rights activists and the populists proved this. They were too loud, disruptive and demanding. Change would come, they were told, if they would go about it in the right way and wait. But for most, the proper channels had only frustrated them into trying other means.

The blacks tried to win local elections, alleviate their economic depression and secure equal rights first locally, then nationally, but the courts and Congress were not receptive. Appealing and waiting was not working. What was more effective, they found, was to force people to address their problems.

Groups that did try to garner support through the legitimate means often failed. The proposed equal rights amendent is an example. The cause was ridiculed and laughed at, and women were called anything from bimbos to bitches. Whether the amendment should have passed is not the issue. Rather, attention should be focused on how the cause and the supporters were treated. They were some overbearing women looking for sympathy by complaining.

Peace is overrated. Some things are obviously more important. Often, however, we choose peace over the haggling and complaining of others. The lessons have been taught, though. Too much peace leads to war.

Bars to 'beef up' security to avoid revoked licenses

By Robert Manchon Collegian Reporter

Underage drinking continues to be a problem in Manhattan.

Since Jan. 1, 27 minors have been cited by the Riley County Police Department for possessing or consuming cereal malt beverages.

L.C. Bieler, assistant director of the Riley County Police Department, said most of the violations since Jan. 1 occurred Jan. 14 at two Manhattan establishments: Brother's Tavern and Charlie's Neighborhood Bar.

A proposed ordinance that will be voted on by the Manhattan City Commission Feb. 2 states that any establishment that has 30 or more violations can have its license revoked. The proposed ordinance also states that the owner of the cited establishment must wait two years before applying for another license.

Heide Clark, city clerk, said no establishments in Manhattan would be affected by the proposal if it were currently in effect.

Managers of Charlie's and Brother's, which both allow 18-yearolds to be admitted but not to drink, said they will beef up security in light of the recent citations.

Ward Morgan, owner/manager of Brother's, said he recently hired seven people solely to check patrons for stamps and to eject violators.

"People under age are thrown out," Morgan said.

Max Koster, manager of Charlie's, said he will continue to enforce the security measures already in place at the bar.

"Wristbands are worn by people 21 and over, and those under 21 are stamped," he said. "People caught without a stamp or underage people are immediately thrown out."

Koster said no warnings are given. Bieler said the recent citations came as part of the RCPD's routine inspection.

"We check all the bars periodically," Bieler said. If the officers suspect someone is drinking under age, they have the right by law to ask for identification.

Patrons who have no identification and are found to be minors are cited, along with the establishment's manager, he said.

Opera buff's fall ruled as suicide

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK - The death of an elderly opera buff who plunged from the upper balcony of the Metropolitan Opera House was ruled Sunday as a suicide, authorities said.

The 82-year-old man, who fell to his death Saturday, was identified by police as Bantcho Bantchevsky, a native of Bulgaria and a voice coach who lived a block from the opera

Following an autopsy Sunday, the city's medical examiner determined that Bantchevsky deliberately jumped from the balcony, said Ellen Borakove, a spokeswoman for the medical examiner. She said the victim suffered numerous internal and external injuries.

Early in the investigation, police ruled out foul play but said the death possibly was an accident. Neither Borakove nor a police spokesman,

Sgt. Raymond O'Donnell, would say what led investigators to classify the death a suicide.

The ornate red-and-gold theater was the scene of screams and pandemonium about 3:30 p.m. Saturday when Bantchevsky plunged 80 feet from the balcony to the rear of the orchestra section. He was dead when police arrived.

His fall came during the second intermission of Giuseppe Verdi's opera "Macbeth." Many in the fullhouse audience of 3,800 already had left for the lobby or other areas.

At 4:40 p.m., those still in the theater were told the show would not go on. Listeners to a live radio broadcast of the performance were informed that a person had died in the theater and the rest of the opera had been

A spokeswoman for the opera, Johanna Fiedler, said Bantchevsky was a voice coach.

K-State wins third straight

'Cats have sole possession of first place in conference

Oklahoma State guard Derrick Davis covers K-state guard Mark Nelson during Saturday's confrontation in Stillwater, Okla. The 'Cats defeated the Cowboys 76-60.

By Jenny Chaulk Sports Editor

STILLWATER, Okla. - Believe. Teams have got to do it if they expect to win games at home, let alone on the road.

"The win against Oklahoma (Jan. 16) boosted our confidence," said K-State guard Will Scott. "It got everybody believing."

The 'Cats gave themselves a booster shot to the injection of confidence from the OU game by making the Oklahoma State Cowboys believers Saturday. K-State improved its record to 2-0 in the Big Eight Conference and 10-4 overall by beating OSU, 76-60, at Gallagher-Iba Arena.

"I feel they are (a legitimate contender for the Big Eight title)," said Oklahoma State guard John Starks. "They've got a good inside/outside game and they play very hard. The Big Eight is a toss-up.'

K-State's victory marks the first time the Cowboys, who drop to 1-2 in the conference and 9-7 overall, have been beaten at home this season. The win is also the second road win posted in the conference so far this season — a telling indicator of how tough it is to play on the road in the Big Eight.

But more importantly, the win proves the 'Cats can compete away from home, something they will do twice this week - Wednesday at Colorado and Saturday at Kansas.

"We knew we had to have this one," said 'Cat forward Mitch Richmond, who finished with a game-high 30 points on 8-11 field goal shooting and 12-13 free throw shooting.

K-State's winning margin may be a bit deceiving, considering OSU trailed by just four points, 53-49, with just over six minutes left in the game. But an 8-point scoring surge by 'Cat guard William Scott and a bucket by Richmond put K-State up by 12 points with four minutes left. They never looked back.

"This was a very good win for us," K-State Coach Lon Kruger said. "To come in to Gallagher-Iba and win is a meaningful step."

The 'Cats started the second half much like the first, scoring nine unanswered points and taking a 43-30 lead with just over sixteen minutes left in the game.

"I think the main part of the ballgame was the second half start we got off to," Kruger said. "It was a four-point game, then all of a sudden we were able to play with a little bit of a margin."

That margin did not last, however, as three Cowboys - Starks, William Woods, and Richard Dumas - rallied OSU to within four points, 53-49, with 6:45 left in the game.

K-State then went to off-guard Scott, who answered the call, scoring eight of his seasonhigh 19 points in the next three minutes. He buried back-to-back 3-pointers at the 6:17 and 5:07 marks, and an 8-foot jump shot at the 3:47 mark, putting K-State ahead, 63-51.

"Will went in and got a couple buckets from the 3-point range," Kruger said. "That's something he can do. It was just a matter of him stepping forward."

"Basically, Coach (Kruger) told us to make shots for Will," Richmond said.

Scott was modest about his scoring barrage, which broke the game open for the 'Cats. "They left me open and I took the shots," he said. "We did a good job of moving the ball. They left me open and I got 'em down." A Dumas stuff at the 2:11 mark pulled OSU to within nine points, 63-54, but that was as close as they could get. K-State pulled away in the final one and one half minutes of the game, outscoring the Cowboys 11-6 for a final score of 76-60.

The 'Cats 3-2 zone defense was a big factor in the second half. Dumas, who scored 20 points to lead OSU, had 15 of those in the first half from short-range. The 'Cats' zone virtually shut down the Cowboys' inside game in the final 20 minutes, as they were able to collect just six points inside the paint.

"They switched to zone and we had trouble," Dumas said. "Normally, we don't have trouble with a zone."

"K-State is a very good team," OSU Coach Leonard Hamilton said. "The have an excellect outside shooting team. And when you have a great player on the floor like Richmond, they can go to him."

The first half saw K-State take a 34-30 lead into the lockerroom at halftime. But the 'Cats were outrebounded, 24-15, and were plagued by shooting difficulties at the free throw line, making 10-22 at the charity stripe.

"We definitely had trouble from the line, especially in the first half," Kruger said.

After taking a 7-0 lead, the 'Cats watched as OSU fought back to tie the game, 17-17, with 10:35 left in the first half. The Cowboys took the lead, 19-17, for the first and last time at the 9:43 mark of the half on a shot by Woods. Dumas increased the lead to three points, 21-18, before a Richmond dunk off a fast break and a five-foot jump shot by Fred McCoy put K-State up to stay, 22-21, with 7:30 left in the half.

K-State led, 33-26, at the minute mark of the first half, but two baskets by Cowboy Royce Jeffries pulled OSU to within three points, 33-30, with 47 seconds left in the half. Carlos Diggins canned a free throw with 5 seconds left to give the 'Cats a four-point margin at the half.

K-State had the opportunity to use its bench throughout the contest.

Lady Buffs knock off Lady Cats

By The Collegian Staff

What was thought to be a close matchup between the Lady Cats and the Lady Buffs of the University of Colorado turned into anything but in Boulder, Colo. Saturday night.

Going into the game, both teams were winless in the Big Eight at 0-3. But Colorado, using a blend of experience, balanced scoring and a home court advantage, took itself out of the conference cellar by routing K-State,

"We played intimidated and scared," K-State Coach Matilda Mossman said.

The game was all Lady Buffs, as K-State could never overcome a 45-18 halftime deficit. The Lady Cats pulled to within 15 points, 51-36, with 12:40 left in the game on a jump shot by Elyse

That was as close as they could get, however, as Colorado maintained its lead for the remainder of the game. The Lady Buffs led by as many as 29 points with a minute left in the contest, but K-State cut their final margin to 26 points on free throws by Funk and Kristi

The difference in the game was K-State's first half of play. The Lady Cats outscored Colorado 40-39 in the second half, but could not overcome 21 first half turnovers or the 27-point Colorado halftime lead.

It was the fifth consecutive loss for the Lady Cats, who drop to 7-9 overall and 0-4 in conference play. The four conference losses have been by margins of 23 points to Oklahoma State, 10 points to Nebraska, 31 points to Oklahoma and 26 to Colorado.

Diana Miller led the Lady Cats with 12 points, the only K-State player in double figures. The Lady Buffs, whose record goes to 1-3 in the Big Eight and 11-6 overall, had four players in double figures.

The reason most avid Midwest baseball fans can't wait to see things get underway once again is the recent successes enjoyed by the darlings of Kansas, Missouri, Nebraska, Colorado, Iowa and a few other states the Kansas City Royals.

Before you begin screaming that not all residents of these states like the six-time division champs and some even hate them, let's qualify

A look at the stations on the Rovchances are, not too many folks are als' radio network will show that all of the aforementioned states have at least one radio station that carries the Folks who live in areas inhabited Royals. This fact alone doesn't substantiate the claim that the Royals have fans in each of these states, but if I were a radio exec, chances are I'd try to be in tune with what my listeners wanted to hear.

> It seems to be fairly obvious, then, that the Royals must be popular in these states, or stations and advertisers wouldn't be spending money putting these games on the air. Throwing money to the wind broadcasting games no one cares about would be as foolish as walking someone intentionally with the bases loaded.

crowd at a Royals game. Though no statistical data is available to substantiate the claim, it would appear that more than 40 percent of the people who attend the average Royals game live outside the greater Kansas City area. That number is probably even higher on the weekends.

Take a look at the license plates on the cars in the parking lot of the Harry S. Truman Sports Complex when you make it out to the stadium this summer. I think you'll be surprised at how many different states are represented.

OK, now that we've attempted to justify the naming of the boys in blue as the darlings of the Midwest, let's take an early look at the 24 players likely to be in uniform when the Royals open the 1988 campaign in April.

This list is likely to change during the course of the next two months, as spring training often produces surprises. But let's pretend for a while that the season has begun and the introductions are about to be made. The Royals' 24-man roster should look something like this:

Pitchers (10) - Floyd Bannister, Bud Black, Steve Farr, Gene Garber, Jerry Don Gleaton, Mark Gubicza, Charlie Leibrandt, Ted Power, Dan Quisenberry, Bret Saberhagen.

White Sox in an off-season trade, and gives the Royals a starter to make up for the loss of Danny Jackson in the deal for shortstop Kurt Stillwell.

The starting rotation should include Bannister, Gubicza, Leibrandt and Saberhagen, with K-Stater Ted Power as the fifth starter. Black could spot start, but likely will be in the bullpen along with Farr, Garber, Gleaton and Quisenberry. Catchers (3) - Mike Macfarlane, Larry Owen, Jamie Quirk.

This position is the biggest question mark on the club. If Macfarlane can come back from his rotator cuff injury, the question mark would at least become a period.

Infielders (5) - George Brett, Kevin Seitzer, Kurt Stillwell, Brad Wellman, Frank White.

Brett, Seitzer, Stillwell and White wait.

Bannister was acquired from the are sure bets in starting roles, with jack-of-all-trades Wellman ready to back them up at all positions but first.

Outfielders (6) - Thad Bosley, Jim Eisenreich, Bo Jackson, Danny Tartabull, Gary Thurman, Willie Wilson.

Thurman, Wilson and Tartabull will likely be the starters, with Jackson and Bosley alternating in the designated hitter role.

Only time will tell if these 24 men can bring yet another American League Western Division title to the fans in the Midwest, but chances are, win or lose, the Royals will remain the "darlings" of these parts just the Wildcats do well in opening meet

By The Collegian Staff

Even though K-State track coach John Capriotti said his squads were taking a "low-key" approach to the season-opening indoor meet Friday at Columbia, Mo., the Wildcats captured eight first-place finishes at the Missouri Invitational.

"I thought it was a good opener for us," Capriotti said.

"We still have a long way to go, but I thought our kids competed really well for such a low-key meet. We got the season underway with a couple of wins. We did better than I thought we would do," he added.

Junior sprinter and hurdler Kim Kilpatrick led the women's team with first-place finishes in the 55-meter hurdles and the 300-meter dash.

"Kim won the hurdles really easy and in the 300-meter dash, she probably ran her best sprint race ever. What's great is that she is only going to get better," Capriotti said.

Other first-place finishers for the 'Cats were: Joy Jones in the 400-meter dash; Kelly Abernathy in the shot put; Ron Stahl in the mile run; Chuckie Allen in the 300-meter dash; Fred Soboyejo in the long jump; Kelly Williams in the high jump; and walk-on Daryl Reichard took honors in the 3,000-meter run.

Capriotti said patience will be the key to K-State's success this season. "Even though our athletes did really well, we've still got to be patient and not rush our progress," Capriotti said. "We've got to get some key people healthy, but we've got plenty of time because the Big Eight Conference meet is still six to seven weeks away." Slated next for K-State is a fourteam meet Saturday at Madison, Wis. Entered in the meet in addition to the Cats are the University of Winsconsin, Ilinois State University and Iowa State University.

Tigers roll, Sooners escape

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - Tenthranked Iowa State never got out of the blocks against a Missouri team Saturday that forever seemed to be grabbing a defensive rebound, outrunning the Cyclones down the court and scoring on an easy layup.

The Tigers outscored Iowa State 36-8 in an eight-minute period of the first half to take a 53-31 lead on the way to a 119-93 beating of the Cyclones in a Big Eight game.

"Running against Iowa State isn't that easy to do," said Tigers forward Mike Sandbothe. "Iowa State's a great running team. We didn't know if we wanted to slow it down or what. We just got into the flow of the game and we just ran it back at them. I don't think they expected that."

In another Big Eight conference game, Kansas State dropped Oklahoma State 76-60 to take over sole possession of first place.

In non-conference games, No. 11 Oklahoma beat No. 6 Pittsburgh, 86-83, and No. 16 Kansas dropped an 80-76 decision to Notre Dame.

Missouri, 11-4 overall and 1-2 in the Big Eight, gave an almost frightening display to the home crowd of what can happen when it plays up to its preseason Top 10 billing.

"I'm sure this is the best game they've played all year," said Cyclones Coach Johnny Orr, whose Notre Dame's Rivers shellshocks Jayhawks team caught the Tigers after they down on his team after the victory had dropped their first two league games. "This was a must game for them. Had they lost this one, they would have been dead. They really took it to us."

Tigers star Derrick Chievous sat out the first eight minutes of the game, but came in to lead all scorers with 30 points.

'Last year, they were Chievous, Chievous, Chievous. This year they have a lot more power and punch."

-Jeff Grayer

Doug Smith had 26 points. Byron Irvin scored 24 points, 22 in the first-half rout.

"They outplayed us - no excuses," said Cyclones forward Jeff Grayer. "Last year, they were Chievous, Chievous, Chievous. This year they have a lot more power and punch."

Grayer scored 23 points and Lafester Rhodes had 22 for the Cyclones, 16-3 overall and 2-1 in the Big Eight.

A second-half collapse had in Norman.

"I don't think we played a great game," said Tubbs as the Sooners went to 16-2. "We were average, or below average. But I give Pitt a lot of credit for that.

"It's a nice win, but it's nothing to write home about. At home, we aren't doing our job if we can't win by 20 points."

The Sooners led by as many as 17 in the second half before Pitt rallied. The Panthers closed to within 65-61 with about 12 minutes to go and by 72-70 with 5:51 left.

Oklahoma pulled away on a three-point play by Terrence Mullins, a pair of free throws and a basket by Harvey Grant and four free throws by Mookie Blaylock. Grant had 28 points to lead all scorers.

"The difference was our 24 turnovers to their nine," said Pitt Coach Paul Evans, whose team is 13-2. "In the second half, we played better, but we couldn't stop Grant. We had three different men on him, we played behind him and in front of him, and anytime they needed a bucket, they went to him and got Kansas couldn't get the ball to Oklahoma Coach Billy Tubbs Danny Manning and couldn't keep it out of the hands of David Rivers.

Rivers made both ends of three one-and-ones in the last 42 seconds and finished with 29 points. Manning had 22 points, but missed the first free throw of a one-and-one with 15 seconds left that would have given him a chance to tie the game.

"Danny only touched the ball once in the last 12 minutes, and that was on a lob break," said Coach Larry Brown as the Jayhawks fell to 12-5. "Our kids have to realize they've got to get it into the star's

"We talked about denying the ball to Rivers and getting the ball to Danny, but then our guard shoots a 22- or 18-footer after only one

'Future is now' for 'Skins' Beathard

General manager wins without top picks

By The Associated Press

SAN DIEGO - The day after The Trade, Bobby Beathard was asked what he would do if he had the half-dozen top draft choices the Los Angeles Rams obtained in the deal with Buffalo and Indianapolis that sent Eric Dickerson to the Colts.

"What would I do with them?" laughed the general manager of the Washington Redskins.

"I probably wouldn't have them very long.

Contrary to the NFL's conventional wisdom that good teams build through the draft, the Washington Redskins have had only three first-round draft picks in the last 18 years. Yet, they have been to the Super Bowl three times in the last six years. Their Super Bowl opponents, the Denver Broncos, are not afraid to wheel and deal although they have been much less extravagant with their top draft picks.

The Redskins have just six first-round picks on their roster — only three of whom were drafted by Washington, wide receiver Art Monk, cornerback Darrell Green and offensive tackle Mark May.

Quarterback Doug Williams, Tampa Bay's top pick in 1978, was signed as a free agent after the USFL folded; running back George Rogers was the first pick in the 1981 draft, taken by New Orleans and he cost Washington, naturally, its top pick in 1985.

Defensive tackle Dave Butz, St. Louis' first pick in 1974, was obtained in a typical George Allen deal for two No. 1s and a No. 2 when Allen was coach and general manager.

The Redskins are basically the creation of the 51-year-old Beathard, who quarterbacked

Cal Poly-San Luis Obispo to two 9-1 seasons

But he was cut by the Redskins in 1959, played five games with San Diego in 1960 and started his front office career in 1963 as a scout for the Kansas City Chiefs, for whom his younger brother Pete was a quarterback. From 1972 until 1978, he was director of personnel for the Miami Dolphins.

Then he took over a Washington teams left bereft of almost any draft choices by Allen, whose motto, "the future is now" left the future looking bleak.

But Beathard's philosophy isn't that different. He would just as soon stockpile lower picks or bid for a proven blue-chipper by surrendering high picks. Four years after he took over, Washington won the Super Bowl with 26 free agents and 11 players drafted below the fifth round.

More recently, he has done what Allen did trade away high picks.

He got Rogers for a No. 1, and he was in the bidding for both Dickerson and linebacker Cornelius Bennett, but, typically, he didn't have enough high draft choices to give up for

But no one cares as long as the Redskins win. And they do - they have had just one losing season - 6-10 in 1980 - and have been 84-33 since Beathard hired Joe Gibbs the next year.

"I just worry about coaching and let Bobby go out and get me players," Gibbs says. "I don't know where he gets them, but he never fails."

True enough.

Joe Jacoby, a fixture at left tackle this decade and a three-time Pro Bowler, was signed as a free agent out of Louisville.

The three starting linebackers are Mel Kaufman and Neal Olkewicz, both free agents, and Monte Coleman, an 11th-round

Barry Wilburn, who led the league in interceptions this season was an eighth-rounder in 1985; starting defensive tackle Darryl Grant a ninth-rounder in 1981, the same year Dexter Manley was taken on the fifth round.

Some seem to come out of the woodwork, like Clarence Vaughan, an eighth-round pick last year who suddenly appeared as a nickel back and blitzer in the NFC title game, and linebackers Ravin Caldwell and Kurt Gouveia, fifth and eighth round picks in 1986 who spent last season red-shirting on injured

Then there's Jay Schroeder, the quarterback who succeeded Joe Theismann and will likely succeed Williams.

He played only one college football game as a freshman at UCLA, then signed a baseball contract with Toronto. Schroeder was grabbed by Beathard on the third round in 1985, astounding even the draftniks who pride themselves on keeping tabs on the most obscure players. A year ago, in his first full season, he threw for 4,109 yards, the 10th best in NFL history.

Beathard also used the USFL well, as have most of the teams that have been successful recently. Washington's best acquisition was Gary Clark, the All-Pro wide receiver, who joined the Redskins in 1985 after being released by Jacksonville.

And when the USFL went under in 1986, Beathard jumped right in - signing Williams, running back Kelvin Bryant and some small, quick wide receivers, the best of whom is Ricky Sanders, who has come into his own while Monk's been hurt. In fact, of Washington's five receivers, all but Monk is a USFL

Beathard is not always perfect. In 1986, he traded his No. 1 choice in 1987 to San Francisco for a chance to move up in the second round and grab wide receiver Walter Murray. He couldn't sign Murray, so he traded him for a No. 2 to Indianapolis, where he has been a disappointment. He also used his first pick in 1985 (in the second round) on cornerback Tory Nixon, then dumped him off on San Francisco, where he has been a marginal player. But Beathard is willing to trade with anyone, including division rivals, giving up his

No. 1 pick in 1984 to the Giants for their No. 2 and an extra No. 5. Neither player taken with those picks amounted to anything. Denver, whose dealing is done by Coach Dan Reeves and General Manager John trades partly because they're willing to spend Three of their major cogs — quarterback John Elway, cornerback Mark Haynes and linebacker Rickey Hunley were obtained

Beake, is also willing to take chances on through trades. Elway came in 1983, the year he was the first pick in the draft by the Colts but refused to play for them. After sputtering in his first two seasons, he has carried the Broncos to two straight Super Bowls.

The Broncos got Hunley from the Bengals and Haynes from the Giants.

Hunley, a first-round pick, had refused to sign with Cincinnati. Haynes, a 1984 All-Pro, held out in 1985, signed reluctantly and was obtained a year ago.

AP names sprinter athlete of the year

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK - Sprinter Ben Johnson, acclaimed the "World's Fastest Human" after breaking the world record in the 100-meter dash last year when he went unbeaten in 21 races, was named The Associated Press Male Athlete of the Year on Sunday by an overwhelming margin.

Johnson became the first Canadian track athlete to win the honor and only the second Canadian in the award's 57-year history — the other was hockey player Wayne Gretzky in 1982. Johnson received 48 firstplace votes, 18 seconds, 28 thirds and 322 points in balloting by sports writers and broadcasters. Points were alloted on a 5-3-1 basis. Wide receiver Jerry Rice of the San Francisco 49ers, who set an NFL record with 22 touchdown receptions in only 12 games, finished second with 222 points on the basis of 22 firsts, 26 seconds and 34 thirds.

Chicago's Michael Jordan, the NBA's leading scorer this season, was third with 206 points, including 24 first-place votes, 22 seconds and 20 thirds.

Another NBA star, Magic Johnson of the Los Angeles Lakers, the league's most valuable player last season, and Bo Jackson, who played baseball with the Kansas City Royals and football with the Los Angeles Johnson was running at sea level.

Raiders in 1987, tied for fourth with 192 points each. Johnson collected 24 first-place votes and Jackson 20. Jordan, Johnson and heavyweight ninth with 170 points, tied for the second-most first-place votes with 24 apiece. Last year's Male Athlete of the Year, Larry Bird of the NBA's Boston Celtics, got only four first-place champion Mike Tyson, who finished votes this time and wound up in a 16th-place tie with 20 points. The Associated Press Female Athlete of the Year will be announced today. Both winners will be honored Feb. 26 by the Tampa Sports Club at a banquet in Florida.

The 26-year-old Johnson, a native of Jamaica, shattered the world record in the 100 by a remarkable one-tenth of a second last year, clocking 9.83 seconds in the final at the World Outdoor Championships Aug. 31 in Rome. Generally, when sprint records are broken, they are eclipsed by hundredths of seconds, not tenths.

But Johnson, in running the greatest 100-meter dash ever, erased the previous record of 9.93, set by Calvin Smith of the United States in 1983 at altitude in Colorado Springs, Colo.

Satellite monitors Konza Prairie ecosystem

By Greg Vogel Collegian Reporter

Every 16 days, an orbiting satellite 500 miles into space sweeps over the Manhattan area, sensing reflected radiation emitted from the surrounding prairie lands.

The satellite, called Landsat, has become the main tool in a study on the tallgrass prairie.

Using information from Landsat, two K-State faculty members are exploring how the satellite's remote sensing can be used to monitor different aspects of the Konza Prairie Research Area, a tallgrass prairie.

M. Duane Nellis, associate professor and head of the Department of Geography, is collaborating with John Briggs, research scientist in the Division of Biology and database manager for the Konza Long-Term Ecological Research Project, on the projects.

As part of the long-term project, the remote sensing portion of the study began about a year ago when Nellis was approached by the Division of Biology, coordinators of the project. The sensing studies are funded by a small portion of a fiveyear, $1.85 million grant through the funds all projects on the Konza.

"We are involved in acquiring and analyzing satellite digital data for assessing characteristics of biomass, an indication of plant productivity,' Nellis said.

used in the biomass studies to indicate how plant life is affected when an area of land is burned, grazed upon or when other factors are taken into account, Nellis said.

Besides studying plant life, the studies will also indicate how changes in plants' composition affect wildlife's habitat, he said.

The long-term objective provides for the evaluation of the usefulness of satellite remote sensing for the regular monitoring of the Konza tallgrass prairie ecosystem.

"We want to see how much remote sensing can be of use in assessing the impact of burning, grazing strategies and of natural environmental parameters such as soils, landforms and weather in the Konza," Nellis said.

The Landsat satellite uses a Multi-Spectral Scanner and a Thermatic Mapper to sense earth radiation. The scanner receives energy over four bands of reflected radiation and the National Science Foundation that mapper over seven bands of reflected and emitted radiation.

In addition to Landsat, SPOT, a French satellite using greater levels of resolution, will be used in the future to gather data.

"The satellites sense reflective Information from the sensors is responses and convert them into a certain intensity of electronic impulses that are telemetered back to a receiving station in the United States," Nellis said. "That data is archived and available for the public at large through the Eros Data Center in Sioux Falls, South Dakota."

After receiving the data from Eros, Nellis uses a microcomputer to process the data for the studies.

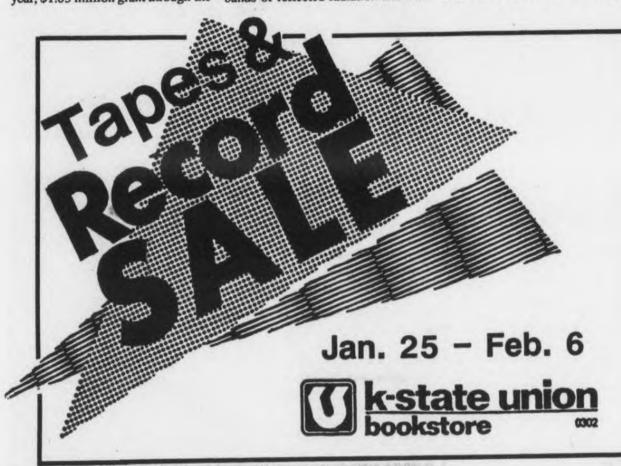

"With improvements in microcomputer-based systems, we are now able to do processing that five to six years ago could only have been done on a mainframe," Nellis

Nellis is not only focusing on the Konza, but is also doing a study on burning in the Flint Hills using Landsat data.

"Through a grant from the U.S. Department of Agriculture, we are studying the spatial amd temporal characterisitics of burning in the northern Flint Hills," he said.

Physician discusses safe sex

By Victoria Ohmacht Collegian Reporter

The fear of AIDS and other sexually transmitted diseases is prompting increased candor in relationships, a staff physician from Lafene Student Health Center said Friday.

Dr. Paula Davis spoke as part of the "Friday Noon: Focus on Women" program. Her speech was geared toward women age 18-25, but her comments applied to women in all stages of life.

Women who ask their prospective sexual partners if they have a sexually transmitted disease are facing up to one of today's major health concerns, Davis said.

"I don't think it's an insulting question - it's honest," she said. "Most women are aware of it, but right now 'safe sex' is a major issue. Not just for (the prevention of) AIDS, but also venereal diseases."

Davis discussed contraception as a means of preventing disease as well as unwanted pregnancies.

"Condoms dramatically decrease the chances of sexually transmitted diseases, and more than 50 percent of condoms are bought by women now," she said.

Other forms of contraception include rhythm or natural family planning, abstinence, the pill, dia-phragms and spermicides. Davis said ful appearance of the skin. antibiotics can decrease the effectiveness of birth control pills and women should consult their physicians before taking them.

In addition to discussing sexual issues, Davis spoke of the importance of "moderation in all things," including smoking, drinking, dieting and tanning.

"Skin cancer is the most frequent cancer and it is directly proportionate to sun exposure," she said.

Coping with stress is another major concern, she said.

"When you are under stress, your immune system is down and you are more likely to be susceptible to viral infections," Davis said.

She recommends an aerobic exercise three times a week for 20-30 minutes a day to reduce stress. The problem can also be minimized by taking frequent breaks and "talking to someone. Talk to professionals, talk to your friends," she said.

The program, however, is not just for freshmen. It is for any student having problems coping with college life.

The groups will consist of eight to 10 students, each with similar problems, and two co-leaders who will be members of the Counseling Center staff.

Fred Newton, director of the Counseling Center, said the group approach was decided upon because students seem to feel more at ease talking to their peers.

"The more people you have working on one idea, the more possible solutions you get to those problems," Newton said.

derailment

By The Associated Press

BEIJING, China - An express train derailed early Sunday in the mountains of southern China and 90 people were killed and 66 others seriously injured, the official Xinhua News Agency reported.

It was China's sixth major transportation accident in a month. A total of 314 people have been killed.

The No. 80 Kunming-Shanghai express derailed and overturned at 1:35 a.m. as it traveled between Qiewu and Dengjiacun stations, 220 miles from Kunming, capital of Yunnan province, Xinhua quoted the Ministry of Railways as saying.

The cause of the derailment was not known, Xinhua said.

The report did not say how many were on the train or in which direction the train was going. It was not immediately known whether any foreigners were among the dead or injured.

Acting Premier Li Peng ordered army and police to the scene to maintain order. Army units and local med-

During the 1987 fall semster, 8.3 percent of the 18,049 students enrolled at K-State were Kansas community college transfers, said Gunile DeVault, assistant registrar. In the 1987 spring semester, 9.5 percent of a total 18,120 students were transfers from state community colleges.

All of the information necessary for the computerized system already exists at each regents institution. The information is currently used to check the status of classes after a student has transferred to the university.

Man kills pleading officer Dallas crowd shouts 'shoot him'

By The Associated Press

DALLAS - A man seized a policeman's gun and fatally shot the officer in the face as he pleaded for his life as some spectators velled "Shoot him," authorities said.

Officer John Chase, 25, who last month switched from an evening to a day shift to spend more time with his bride of three months, was attacked Saturday as he was writing a traffic ticket.

The suspect, Carl Dudley Williams, 34, was shot by off-duty officers who responded to the call. The man died a few hours later at Parkland Memorial Hospital, police said.

A crowd of about 30 people gathered around the officer and his assailant, a homeless man with a history of mental illness, according to police and witnesses.

"The officer was saying, 'Don't shoot me. I'll help you whatever way traffic ticket to the driver of a vehicle I can.' But the guy shot him in the witness Melitha Johnson head,"

"One girl said that people in the crowd were saying, 'Shoot him, shoot him again,'" said police Lt. Jerald Calane.

Witnesses said the attacker then strolled down the street, dangling the gun from his hand.

Investigators said they knew of no motive for the shooting, but Chief Billy Prince and some of his officers blamed recent criticism of the department by some City Council members for creating a dangerous environment for police.

"This is very tough on the officer have told us," the father said. "This is on the street," Prince said at a news conference. "Constant bashing" of the department created a volatile situation, he said.

Chase was preparing to give a he had pulled over when Williams began arguing with him, police spokeswoman Vicki Hawkins said.

Williams didn't know the driver of the car but began fighting with the officer and grabbed his .44-caliber gun, Hawkins said.

"Several witnesses said people in the crowd were urging Williams to shoot him," she said.

Williams had a criminal record dating to 1978 with an arrest in August for assault on a police officer, authorities said.

His father, Carl L. Williams, said the family was in "deep shock." "All we know is what the police very unusual. It's not like him." He said his son was gentle but had history of mental problems. He declined to elaborate or to explain why Williams lived on the streets.

Chase, a 21/2 -year veteran of the police force, had received three commendations. Three months ago, he married his college sweetheart, Joanne Eaton.

Chase was the second Dallas officer killed in as many weeks. On Jan. 14, two burglary suspects shot James A. Joe, who was off duty at the time.

Monica Smith, president of the Dallas Police Association, said some City Council members' criticisms and lack of support in the wake of several shootings by police prompted many rank-and-file officers to hold the council indirectly responsible for the deaths.

Council member Diane Ragsdale, an outspoken critic of the department, said she didn't understand Smith's complaints.

"It's unfortunate," Ragsdale said. "Their comments tend to only heighten the conflict."

Anti-abortion march concludes in Union

By The Collegian Staff

The 15th anniversary Friday of the Supreme Court decision legalizing abortion was marked by a campus anti-abortion march and rally that concluded in the Union Courtyard Friday afternoon.

The anniversary of Roe vs. Wade, the 1973 U.S. Supreme Court decision legalizing abortion under certain conditions, also prompted demonstrations representing all sides of the abortion issue nationwide Friday.

"I would (march) alone if I had to," said Dan Walter, campus coordinator of the Great Commission Students and organizer of Friday's march. Although Great Commission Students sponsored the event, other groups were represented in the march.

"I am happy with any support we get," he said. "Friday's march serves as a reminder to everyone that (abortion) is still an important

About a dozen sign-carrying marchers made their way from the International Student Center across campus to the Union, where they held a rally from noon to 1 p.m.

The National Organization for Women also set up a table with literature and buttons promoting freedom of choice.

Marlene Howell, instructor in women's studies and a member of the Manhattan chapter of NOW, said the organization was present only to represent freedom of choice.

"We are not a pro-abortion group, we are pro-choice," How-

"The state should not have the power to tell someone not to have an abortion," she said. "We are here to demonstrate that there are many issues concerning abortion. It is not a black and white issue."

Reagan tries to avoid lame-duck image

President plans for full agenda Speech full of humor, optimism

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - President Reagan said Monday night in his final State of the Union message that the United States was "strong, prosperous, at peace," and he asked Congress to help make his last year in office "the best of eight."

"I don't buy the idea that this is the last year of anything," Reagan said.

The president said he has a full agenda for his final months in power: keeping the economy strong, maintaining peace, attacking social problems, particularly in education, and promoting the spread of democracy

Without specifying a figure, Reagan urged Congress to approve more aid for the Contra rebels in Nicaragua. He also called on the Senate to ratify the recently signed agreement with the Soviet Union to abolish intermediate-range nuclear weapons.

A senior administration official, briefing reporters at the White House on condition of anonymity, said the aid request would be "under $50 million," with about 10 percent of the figure earmarked for "lethal" military aid and the rest for non-lethal

Reversing course from last year,

Reagan called for increased spending for education and the war against

He claimed for his administration "an untold success story" - an increase in the number of young people who are willing to turn away from drugs. He praised his wife, Nancy, for that development: "She has helped so many of our young people to say 'no' to drugs. Nancy, much credit belongs to you, and I want to express to you your husband's pride and your country's thanks."

In a separate legislative message transmitted to Congress, he By Becky Howard Staff Writer

President Reagan's State of the Union address was viewed as a continuation of strong self-belief and masterful speaking ability by two K-State political science professors.

"It was vintage Ronald Reagan," said William Richter, professor of political science. "It was a masterful presentation. I think it's astounding how he presents his interpretations of things like freedom and the family."

Richter said he was struck by the comments that Senator Robert Byrd ■ See ADDRESS, Page 10 | made during the Democratic response following the address.

"Senator Byrd made the comment said. that the 'feel good' slogans of the Reagan administration have gone flat over the past years," Richter said. "I'm not so sure they have. Maybe if you are looking at the facts that's true. Yet Reagan still speaks with such a convincing quality. There is overwhelming evidence of his belief in what he is saying."

Merlin Gustafson, associate professor of political science, agreed that Reagan still holds a remarkable belief in himself and his administration.

"He still has the same conservative ideology he had in 1980," Gustafson

"He still retains his Irish humor and his skill at speaking. I thought the speech was remarkable for a 77-yearold man. He looked younger than George Bush."

Throughout Reagan's speech he stressed the message that with only a year left in office, his work is far from over. Richter said this is an effort by the President to avoid the stigma of being a lame duck.

"Especially since his being termed a lame duck after the Iran-Contra affair, Reagan is working to avoid

Hypermart USA aiming to please

Waltons celebrate opening

By Alison Neely

TOPEKA - Cheers filled the air Monday as Sam Walton, thought to be the wealthiest man in the United States, kicked off a new shopping era at the grand opening of Hypermart

The 222,000-square-foot facility represents a new generation in shopping. Billed as a one-stop shop, the store hosts a combination of top quality, name-brand products at low retail prices for both food and general merchandise.

Walton, a lively, gray-haired 69-year-old, is confident of the store's success.

"I'm absolutely positive this morning it will be a success," he said. "I'm very confident about this operation and I'm betting it'll work." The store is only the second in the United States, joining one in Garland, Texas. Both Hypermarts operate on the same concept, said David Glass, president of Wal-Mart Stores Inc. The store is designed to do enormous volumes of business based on four To be a success, a Hypermart must "use highly identifiable name brands, provide satisfactory customer service, generate volume and have low prices," Glass said.

The main point is having high quality, especially for perishable food items. The dry food goods are the same as in a regular Wal-Mart, he added.

Hypermart offers a variety of food services, including a delicatessen, an on-site bread factory and a seafood shop. In addition, five fast food restaurants are located there.

Other services include a hair salon, bank, portrait studio, shoe repair shop, movie rental store, health food store, eye glass store and gift shop, as well as 35 general merchandise departments. A play area is provided for customers' children.

Mexican blast kills at least 10

By The Associated Press

MONCLOVA, Mexico - An explosion trapped more than 125 men in a blazing coal mine in northern Mexico on Monday and at least 10 died, authorities said.

The Coahila fire department, which was organizing the rescue operation, said 10 people died, 109 were rescued and 19 were still in the mine at 10 p.m., 151/2 hours after the explosion.

But a spokeswoman for Compania Hulera Mexicana, which owns the mine, said late Monday that 19 men were killed, 79 were rescued and eight were missing.

The fire department said 15 of those saved were injured, seven of them suffering from serious burns. The government-owned mining company said 22 were injured.

There were few details of the explosion that occurred at 8:30 a.m., about 11/2 hours after the morning shift began.

The Hulera Mexicana spokeswoman, Maria Teresa Mendoza, said an electrical short circuit caused the blast at the mine, called Cuatro y Medio (Four-and-a-Half). It is two miles, or 41/2 kilometers, from La Esperanza in Coahila state, 70 miles southwest of Eagle Pass, Texas.

She said the fire was extinguished in the early evening.

Americo Jevenal Soto Rodriguez, police chief in the town of Esperanzas nearby, had said earlier there were about 160 men trapped undergound.

But in a telephone interview from the city of Monclova, Fire Brigade Lt. Martin Flores said rescue workers were able to reach personnel records and determined 138 men were there.

Flores, who had the Coahila fire reports, said 109 workers were able to reach personnel records and determined 138 men were there.

Flores, who had the Coahila fire reports, said 109 workers were rescued. The statements said one charred body was recovered in the early afternoon and four people with burns died shortly after being pulled from the mine.

Gunmen kidnap Colombian man, kill bodyguards

By The Associated Press

BOGOTA, Colombia — Gunmen ambushed and kidnapped the country's chief prosecutor on Monday, killing his two bodyguards and apparently wounding him.

The government blamed the abduction on the Medellin Cartel, which U.S. officials say controls 80 percent of the cocaine entering the United States.

About four hours after the abduction of Prosecutor General Carlos Mauro Hoyos, police searching the hills around Medellin for him stumbled on and freed a Bogota mayoral candidate whom traffickers had kidnapped a week ago.

Hoyos, 45, was seized about 7:20 a.m., while nearing the Medellin airport for a flight to the capital about 200 miles to the southeast. At least a half-dozen men in three jeeps and a car ran his Mercedes-Benz into a curb and sprayed it with submachine gun fire, witnesses said.

"total war" on officials who try to extradite them to the United States to face criminal charges.

In the past four years, cartel members have waged a bloody war against efforts to prosecute them. Murder victims have included journalists, a justice minister and 21 judges handling drug cases.

Hoyos, who investigates wrongdoing in the government and judiciary, had just spent a week in Medellin investigating last month's release from prison of reputed cocaine baron Jorge Luis Ochoa Vasquez.

The United States has been trying to extradite Ochoa, who it says is second-in-command of the Medellin

JERUSALEM - Israel's coalition government was split Monday over an Egyptian peace proposal that includes suspending Palestinian riots and a moratorium on Jewish settlement in the occupied territories.

Reporters saw soldiers use sledgehammers and crowbars to open shops in Gaza City and the West Bank to try to end a lingering strike of Arab merchants. Four Palestinian activists from Gaza facing deportation dropped their appeals to Israel's Supreme Court on Monday.

"They feel they will not obtain justice from an Israeli court," said Fayez Abu Rahme, a Gaza lawyer. "They said international public opinion has already decided that deportation is illegal and we'd hate to see it legalized in court."

Four Palestinians from the West Bank were expelled to Lebanon on Jan. 13. A fifth West Bank Palestinian dropped his appeal earlier this month.

American Jewish leaders condemned the beating of rioters. The current policy of force and beatings as it has been implemented on the ground is regarded by us as inhumane and simply unacceptable," Theodore Mann, president of the American Jewish Congress, told reporters after meeting with Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin in Tel Aviv.

CIA documents Soviet cheating

WASHINGTON - Secretary of State George P. Shultz assured conservative critics Monday the United States will respond vigorously if the Soviet Union violates the new arms reduction treaty in Europe, but Sen. Jesse Helms declared the Soviet Union already is exploiting an "engraved invitation to cheat."

As Shultz led off the administration's campaign for Senate ratification of the treaty, Helms, R-N.C., waving a document marked "TOP SECRET" in bright red, contended he had obtained classified information proving the Soviets already have violated the pact which calls for the elimination of mediumand shorter-range nuclear missiles.

Helms, an outspoken conservative, told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee he had received confirmation of the document's authenticity - its contents still undisclosed - from CIA Director William Webster.

Shultz declined to discuss or even look at the document on grounds he was surrounded by photographers and television cameramen.

Crowd supports Dallas police

DALLAS - Hundreds of people rallied to support the beleaguered Police Department on Monday as authorities said they would try to prosecute bystanders who yelled "Shoot him, shoot him" before a vagrant killed a police officer.

"It's good to see this support in the community for a change. Most of the time we only see the negative side," said officer Thomas Cicio, observing the crowd of about 400 who marched from the John F. Kennedy Memorial to City Hall and

Some carried signs reading "God Bless Our Men and Women in Blue" and "Police Are People, Too."

The shooting of the white officer by the black vagrant Saturday has heightened a growing tension between the mostly white department and the city's minority community, whose leaders have criticized the department for several police shootings of

Meanwhile, police Capt. John Holt said officers were trying to identify the two to 10 onlookers who, according to witnesses, yelled "Shoot him, shoot him," encouraging the vagrant to shoot officer John Chase after he took Chase's revolver. If any are identified, murder charges could be brought against them,

"We're going to have to delve into that further," he said. "Just because we can identify someone doesn't mean we can come up with a name and a picture."

Bush defends Iran arms role

Vice President George Bush, in a combative interview broadcast live on the CBS Evening News, dismissed questions about his role in the Iran-Contra affair and repeated his statement that he voiced private concerns about the sale of arms to Iran.

"You know what I'm hiding? What I told the president that's the only thing," Bush said.

Bush responded angrily to questioning on the affair by anchor Dan Rather, saying, "I have respect for you but I don't have respect for what you're doing here tonight."

"Everybody's admitted mistakes. I've admitted mistakes and you want to dwell on them," Bush said. Earlier Monday, Bush pressed for more aid to the Nicaraguan Contras on Monday while Paul Simon said the lack of a "celebrity star" has kept the Democratic race muddied.

Dole worried about verification

WASHINGTON - Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., said Monday that concerns about verification and conventional military forces must be addressed by the Senate as it considers a U.S.-Soviet arms control treaty.

Dole, who is seeking the Republican presidential nomination, delivered his remarks as the Senate Foreign Relations Committee opened hearings on the unratified treaty to eliminate intermediate-range nuclear missiles.

Dole told the committee in prepared remarks that the INF agreement represents a "milestone achievement" but said "it is only the first step on a long and uncertain road."

The Kansas Republican, who has endorsed the treaty and vowed to help Reagan secure its ratification, said he will press for "constructive additions" to strengthen the accord "in ways that will not require renegotiation with the Soviet Union." His first area of concern was verification.

Arizona governor to face recall election or resign

By The Associated Press

PHOENIX - Gov. Evan Mecham will have to face a recall election or resign after the secretary of state announced Monday that his opponents had collected more than enough signatures to force such a vote.

Mecham, who also faces legislative impeachment hearings and criminal charges in connection with a campaign loan, repeated his assertion that he will not resign, a spokesman said.

Rose Mofford, the Democratic secretary of state who would replace the Republican governor if he resigns or is removed from office, said 301,032 signatures were verified. The Mecham Recall Committee needed 216,746 valid signatures to

The governor also faces a March 9 three-way race. criminal trial on six felony counts connected with his alleged concealment of the $350,000 campaign loan he received from a developer. Mofford said through a spokesman that she plans to notify Mecham today that he has five days to resign, according to state law. If he does not, she is expected to schedule a recall vote by next Monday, probably for May 17, when a number of local elections are planned.

Recall Committee founder Ed Buck said he would be "pleasantly surprised" if Mecham resigned, but gubernatorial spokesman Ken Smith said the governor will not.

"Never, not during this term," said Smith, who added the governor believes he would win a recall vote.

When the recall petition campaign kicked off last July, Mecham questioned whether "a few homosexuals and dissident Democrats" could raise enough signatures.

Mecham, 63, has only one announced recall election opponent, Democrat Carolyn Warner, who lost to Mecham in November 1986 in a draining experience at K-State, I hardly ever get to bed before 4 a.m. I start my nights around 11 p.m. and watch television until I can't stand it anymore. It is a wonderful way to escape. And, usually, no one bothers me.

From midnight on, I have the house to myself. And I love it. The next morning, everyone in my family knows not to bother me; I'll be sleeping until noon or later. For me, the beauty of vacationing at home is that I don't have to see anyone. As long as my hours are the exact opposite of everyone else's, I'm in a solitary state of bliss.

However, it cannot be said that my family and I don't get along just because we don't like to be around one another. Make no mistake, my family loves and misses me, and I love and miss them. But like any good, loving family, we love each other the most when we're not bothered by each other.

Only occasionally do problems arise within the normal operation of the Kippes family. And these can be a real pain when I'm trying taken the trouble to drive all the way home, skip two or three days of classes, put aside all my schoolwork and ignore all my other miscellaneous responsibilities, I hate it when someone has the audacity to interfere in my private relaxation that I prize so much. It's selfish and inconsiderate to expect anything from me when I'm home for a visit. But someone always does.

As I mentioned earlier, I have established a set routine on my vacations. I eat, I watch movies, I sleep late. This is my routine, this is what I look forward to. And I absolutely hate it when my plan is interrupted.

Most often the routine is broken by a family member whose conception of my routine is not consistent with reality. For example, my younger brother often thinks I am willing to share the video cassette recorder, the television, the family room, my food, my chair, my remote control, my time. I most certainly am

College is different from high school, I tell him. I work hard, and I cannot stand people bothering me when I decide to take a wellearned break from the grind. I explain to him that all he has to do is spend eight monotonous hours a day in school, sitting and listening to people who repeat the same lecture seven or eight times in one day. I am actively pursuing my education by reading, studying, thinking; it's a grueling life I lead. When I come home, it's because I need a vacation -ALONE. I explain to my brother that he to make the most of my weekend. When I've needs no such time off. High school is a vacation.

> But the sibling pest is not the only intruder during my vacations at home. More often than not, it's Mom who tries to share some of my quality time with me. She's a challenge because she's more sensitive and less malleable than my little brother. But my college education has afforded me real subtlety and finesse, and I love to use it on her.

> Few things make me angrier than when Mom comes down to the family room, informs me that Dad is snoring, asks to use the hide-away bed - and asks me to give up the television. It takes a lot of nerve to ask me to give up the TV so that she can get a few hours of sleep before going to work in the morning. And I tell her that. How much of a vacation can a person have when he's got to

> And, finally, that is what most makes me want to return to college. I can come back to school, and all my stuff is waiting for me. Untouched, unshared. It's all mine. Aside from a few commitments, I can do what I want to do, go where I want to go. I'm free. If anyone tells me I'm awful, selfish and that I shouldn't have been born, I can tell that person my perception of him. I don't have to say, "Come on, Mom, you don't mean it." College is freedom, and the interstate highway from K-State to home is not the umbilical cord I once feared it would be. Instead, it's a partition that I can cross whenever I want.

Gov. Mike Hayden has pledged will cost $4,825 in 1988. $37 million to increase faculty salaries. But that is not enough of an attraction to keep existing faculty here or interest potential faculty.

What is necessary is a good research library - which is what K-State is losing.

Our library is being forced to cancel $300,000 of subscriptions to foreign publications. The reason for these cancellations is the devaluation of the dollar against foreign currency.

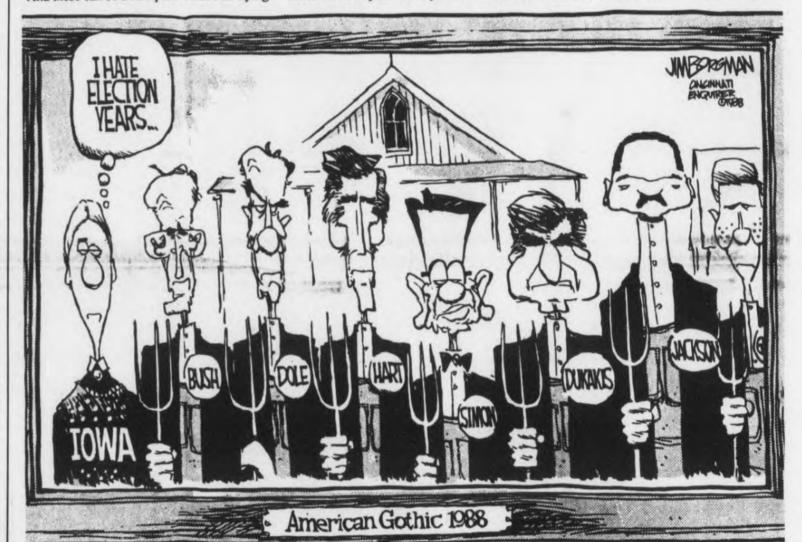

Last year, the library was able to maintain the subscriptions by shifting money earmarked for book purchases to the purchase of the subscriptions, which meant canceling 3,000 book orders. This year, howcosts have risen too much. One subscription for a research magazine that cost the library $3,826 last year

What is most agonizing about this situation is that research at K-State will be hurt. The journals that will be lost are necessary for research and are used by faculty and graduate students. The faculty at K-State may be tempted to leave because of the lack of research materials.

K-State could also lose many students because of the library. In many cases, graduate students base their decision to attend a university on the quality of that institution's research

The forthcoming salary increases are necessary and long overdue. But in looking at the Margin of Excellence plan, salaries are not the only ever, that will not be possible. The thing that needs support. Libraries must also be maintained and upgraded, or the money going into the MOE plan will be wasted.

King wanted equality, not holiday

Every step toward the goal of justice requires sacrifice, suffering and struggle; the tireless exertions and passionate concern of dedicated individuals. Without persistent effort, time itself becomes an ally of the insurgent and primitive forces of irrational emotionalism and social destruction. This is no time for apathy or complacency. This is a time for vigorous and positive action. -Martin Luther King Jr.

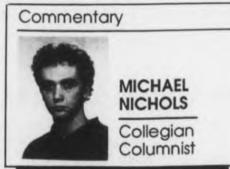

Consider the following fairy tale.

Once upon a time, in a very harsh and cruel land, there existed an inspired leader of divine caliber. A champion of the poor and unfortunate millions stigmatized by the color of their skin, this great man instantly received the support of every good Christian. However, when the great oracle was on the verge of witnessing the fruition of his labors, he was tragically murdered. But, in honor of his great service to mankind, fellow countrymen celebrate the date of his birth as a symbol of the continuing mass struggle for racial equality.

Now take a look at reality. In the 1950s, a black Baptist minister began the apparently blasphemous practice of using religion to denounce racism and poverty in the United States. Belittled by millions, he nevertheless struggled to bring attention to racial and social inequalities in an apathetic society.

His popularity was slow in coming, but after hard work and perseverance he was recognized as a leader by a small number of Americans. He was challenged every step of the way and continually lost frustrated followers who became impatient with his nonviolent tactics. On April 4, 1968, King was assassinated by a white bigot named James

Which of the above contradictions is most absurd when our society attempts to relate the King myth? Could it be that people today speak in awe of someone without really knowing why? Or could it be they believe the silly delusion that King was a godlike hero who captivated the undying devotion of all Americans?

Perhaps even more ludicrous (as was pointed out by one of my professors) is the fact that practically every politician today venerates King, regardless of how blatantly many of them perpetuate many of the things he struggled to abolish. Can anyone honestly picture Ronald Reagan marching through a ghetto, chanting reactionary slogans with King on one arm and a young activist on the

The energetic young preacher who always praised the virtues of kindness and humility would doubtless be disgusted at the glory he now receives from most Americans, in light of the racism and inequality that still exists. He would be even more disappointed to see so many people so readily praise his ideals yet fail to recognize that his work was only the beginning and much more is needed.

According to sociologist William Julius Wilson in his book "The Truly Disadvantaged: the Inner City, the Underclass and Public Policy," one-third of the black population of the United States remains firmly stuck below the poverty line. What about the fact that nearly one-half of all black children today are born into poverty, as reported by the Children's Defense Fund in Washington,

How much has America changed since the highlight of the civil rights movement in the 1960s? Presidents came and went, but the above statistics lead one to believe that little has been done to bring about the social and racial equality King had in mind. Take a look at the presidential candidates for the November elections, and what do you see? Only a black politician has seen fit to include equal rights in his platform — or so it seems.

Procrastination, a wise man once said, is the thief of time. King was equally correct in saying, "We are faced with the fact that tomorrow is today. We are confronted with the fierce urgency of now. In this unfolding conundrum of life and history, there is such a thing as being too late."

Who - except for a handful of people stereotyped as "bleeding-heart liberals" - pays heed to the above quote? Why are civil rights activists predominantly black? Must we wait for the discrediting of Reaganomics for there to be an increase of social consciousness?

The year of 1987 began with black protests against the racially-motivated murder of Michael Griffith in Howard Beach, N.Y. In late December, a 15-year-old black girl was gang-raped in New York by several white men who scrawled "KKK" and "nigger" on her body, according to the Jan. 26 issue of In These Times.

Is this a society that merely celebrates King's birthday every year, content to believe that he eradicated racism in the United States? I have a feeling that King would be just as disappointed today with the average moderate white individual, if not more so, than when he wrote that famous "Letter from a Birmingham Jail."

"I have almost reached the regrettable conclusion that the Negro's great stumbling block is not the White Citizen's Counciler or the Ku Klux Klanner, but the white moderate who is more devoted to 'order' than to justice..."

Census to reapportion legislative districts

From Staff and Wire Reports

The state of Kansas is mobilizing for the head-counting ritual - also known as the census — that is required by law to be celebrated every 10 years.

More than 1 million cards requesting information for the 1988 Kansas Census were mailed out at the beginning of this month, addressed to "Kansas Resident."

the one-time census that will be offices and from a pool of referers, about 1,200 are to be canvassused for reapportionment of state legislative districts.

An army of approximately 1,400 temporary workers have been or will be hired to collect and process the mass of information required for the census said Brad Bryant, administrative coordinator for the Division of Census in the Secretary of State's office.

Bryant said the workers were hired from people drawn from state ences gathered from labor unions, services clubs such as the Kiwanis and Lion's Club, county commisioners, city councils, clerks and other resources to work in the five regional offices.

The five regional offices are stationed basically one in each legislative district, with offices in Hays, Topeka, Olathe, Wichita and

"The Legislature appropriated $3.36 million to conduct the census," Bryant said. "We hope we can do it for less than that. We would like to return some of that money back to the state's treasury."

Kansas television stations are airing a 30-second commercial this month about the census cards, that all information will be kept emphasizing that filling out the cards and mailing them back to the Secretary of State's office is more convenient than waiting for a visit by a canvasser.

Secretary of State Bill Graves said radio and TV advertising will cost $65,000.

Census cards require accuracy of student count

By Susan L'Ecuyer Agri/Business Editor

The state of Kansas is conducting a one-time state census this month, and state law provides that students should be counted where they lived in Kansas prior to attending college.

Kristi Schroeder, public relations director for the division of census' central office in Topeka, stressed the importance of an accurate census count where students are concerned.

"Unless they have abandoned their parents' homes - that is, if they still count their permanent residence as their parents' - students should be counted on their parents' cards," she said.

"At this point most of them should have received their cards," Schroeder said. "If they haven't received a card, they should contact the toll free number and the information will be taken over the telephone by our workers here (in Topeka).'

The toll-free number is 1-800-346-0097.

Students have frequently been ounted twice in a census. If students receive the state census card and wish to state they have established a new permanent residence at their college addresses, they should fill it out and mail it back as soon as possible, making certain that all the information is current and accurate so that students are counted in the proper place.

If a student claims a new permanent residence, but is also claimed as a resident by his or her parents, the college address will be considered the student's actual residence.

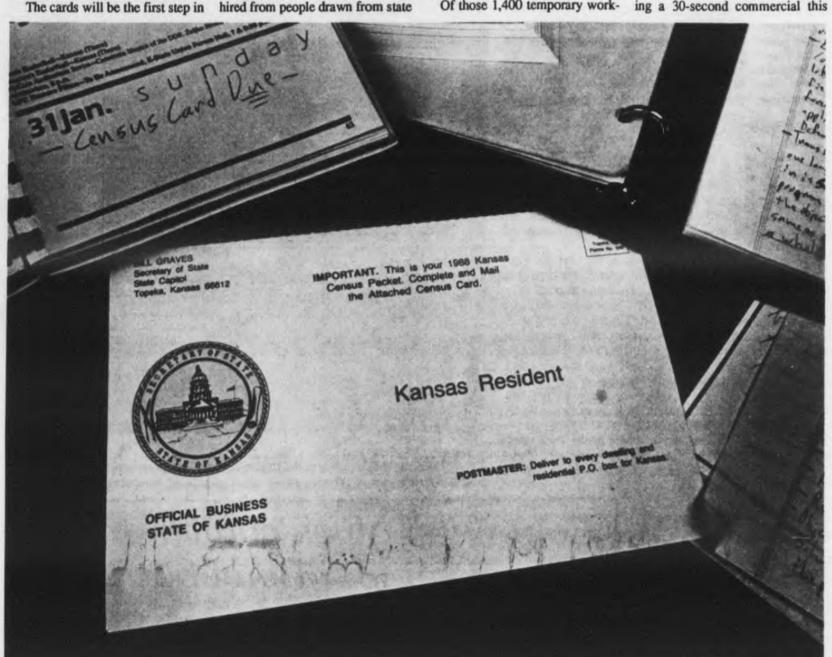

"The sooner they return them, the better off they are," she said.

The cards will ask for the names of all people in a household, each person's birthdate and sex. They will also ask whether the person is a current college student, a U.S. citizen and a permanent resident of People who do not return the postage-paid cards will be contacted by a door-to-door canvasser in February.

The population statistics gathered by the division of census must be certified to the Legislature by Nov. 1. The Legislature will then use the numbers to redraw state House and Senate districts.

According to state officials, most of the data collection will be pleted by the middle of March. After that, census workers will finetune the numbers to ensure that everyone has been counted once.

Airport manager resigns, returns to old employer

By Chris Wilhelm

Collegian Reporter

For the second time in three and one-half months, the City of Manhattan is once again looking for a manager for the Manhattan Municipal Airport.

William Fogerson, who took the position Oct. 5, resigned the post to return to his previous employer, Capitol Air Lines.

"The reason Bill gave us for his resignation was he wanted to pursue some other opportunities with Capitol Air Lines," said Mike Conduff, Manhattan city manager. "We were very satisfied with Mr. Fogerson's work, and as far as I'm aware, his decision had nothing to do with being dissatisfied with us.'

Fogerson, who took the airport job following the resignation of Jim Thomas, was the general manager and director of operations for Capitol Air

"It was hard trying to adjust to governmental work after being in the private sector for over 30 years," Fogerson said. "That was my problem, not the city's. But I had an opportunity to see some things through which I had previously started at Capitol Air Lines and decided that it would be in my best interests to take it.

"There were some significant changes happening at Capitol Air Lines that I had started," he said. "I didn't think that they would be able to be carried out, but due to some other changes they are being implemented."

Conduff said Fogerson is still employed by the city on a part-time basis and will continue to be until a replacement can be found.

The improvements being made at the airport are making the hiring of a Fogerson cited personal reasons replacement a little different than with his job at Capitol Air Lines.

"Because of the accelerated improvements out at the airport, we are handling the filling of this position differently. We are going through a slow process as opposed to rushing out and filling it right away,'

As far as the airport improvements are concerned, Fogerson said he is still pressing forward for the city until a replacement can be hired.

"I am still doing everything I can do to pursue all of the growth factors at the airport," Fogerson said. "I am somewhat apologetic to the city, so I am going to do everything possible to make sure that these projects are pushed forward until the city can hire full-time person who can actively and aggressively pursue them."

However, Fogerson added that he would limit handling anything for the city that would present a conflict

Students able to purchase Wildcat charge cards again

By Jeff Schrag Collegian Reporter

If the purpose of college is to prepare students for life in the future, then the K-State Alumni Association has a way to prepare students for future life in a "plastic" society.

Through the Affinity Card program of the First National Bank of Wichita, the Alumni Association is again marketing purple Wildcat VISA cards and Wildcat Master-Cards to students, said Amy Button Renz, director of membership for the Alumni Association.

The Affinity Card program was started by the First National Bank several years ago as an innovative program to provide universities with a way to generate revenue and to provide a service for alumni and students, Button Renz said.

"In our first promotion - through November — we generated 94 student accounts. And the bank anticipates that after all the ones are approved that they have in-house now, we should have close to 150 approved accounts," she said.

Approximately 150 to 200 applications were distributed in the Union last week during the spring membership drive. These applications will continue to be available throughout the year at Alumni Association offices in Hollis House, said Kathy Peirce, senior in psychology and cochairperson of Student Alumni Board's Bank Card committee.

The board is in charge of coordinating the student application process. They plan to distribute applications at the beginning of each semester, both at tables in the Union and at organized living groups, said Jada Allerheiligen, senior in journalism and mass communications and cochairperson of the Bank Card committee.

Beyond providing a service and generating revenue, the Alumni Association began the promotion last fall as part of a membership drive.

Any creditworthy K-State students or alumni are eligible for membership, but association members qualify for a discounted annual fee and a lower monthly interest rate. An estimated 2,500 alumni joined the Alumni Association to obtain the special rates. Currently, 7,500 K-State alumni have a Wildcat credit Graduating seniors automatically qualify for discounted rates during the first year after graduation. The association is hoping this will lead many of these new alumni to join the Alumni Association to continue qualifying for the special rates, Button Renz said.

Another objective is to provide students with the chance to obtain their first credit card. Secondsemester juniors, seniors and graduate students are able to apply for the card without a guarantor (someone who guarantees the student's credit usually a parent or guardian).

Forecasting uncertain due to market's volatility

Although economic forecasting stock market will cause many indivihas never been an exact science, the market's sharp drop on Oct. 19 and its continued volatility has made the art of forecasting the ecomomic future more uncertain than ever. Here's a preview of what the research department of a major member firm of the New York Stock Exchange believes lies in store for

The Economy

Experts predict the economy's real growth will remain near 1.5 percent. While consumer spending accounts for about two-thirds of the total economy, or Gross National Product, growth in this area should remain slow but steady. The decline in the duals to increase their savings ratio from around 3 percent disposable income to 4 percent or more. Consumer fear may also have a negative effect on the purchase of durable goods, such as automobiles and

On a more positive note, increased exports, a result of a 41 percent drop in the value of the dollar since February, should help boost economic growth in the upcoming months and lessen the trade deficit. More positive economic news includes increased ouput from the manufacturing sector due to increased demand for exports.

Inflation should hold steady, around 4 percent or 4.5 percent, as economic growth slows and energy prices decline. Additional factors attributing to the control of inflation includes moderately rising wages and manufacturing capabilities remaining at a manageable level. Investing 1987 was a year of records for the stock market as it experienced the four largest point gains and the four largest point losses in the history of the Dow Jones Industrial Average and all in the span of just six weeks. Despite this volatility, the market remains above its 1987 starting point compared to 1986.

While experts believe the market will continue to be volatile, they are not predicting a 1700 recession nor do they foresee any major downside risks for the stock market.

Following are some observations and recommendations from the firm's research department:

Although down 27 percent

Earnings per share for the overall market will increase about 6 percent in 1988 after a strong earnings year in 1987.

Solidly financed companies in interest sensitive areas, such as utilities and banks, and companies like to grow in spite of the tough economic times are wise choices.

Interest Rates

While interest rates will remain volatile, they should gradually lower throughout the year for several reapersonal savings, controlled inflation, and the probability that the Federal Reserve will opt for lower interest rates to encourage contnued economic growth.

While no one can predict the future with complete accuracy, 1988 promises to be a year of continued, but slow, growth. The best investment hedge for this slow economic period is to invest in financially strong companies in interest sensitive areas and in companies not strongly affected by economic downturns, keeping in mind of course, any investment in the stock market should be approached carefully.

Harrison sets aim on Olympic games

By The Collegian Staff

When K-State's track team competed in the Missouri Invitational last weekend, it was missing one of its finest athletes.

Triple jumper Kenny Harrison, six-time All-American, was competing in the Sunkist Invitational in Los Angeles, Calif., which, along with the Millrose Games in New York and the Los Angeles Times Invitational, is one of the top three meets in the country.

What is of even greater importance about the meet is the fact it is a warm-up for the Olympic trials, held in July. Harrison responded to test by winning the triple jump with a leap of 55 feet, 71/4 inches.

Harrison's winning jump was his best indoor by more than five inches. And in winning, he beat some of the top triple jumpers in the nation.

"I will get to compete against some of the guys two or three more times," he said.

Harrison is K-State's best shot for a representative in the Summer Olympics in Scoul, Korca. He said he is considered one of the top four triple jumpers in the country, along with Mike Connolly, world record holder in the triple jump, Charlie Simpkins, former world record holder in the triple jump and Al Joyner, gold medalist in the triple jump in the 1984 Olympics.

For a native of Brookfield, Wis., this is pretty select company. Harrison is in his fifth year at K-State. While attending the University, he has won numerous individual and NCAA titles and holds K-State records in both events.

In high school, Harrison was an All-American and was pursued by over 150 universities, including the University of Texas, the University of Wisconsin and almost all the colleges in California, he said.

But he chose to come to K-State because of the coaches - Steve Miller was at the helm then - and because it was "close to home."

Harrison said he has regretted his decision to come here a few times, primarily because of the lack of recognition the team gets, as well as a sometimes-inflexible training schedule

"It's kind of hard sometimes," he said. "Our team doesn't get very much recognition, we have to wait to practice until basketball practice is over ... sometimes I wonder if I would be better off if I was able to train separately and regularly."

Although Harrison's main goal is to be one of three triple jumpers on the Olympic team, he is also concerned about K-State.

"I thought I'd never have a chance to make the Olympic team. I'm happy to be in a situation now where I know I have that chance."

-Kenny Harrison

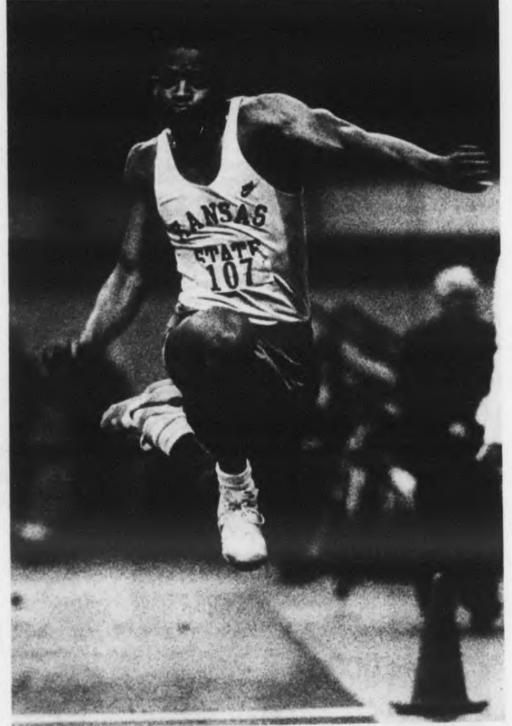

"When we get to a Big Eight Conference meet, I'll do everything I can for us to win a championship," he said. "But I think my teammates and Coach (Capriotti) understand me going to other meets.'

Harrison competed in the Olympic trials four years ago, so he knows what he will be up against when July rolls around.

Four years ago, I went to the trials as a freshman," he said. "I was so young. Then, I thought I'd never have a chance to make the Olympic team. I'm happy to be in a situation now where I know I have that chance."

Harrison will graduate in May with a degree in journalism and mass communications. After this, he will continue to train for the trials - and the 1992 Olympics.

"Everyone I compete against now is so much older than me ... in their late 20s and early 30s," he said. "I'll be so much stronger

McCoy adjusts to role

By Bill Lang Sports Writer

He may not be the leader of the team and he hasn't scored the most points. He's not even the best defensive player, but nevertheless, K-State basketball player Fred McCoy has become a winner to most Wildcat McCoy, a 6-foot-7, 230-pound forward/center for the 'Cats, came to the team from Allen County Community College with high credentials. He was named by several scouting services as one of the top 20 players in the junior college ranks, and Street and Smith magazine even listed him as one of the top 10 junior college transfers to watch.

But despite all his accolades, McCoy has found the transition to Division I basketball a lot tougher than he expected.

"It wasn't casy at first," McCoy said. "In major college basketball, everything you learn in the juco ranks is nothing in comparison."

McCoy said his popularity with the fans has not gone to his head or even affected his role as a team player.

"I'm not that important," he said. "Right now, I'm just a rebounder.

"Mitch (Richmond) is so hot right now that I'm not needed to do that much scoring," McCoy said. "I just need to get in the middle, get the defensive rebounds and kick them out, and grab some offensive rebounds and put them back in the

Don't tell that to K-State coach Lon Kruger, though.

In McCoy's last six games, he has averaged 13 points and nine rebounds per contest, but he still sees room for improvement in his defensive game.

"I know that my biggest weakness is my defense," he said. "I'm working on that every day in practice and it's getting better. Coach Kruger and Coach (Dana) Altman keep working with me and it's getting better." Familiarity brought McCoy's

Columnist gives challenges to avoid Super Bowl burnout

It was Monday morning. My ears felt like they were bleeding probably the worst headache of my life. I looked in the mirror and my eyes were filled with more red than a road map. My hair had a classic "pillow perm" and my body felt as if I had gone one-on-one with a Kenworth.

It obviously wasn't PMS, it wasn't a chronic case of the "3.2 flu," and this isn't the start of a cheap detective novel bought at the supermarket. Yes, it was a hangover of sorts; it was the first Sunday since the players' strike that there hadn't been a National Football League game. I was showing signs of terminal withdrawl.

With Super Bowl XXII being less than a week away, there's a 50-50 chance of survival. But sometimes all the pregame hype surrounding the annual confrontation for the Vince Lombardi Trophy makes the game lose some of its luster.

dog's dinky derierre who wins? To avoid burnout, try some of these challenges to pass the time before Super Sunday:

Try to determine how many times former Oakland Raiders' coach and CBS football announcer John Madden could say "boom" or "whap" while standing in a halftime restroom line at Ahearn Field House.

■ Watch videotapes of University of Indiana basketball games, read Coach Bobby Knight's lips and decide who is more vulgar -Knight or K-State's student section at basketball games. Viewers may wish to consider whether this program should be viewed by children

Determine the number of bites in a bag of pretzels or the number of drinks in a case of your favorite football-viewing beverage. Serious New Year's resolutions involving weight loss shouldn't be considered until after Super Sunday anyway.

Begin tutoring a men's basketball player from the University of Kansas. Introduce him to an extremely mind-boggling course such as "Subtraction: Addition's Tricky Pal."

Run for president. The average college student couldn't do any worse than the current candidates.

 Begin a boxing career, retire, make a comeback, re-retire, make a comeback and then re-re-retire.

These tips might come in handy later on as well. After all, it's only a few months until the hype begins surrounding the NCAA's Final Four. Then it's the start of a 162-game major-league baseball schedule and somewhere in there is the NBA championships and the National Hockey League's Stanley Cup playoffs.

It never ends.

athlete Joyner-Kersee top

On level with Babe Zaharias

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK - Track and field star Jackie Joyner-Kersee, Associated Press Female Athlete of the Year for 1987, is familiar with the great career of Babe Didrickson Zaharias, with whom she is compared.

"I saw her story on TV," Joyner-Kersee said. "She inspired me. "It was touching to see her (high) jump ... into sawdust. And to watch her play golf and tennis. "Her being a woman, and being so dedicated in what she wanted to do was inspiring.' Joyner-Kersee, the world recordholder in the heptathlon, co-world record holder in the long jump and a former basketball star at UCLA, is considered the finest all-around woman athlete in the world today.

It was a title that belonged to Zaharias for more than two decades, including 1932, when, competing in track, she won two Olympic gold medals and one silver and was chosen AP's Female Athlete of the Year. She won the honor five more times - for golf - in 1945-47, 1950 and

In addition, Zaharias, who died of cancer in 1956 at age 42, once struck out baseball Hall of Famer Joe DiMaggio, boxed and played football.

This year, Joyner-Kersee, 25, will try and match the Babe's two Olympic golds in the Scoul Games - in the heptathlon and long jump.

Her accomplishments in those events, along with outstanding performances in the high hurdles, helped Joyner-Kersee win the 1987 Female Athlete of the Year Award

In balloting by a nationwide panel of 244 sports writers and broadcasters, she received 128 first-place votes, 68 seconds and 16 thirds and a total of 880 points, with points alloted on a 5-3-1 basis.

West German Steffi Graf, the world's top-ranked woman tennis player and winner of 75 of 77 matches, including the French Open, finished second in the balloting with 806 points. She had 108 firsts, 82 seconds and 20 thirds.

Third was another tennis player, Martina Navratilova, the 1983 and 1986 Female Athlete of the Year. Navratilova, the only player to beat Graf in 1987 - in the Wimbledon and U.S. Open finals - was a distant third with 182 points, including 10 first-place votes.

Figure skater Katarina Witt of East Germany placed fourth with 140 points and six firsts, and pro golfer Ayako Okamoto of Japan was fifth with 68 points, two ahead of U.S. golfer Jane Geddes.

Joyner-Kersee and Canadian sprinter Ben Johnson, the AP's Male Athlete of the Year for 1987, will be presented their awards by the Tampa Sports Club on Feb. 26 at a banquet in Florida.

Options expanding for graduates as entry-level salaries increase

Students who plan to graduate this semester not only fear the agony of graduation checks but also face the, pressure of finding jobs.

However, a survey done by the placement service department at Michigan State University said 1988 graduates will hit the job market on an upswing, with the prospects looking good.

Employers are predicted to hire an estimated 83,392 graduates in 1988, according to the Michigan State survey. Starting salaries for graduates with bachelor's degrees average $22,609 annually - a 3.2 percent increase over the 1987 average.

According to the survey, engineering is the hottest job market. Computer science comes in second, followed by accounting and finance, education, chemistry and math, communications, business, and social sciences. Jobs in economics and agriculture are ranked last.

The aerospace industry takes first place in salaries, starting graduates at $28,086 a year. The tire and rubber setback because of problems in the industry is next, paying $27,152 annually. Graduates entering the chemical, automotive and electronics industries will start out making more than $25,000 a year.

Surviving first interview essential for job success

By Janelle Larson Collegian Reporter

Interviewing for a job is one of the scariest parts of the job-search process, according to analysts. However, the interview is also one of the most important steps in the job application.

The initial interview provides you with the opportunity to share information and to learn about the prospective employer, said Bruce Laughlin, director of the Career Planning and Placement Center. Applicants should view interviews as a way to share information, not as a performance.

Prior to the interview, job applicants should research the company. This will prepare them to ask relevant, intelligent questions and to show an interest in the company.

Before an interview, applicants should also set a few career goals, Laughlin said. These goals will help them recognize which jobs may be right and will let the interviewer know that the applicants have considered their futures.

'Remember, the object of interviews is to get a position for which one is qualified," he said. "It is not a competition for the maximum number of offers." When arriving for the interview it is vital to be punctual. Many interviewers will not speak to you if you are more than a few moments late. It is best to be waiting when they are ready to see you. When meeting the interviewer, applicants should smile, shake hands and exchange names in the greeting. To show self-confidence, the applicant should maintain eye contact throughout the interview.

It is also important to keep "nervous" hand movement at a minimum. Folding and unfolding your hands, playing with jewelry or hair will only draw attention away from what the applicant is saying, but also shows signs of insecurities.

Though the interview may seem particulary scary to first-time job seekers, it is important to remember that interviewing is an art and everyone improves with practice.

"Applicants need to realize that should contact the company.

employers need employees just as much as employees need employment," Laughlin said.

Applicants should appreciate that they have skills and potential to share with an employer. One should not ask about salaries until after the first interview, Laughlin said. Rather than ask about promotions, or benefits packages, applicants should tell interviewers that they are eager to assume additional responsibility and take the opportunity to help the company more.

Applicants need to "show what they can do for the company, rather than ask what the company can do for them," he said.

"In case of a group interview, the applicant must be sure to share the interview with all interviewees," Laughlin said.

At the conclusion of the interview, applicants should try to get the interviewer to tell them when they can expect to hear from the company, he said. If applicants have not heard anything after three weeks, they

The legislative message also called for a reduction of capital gains taxes, but did not cite any figures or specify any details.

Striking a bipartisan theme, Reagan told the lawmakers, "Yes, we will have our differences. But let us always remember: What unites us far outweighs whatever divides us."

Leaders of the Democratic-run Congress served notice that the legislative branch, not Reagan, would control the national agenda this year.

The president's "technicolor view of America and our people sought to make us feel good with images of 'morning in America,'" said Senate Majority Leader Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., in the official Democratic response.

But, he said, "The 'feel-good' slogans have gone flat with time. We've learned that bravado is not leadership - that ideology is no substitute for common sense.'

House Speaker Jim Wright, D-Texas, praised Reagan for his arms treaty with the Soviets and called on him to work with Congress toward peace in Central America. But he chided the president for fighting Congress on priorities including trade and domestic spending

Reagan said he would submit his new aid request for the Contras on Wednesday. He said the struggle there "has extra meaning because that nation is so near our own borders."

The president noted recent disclosures that the leftist Sandinista government in Managua is planning to establish a 600,000-man army. "Yet even as these plans are made, the Sandinista regime knows the tide is turning and the cause of Nicaraguan freedom is riding at its crest," he said.

Reagan said it was the Contras who had forced the Sandinistas to adopt some democratic reforms, negotiate with church authorities and release some political prisoners.

President will seek $36 million for Contras

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - President Reagan told congressional leaders Tuesday he will seek $36.25 million in mostly non-lethal aid to Nicaraguan rebels, with $3.6 million of it set aside for arms and ammunition but held in abeyance pending a cease-fire.

Under the plan, Reagan would issue a certification on March 31 as to whether a cease-fire was in effect between the Contra rebels and the leftist Sandinista government of Nicaragua and whether other conditions had been met.

"If there is no cease-fire in place, then I would assume the president would feel the pressure has got to continue to be applied for release of further military assistance," House Republican leader Robert Michel of Illinois told reporters.

The aid package is designed to keep the Contras supplied for four months. At one time, Secretary of State George P. Shultz had said the administration planned to seek $270 million to cover an 18-month period.

"Now that it's down to proportion, we've got good grounds to sell the (House) membership, partly on the basis of what happens in a worst-case scenario when it goes down," Michel said. "You cannot divorce that issue from presidential politics in this country as we go into another election."

The administration maintains that continued support of the Contras is needed to keep the Sandinistas from consolidating a base for the spread of communism in Central America.

Carlos Tunnermann, the Nicaraguan ambassador, said the administration's aid plan for the Contras "shows a total contempt for the expressed desire for peace of the peoples of Central America."

"It is a virtual slap in the face of the five Central American presidents who have worked so hard to achieve a peaceful solution to the conflict in Central America and have explicitly

Senate to hear sex magazine bill Local retailers state opinions on proposal zines, but does not use blinders, is tical to a Wichita city ordinance that

From Staff and Wire Reports

A bill that would require retailers to place sex magazines behind blinder racks has come before the Kansas Senate this week.

Current law prohibits the sale of obscene material to minors, but supporters of the new bill say the state also needs restrictions on material that is not "obscene" according to the legal definition, but is "harmful to minors."

Opponents of the bill claim it would be impossible for retailers to

Retailers don't know the contents of all the magazines and comic books they sell, said Richard Hayse, a lobbyist for Palmer News, a wholesale distributor of paper products.

Many retailers have for years kept sex magazines such as "Penthouse" and "Playboy" behind blinder racks or out of the reach of children, Hayse told members of the Senate Judiciary Committee, and most also weed out materials that could be obscene under the state's obscenity laws.

However, the bill would apply to a gray area of material that is not obscene but does contain sexual references, he said, and retailers can't be expected to review every issue of every magazine they sell. "I very much support the bill," said Mike Scitz, manager of Shop Quik in the Candlewood Shopping Center. "If I had it my way, I'd do away with (sex magazines) completely.'

Currently, Seitz said his store has blinders that cover everything, including the title of the sex magazines that they sell.

"A lot of parents feel strongly about (covering sex magazines), Seitz said.

"It is a real good idea. I think it helps to weed out the younger kids coming in here."

Another store that sells sex maga-

Waldenbooks, located in the Manhattan Town Center.

"The store's policy is that the magazines cannot be placed on the front rack," said Kent Sylvis, senior bookseller.

The sex magazines are placed on the top rack and are kept together, he said, adding the store does not have a problem with underage persons read-

"It is my personal opinion that if they want to look at them they will find them," he said.

The bill, which the House has been held constitutional by the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

The bill would ban stores from selling or displaying to those under 18 material showing nudity, sexual conduct or sexual abuse. Stores would be in compliance with the bill if they placed sex magazines or other materials behind blinder racks.

However, Hayse said the bill's definition of what is "harmful to minors" also is confusing and inconsistent.

"When you look at this bill, you see someone's definition of sin," approved last session, is almost iden-Hayse said.

Tenant parking creates problem

Manhattan landlords could be forced to reduce the number of tenants in their apartments if adequate parking is not provided.

City commissioners on Tuesday discussed forcing landlords to comply with city zoning ordinances by increasing parking spaces for Inadequate parking space at apartment complexes near the K-State campus has forced tenants to park on area streets and Manhattan residents are complaining about the congestion, said Larry Hulse, director of planning.

The city zoning ordinance governing apartment complexes states only two unrelated persons may occupy one unit in a complex and two parking spaces must be provided for each unit. Hulse said many campus-area apartments have more than two unrelated individuals living in them. This, he said, is creating the parking

"I've had students call after they've rented an apartment and say they have nowhere to park," he said. Hulse said the ordinance is hard to enforce because city officials don't know how many tenants are in each apartment. He said the city warns developers about the zoning regulation, but has no control over the landlords in their selection of tenants. When a complex is built, developers usually don't know who the tenants will be, Hulse said. If the owner rents to married students or families, the ordinance is easier to enforce.

"We're at the point where we'll have to do some enforcemment based on the occupancy (of apartments)," Hulse said. "We'd be asking them ■ See PARKING, Page 12

GPA goal set by athletes

By Brian Hummell Collegian Reporter

One of the goals set by K-State's athletic teams has nothing to do with wins, losses, titles or championships.

Instead, the teams are aiming at equaling the average cumulative grade point average of the student body, said Mike Fisher, academic counselor to K-State's student athletes.

For the fall semester, the University's average GPA was 2.72, while student athletes compiled a 2.49

K-State's Department of Intercollegiate Athletics and the College of Arts and Sciences are currently studying the graduation rates of football and basketball players on scholarship since 1972, Fisher said. It will consider how well the athletes performed academically and what has worked in their academic programs.

Another goal, he said, is to ensure a 75 percent graduation rate of senior letter winners. "The key is retention," Fisher said.

"We have to find kids who will remain at K-State and remain happy. Of course they have to go to school or they won't fit in the program."

The evaluation of an athlete's recruitment level, he said.

"The rules force academics to be stressed. With the pragmatic restrictions of the Big Eight, NCAA and institution, the standards have come up considerably," Fisher said.

One of those restrictions, Proposition 48, requires high school student athletes to attain a 2.0 GPA in a core curriculum of English, math, social science and natural or physical science.

They must also achieve a composite score of 15 on the ACT or a combined score of 700 on the SAT verbal and math sections to be eligible to disadvantaged in athletics."

Coaches bring in recruits' transcripts to rate the probable success of the potential student athlete, Fisher said. Then the coaches, Fisher and an ad hoc group will set out the programs the individual recruits will take.

These programs are geared for both gifted and marginal students, Fisher said.

This is necessary because "student athletes represent a different population," Fisher said. "There is a predominance of the socio-economic

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Republican and Democratic senators joined forces Tuesday seeking to discredit attempts by Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., to condemn the new Soviet-American arms treaty because it would destroy only missiles and not their nuclear warheads.

The top U.S. arms control negotiators at Geneva, Max Kampelman and Maynard Glitman, said the treaty

Nicaraguan press to reopen

MANAGUA, Nicaragua — The leftist Sandinista government announced Tuesday it is allowing several newspapers, magazines and radio programs closed under the 1982 emergency law to

Lt. Alicia Torres, director of the Interior Ministry's media section, told a news conference the measure was being taken as part of the government's compliance with a Central American

Among the seven radio programs allowed back on the air immediately is one on the Roman Catholic Church station, Radio Catolica.

Torres said, however, that 15 other radio programs taken off the air could only resume if their owners return to the country, apply for a government amnesty and cut all ties to the Contra rebels.

The government shut down the publications and programs for violating censorship regulations under the national emergency law imposed six years ago when the U.S.-supported Contra rebels launched a war to overthrow the Sandinista government.

Last October, the government allowed the opposition newspaper La Prensa to reopen and permitted Radio Catolica to go back on the air. They had been closed on June 26, 1986 and Jan. 1, 1986, respectively.

Israeli police wound protestor

JERUSALEM - Israeli border police in the West Bank opened fire on Palestinian protesters Tuesday, wounding one, and Arabs hurled firebombs at soldiers in the Gaza Strip.

Defense Minister Yitzhak said the policy of using beatings to quell protest applies only during violent demonstrations.

Border policemen shot a Palestinian in the leg when dozens of protesters, many covering their faces with checkered Arab headdresses, surrounded a patrol in the Jenin refugee camp, an army spokesman said.

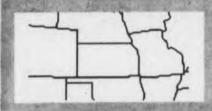

He said the patrol used tear gas and rubber bullets first, then fired because their lives were in danger.

The Arab-run Palestine Press Service said Israeli gunfire wounded two Arabs, one 12 years old, during protests at the West Bank town of El Bireh and the Jalazoon refugee camp near Nablus. Photographers saw 15 Arabs detained at Jalazoon.

An army spokeswoman denied any Palestinians were wounded by shooting at El Birch or Jalazoon. She said a large demonstration began at Jalazoon after two foreign television crews entered the camp and two Arab women were injured, one by a rubber bullet and one by beating.

Riots began Dec. 8 in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, which Israel captured from Jordan and Egypt in the 1967 Middle East war. Thirty-eight Arabs have been killed by Israeli gunfire, according to U.N. figures, and Rabin says the policy of using beatings rather than bullets took effect Jan. 5.

In response to domestic and foreign critics, the defense minister said Tuesday soldiers would use physical force only "against perpetrators of violence during the violence."

Flagpole moved for state aid

LIBERAL - When officials of Liberal High School found themselves a few yards short of eligibility for thousands of dollars in additional state aid, they just moved their flagpole.

Under state rules, students must live at least 2.5 miles from the front door of the school before it can receive state money to pay for bussing students.

That left 10 to 15 students who live at Gaslight Mobile Home Park near Liberal High about 105 feet short of meeting the standard.

Since flagpoles traditionally are located in front of schools, Liberal High officials designated the north door as the school's front door by moving the flagpole, which had been outside the south door.

The move last week cost $500. School officials say it could qualify the district for $6,000 to $8,000 more in state money.

KBI to keep crime out of racing

TOPEKA - The director of the Kansas Bureau of Investigation told the Senate Confirmations Committee Tuesday that every effort will be made to safeguard Kansas racing from infiltration by organized crime.

"I would never say never," said Dave Johnson when a Sen. Bill Mulich, D-Kansas City, asked him if the underworld could ever infiltrate Kansas racing operations.

"We're going to make every effort to keep organized crime money out of racing in the Kansas City area," Johnson said.

Last July, Johnson was appointed by Attorney General Robert T. Stephan to be the KBI's seventh director since its inception in 1939. The Senate Confirmations Committee will make a recommendation to the full Senate, which must approve the appointment.

Lottery resolution proposed

TOPEKA - A House member introduced a resolution Tuesday to amend the Kansas Constitution to allow the state to join a multi-state lottery — the only way, he said, the state can ratify a pending agreement with six other states and the District of Columbia.

The introduction of the resolution came the day before a scheduled House debate over a separate bill to allow the state to join a multi-state lottery. One member of the Legislature's staff has said he thinks the bill is unconstitutional.

In addition, some lawmakers were critical of the lottery agency Tuesday, saying the matter of the Legislature's need to ratify the multi-state agreement should have been brought to their attention earlier. Gov. Mike Hayden and Lottery Director Larry Montgomery have pushed for quick action because the multi-state lottery begins Feb. 3.

Montgomery told the House Democrat caucus, "Obviously, I'm embarrassed to have to bring something to you on an emergency basis."

Priority deadline for scholarships extended to Feb.

By The Collegian Staff

For students wishing to apply for K-State scholarships, the first priority deadline is Feb. 1.

Students who meet this deadline have a better chance of being awarded University scholarships, said Larry Viterna, director of student financial assistance.

When this deadline is met by applicants, it puts them on a top priority list to be considered for scholarship money that is available, he said.

"We continue to take applications (for scholarships) all year long, but if the money is available is the question," Viterna said. "The sooner you get (the application) in, the better off you are to be awarded the scholarship money."

Students interested in scholarships should fill out a University scholarship application, which can be obtained from Fairchild

Before this year, the first priority deadline was Jan. 15. However, the date was extended to Feb. 1, said Larry Moeder, associate director of student financial assistance.

"Most schools in Kansas have this date," Moeder said. "It gives students more of an opportunity to get back to school and get settled in before applying." The next deadline for federal aid is March.

Bush, Rather defend actions taken during live TV interview

By The Associated Press

George Bush called his clash with CBS anchor Dan Rather "kind of like combat" but said he had no hard feelings Tuesday, while Democrats extended their own disagreement over help for the poor and homeless.

The vice president faced questions about his tense and explosive live television interview of the night before as he campaigned among high school students in Wyoming.

"It's all history. That's the way life is," Bush said. "I don't want to have a big running fight with Dan Rather or anybody else.

"It's kind of like combat — he's got to do his thing, he's got to do it his way, and I've got to defend my record and get my case to the people," Bush said. "I still like the guy."

Bush's refusal to reveal what advice he gave President Reagan about selling arms to Iran drew support from Reagan himself, who previously had said he wanted everyone in his administration to lay out the

During a picture-taking session at the White House, Reagan endorsed Bush's refusal to reveal the substance of his private conversations with Reagan.

"I think he has been exactly right," Reagan replied. "That would set a precedent with regard to private conversations between presidents and vice presidents, and I don't think we have a right to do that."

The president also said Bush was not present when Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger and Secretary of State George Shultz argued against the secret sale of arms job." to Iran.

That varied with the accounts given by Shultz and others. On Tuesday, Shultz, appearing on CBS' "This Morning" program, said, "As far as my recollection is concerned, he was there.' Rather, in a statement on Tuesday's "CBS Evening News," said the network had not misled Bush about the interview topic, adding that he respected both the institution of the vice presidency and Bush himself. He also blamed the abrupt close of the interview on time pressures.

Trying to ask honest questions and trying to be persistent about answers is part of a reporter's job," he said. "The intention of even persistent questioning in a spirited interview is to do an honest, honorable

Bush had taken strong exception to Rather's questioning him about the vice president's knowledge of the

Iran-Contra affair. But Rather said Tuesday, "I saw my job as asking questions about the central story ... the central story being how did he get involved in sending missiles to the Ayatollah and what about these inconsistencies in the record."

Bush aides said they were flooded with supportive phone calls.

Among the Democrats, Michael Dukakis and Paul Simon managed to avoid each other even though they appeared at the same news conference in Boston to show support for a a woman fighting federal restrictions that block aid for the care of her severely handicapped daughter.

Black student problem requires support by all

The United States has witnessed a dramatic decrease in black college enrollment over the last decade. In Kansas, five of the six regents universities have experienced a progressively diminishing rate of black attendance. K-State is the only regents university in Kansas showing a slight increase in black student enrollment.

Although university administrators nationwide lay the blame on cuts in federal financial assistance, poor recruitment and racism, the problem is more serious than that.

According to Education Secretary William Bennett, it is the inferior education black people receive in elementary and secondary schools that restricts them from pursuing a college education. "What (young blacks) need is the same kind of attention, concern and setting of standards that other kids get," he

Black students currently make up only 2.5 percent of the student body at K-State - an increase of 0.1 of 1 percent since the 1986 academic

According to Veryl Switzer, assistant vice president for special services, increased minority scholarship funds also contributed to the boost in black student enrollment.

However, this increase was viewed only as a modest step in bringing black student enrollment back to the average of the past years, Switzer said. "Our efforts somewhat stabilized black enrollment, but we haven't made any great increase," he

Only through a greater increase of minority scholarship funds will K-State be able to address the problem of the insufficient black presence on campus. Fortunately, the administration is on the right track, but a cut in funding could spell disaster.

Obscenity law demands caution by Legislature again going to be considered in the should be sure the words they intend Kansas Legislature with a new bill to make into law are ones that satisfy that would require merchants to place offensive material behind "blinders" in their stores.

The bill would basically follow a Wichita ordinance already in effect and make those standards uniform statewide.

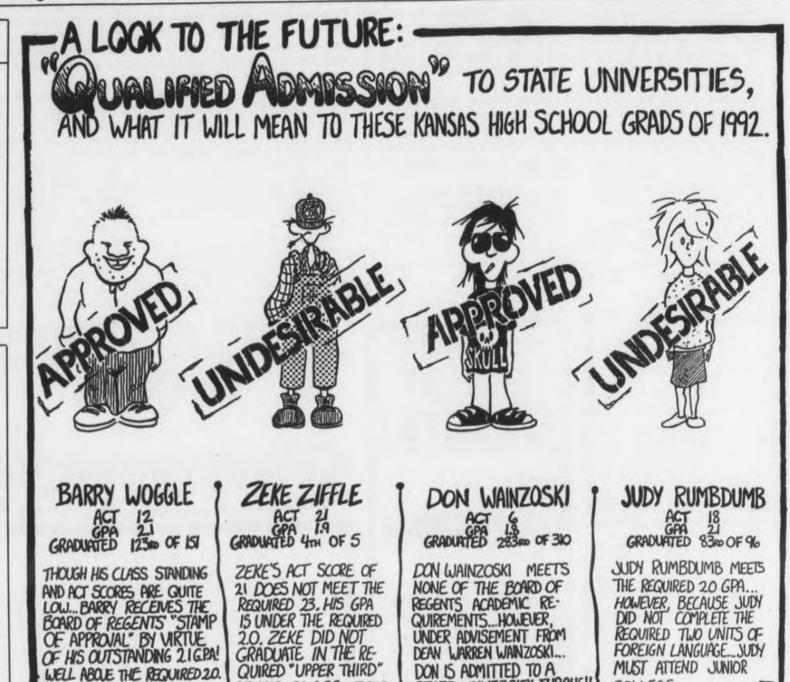

In the bill, obscene material is anything deemed "harmful to minors," showing nudity, sexual conduct or sexual abuse. Restrictions would apply to a host of media including books, magazines, newspapers, posters, records and video tapes.

What legislators need to be looking for as they debate this bill are the potential dangers it can bring to free-

A definition for obscenity is once dom of speech and expression. They the intent of the bill.

> Those words should be fair to all Kansans. This means they should listen not only to the right and the left, but those in the middle. As a recent U.S. Supreme Court ruling decided, obscenity cases should be viewed from the point of a "reasonable person," not from "community standards."

> Our state representatives should make sure blinders are placed only on material the "reasonable person" would find dangerous if children saw it, and that's all. This will protect as many people as possible - on both sides of the issue.

How many of you are tired of meaningless statistics? I know that I am, and probably will be even more so after Sunday's Super Bowl.

I have put my studies off this week because I am holding my breath, waiting for John Madden or some other notable sportscaster to tell me that John Elway has completed only two out of his last five passes after being sacked by an NFC linebacker whose last name begins with the letter "C" and that this has been the result 51.4 percent of the time during the 1987-88 season.

Mark Twain once said, "There are three kinds of lies: white lies, damn lies and statistics." For example, everyone who watched the first half of the K-State-Oklahoma State University game Saturday would swear that the box score statistic lied when it showed the 'Cats hitting 10 of 22 from the free throw line in the first half. People can say just about anything they want with statistics. One of my brothers graduated from a small high school that soon closed down because of lack of enrollment. Contrast these approaches that he could use on his resume. "I graduated at the top of my high school class," as opposed to "I graduated second from the bottom of my high school class." Both are statistically true statements, but totally different in their approaches. (As you might have figured out by now, the graduating class that year contained only two people.)

Commentary WALLY BROCKHOFF Collegian

We use statistics a great deal in sports, business, government and a host of other areas. Decisions are often based on these statistics, such as Gary Hart's decision to actually try and convince the American public that he is a serious candidate for the presidency, since the polls tell him so. Still, I wonder if we focus too much on the statistics or figures themselves, and not the causes of those figures and statistics. For example, one can read a figure and not even think about it, such as the one in Michael Nichols' column Tuesday that shows one out of every two black children is being born into

Columnist

If the reader has experienced poverty or knows someone who has, then it means a little bit more. That reader starts to think about someone he or she knows going to bed hungry and cold, or someone who might not have shoes to wear. More importantly, one might think about how those circumstances affect a person's self-worth and dignity.

COLLEGE ...

@BROADFOOT KSUCOLT

On the other hand, the statistic may evoke an emotion of anger toward welfare

The value and "correctness" of either perspective is certainly a matter of opinion, but the real sin is when we read statistics and attach no significance to them at all. We fail when we read past them as words and numbers instead of relating them to people and their well-being.

I think that one of the causes of this phenomenon is that we often have difficulty correlating the effects of our own personal action on statistics. For example, 680 main street businesses failed in Kansas in 1985. Yet, those of us from the towns where they failed never make the connection between that figure and our once-a-month journeys to the Kansas City or Manhattan malls for a shopping spree. Of course, if one thinks about it, it makes perfect sense that when businesses do less business they will soon go out of

I would never be the one to say that statistics are meaningless, only that they are abused. After all, where would the five-hour Super Bowl pre-game show be without them? I just dread the day when we read this headline in the paper:

"Four out of five surveyed feel that surveys are meaningless and irrelevant."

Trusting strangers difficult

Trucker wins applause from motorists

It was pitch black outside the car, and as we drove down the interstate, I began to fall

Suddenly I was jolted from my sleep as a screeching sound reverberated through the car, and my friend who had been driving pulled to the side of the road. As soon as she shut the car off, the noise stopped. It was then I noticed the silence. I was tempted to return to my nap when I realized the severity of the situation. We were stranded on the interstate, it was only about 20 degrees, it was pitch black, neither of us know a lot about defense or cars and to add to our problems I had not called home before leaving Manhattan. Something I rarely had taken time in the past to do. I never left town when I said I would, so why bother calling my parents. I'm an adult and should be able to take care of myself. Anyhow, I prefer driving at night.

But, this was one time, I would have preferred to have been driving during the day. After a few moments, Rhonda turned to me and asked what I thought we should do. "Turn the emergency blinkers on and raise the hood - that's the universal sign of distress. Isn't it?"

So Rhonda got out and put the hood up while I locked all the car doors. After she got back in the car, we looked at each other and wondered what we should do.

"Well, I guess we have to wait until the highway patrol passes us and stops to help, that shouldn't be too long. I think." So we waited, and the car got colder. A half hour later we were still waiting. We wondered what we were going to do.

I did not want to try to walk because I didn't think we were close to anything. The stretch of I-70 to Topeka isn't exactly hopping with Howard Johnsons.

Neither of us wanted to walk - the risks were just too high. I was compelled to tell a horror story about a car stalled on a deserted interstate. But as I began, Rhonda looked at me and screamed, "Now is not the time to tell horror stories. Wait until we get home."

I had to agree because after beginning to talk about a stranger hiding in the back seat, I found it hard to reach back there for a blanket.

Forty-five minutes had passed by now; so much for my theory that the highway patrol passes by every 15 minutes. It was going on 9 p.m., and we needed to do something. We decided to wait 15 minutes more and then Commentary BECKY

LUCAS Collegian Columnist

During the time we began to honk at vehicles in an effort to get someone to stop and help us. We didn't want to get out of the car for anyone but the highway patrol, but we thought if someone else stopped, we could have them send for the highway patrol.

It seemed that everything we had heard or read about getting stranded said to wait where you are. But an hour later, after no one had stopped to help us, we were forced to leave

We grabbed our purses and blankets and bundled up to walk for help. We had only walked 100 yards when a semi truck stopped in front of us.

I've never been so scared. Rhonda turned to me and said, "Do you know how to fight?" "Yeah" I answered, "I can fight."

"Do you want the eyes or below the belt?" "The eyes," I quietly answered, hoping I wouldn't have to put into use what little knowledge I had about self-defense. As we approached the truck, the driver set the brakes. Rhonda and I looked at each other knowing the next few minutes could make a difference to the rest of our lives.

The passenger door of the truck opended, and a man climbed down. "It's OK girls, I'm not armed or nothing," he said as he raised his hands. As he walked toward us, we hesitantly walked to meet him. He asked what we were doing walking. We explained that our car had broken down and that we needed to get to a

He told us we were about five miles from the Hardees and Amoco station, and that he'd be happy to drop us off. As we climbed into the truck, I still felt very uncomfortable. How did we know that he would really take us anywhere? How did we know he wasn't some kind of psychopathic killer? Suddenly horror story headlines flew though my mind. "Girls found raped, dead along road."

As we drove, he asked us where we were from and where we were going. We told him and then asked him a little about himself. He said he was on his way home to Ottawa to see his parents. He was 40 years old and lived outside of Ottawa in a house built for his wife, who died seven years earlier of cancer. He had two younger brothers about our age.

By then we had reached the turnoff. He turned and proceeded to drop us off. We were then able to get help, and soon we were back on the road to Kansas City.

Rhonda and I were very thankful that it had been a nice man who stopped to help us instead of someone out of the horror stories we had heard about.

We would have liked to send him a thank you note, but we don't know his name. So to everyone who stops to help stranded motorists, especially a middle-age man from Ottawa, thank you.

AWAKS sales successful

K-State book receives high reviews

By Brad Fanshier Collegian Reporter

Less than two months after its release, a first-of-its-kind book published by Student Publications Inc. is eclipsing original sales expectations.

"A Week at Kansas State: Photographs of College Life as Seen by 44 Photojournalists from Oct. 12-19, 1986" went on sale late last fall. About 3,000 of the original order of 6,000 books have been sold, said Dave Adams, director of Student Publications Inc. and publisher of the book. Adams said he feels good about the early sales of the book.

"Every bookstore in Manhattan ran out (of the books) at least once before Christmas," Adams said.

Adams credits much of the success of the book to the favorable reviews received from the press, including the Kansas City Star, Topeka Capital-Journal and The Wichita

The Associated Press also gave the 168-page book high marks in an article published in Kansas newspapers as well as other states. Adams said the Star is planning to devote its Sunday Star Magazine to the book in early February.

The publicity has generated interest from other schools across the country, Adams said.

"I probably get three or four calls a day (about the project)," Adams said.

Several other universities have expressed an interest in replicating the book, Adams said. Marshall University in Huntington, W.Va., has received approval from its administration to begin working on a similar project.

Although preliminary sales have been strong, Adams said an aggressive marketing campaign has been started to ensure continued sales. A packet containing copies of reviews, information about the project and ordering information is being sent to more than 1,000 schools and public libraries in states with Big Eight universities.

Between 4,200 and 4,300 books need to be sold for the project to break even, Adams said. Adams was originally told by other publishers that it would take four to five years to sell the book, but he disagrees.

"I think we'll be a lot faster than that," he said. "It's just going to take a lot longer to sell the second half (of the order)."

Adams was hesitant to speculate on the possible profit if all 6,000 books are sold.

"I want to make at least $10,000." Adams said.

Several uses have been proposed for any profit, including a photojournalism scholarship for K-State students, Adams said. He also said some of the money may be used for photo seminars and as seed money for an AWAKS II in 1996.

SAMS sponsors concert tonight to kick off fund-raising activities

By The Collegian Staff

A benefit concert tonight at Mannequin's featuring The Moving Van Gogh's and The Mahoots kicks off this semester's fund-raising activities by Students Against Multiple Sclerosis.

Mary Ubel, junior in journalism and mass communications, is chairwoman of the K-State chapter of SAMS, the student branch of the National Multiple Sclerosis Society. In addition to tonight's concert, Ubel said the group is planning a "Rock-Alike" lip-syncing contest in which winners will go to regional and national competitions sponsored by Music Television, Ford Motor Co. and Maxell Tapes.

Other possible events to raise money are an alumni banquet, a campus "Skip-A-Meal for MS" and a free-throw contest between K-State basketball Coach Lon Kruger and University of Kansas basketball Coach Larry Brown.

Kruger is also honorary chairman of SAMS at K-State, and Ubel said she hopes to enlist his help in a public service announcement to educate more people.

"Coach Kruger was very enthusiastic when we went to see him," Ubel said. "He had all kinds of good Ubel said she wants K-State to be one of the top contributors from the 200 colleges involved with raising money to combat Multiple Sclerosis, which strikes about 200 people from the ages of 20 to 40 every week in this country.

"The (eastern Kansas) chapter wants us to raise $18,000," Ubel said. "My personal goal is more like

Stock market overhaul advised to avoid plunge

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - A congressional agency's report on last October's stock market crash concluded Tuesday that computerized trading equipment and the way transactions are regulated should be overhauled to avoid another such plunge.

The General Accounting Office's study said that the nation's various financial markets increasingly have come to affect one another, meaning trading officials must find ways to prevent plummeting prices in one exchange from spilling into others.

But the GAO, an investigating agency for Congress, said government regulators also must keep up with the times as trading volumes grow and links become stronger among securities and future markets, at home and overseas.

'The history of the last 60 years makes clear the pivotal role in our economy which is played by the financial markets," Charles A. Bowsher, head of the GAO, told the House telecommunications and finance subcommittee.

"The federal government cannot escape responsibility for assuring that such a vital mechanism performs effectively in the public interest," Bowsher added.

The preliminary study, on which research will continue, is the second major federal analysis of Wall Street's unprecedented October collapse. In the first 19 days of that month, the Dow Jones industrial average lost about one-third of its total value, or about $1 trillion. On Oct. 19, Black Monday, the Dow dropped 508 points, a 23 percent

Architecture students receive national awards

By Lori Ingmire Collegian Reporter

Achievements in the College of Architecture and Design continue to garner national recognition.

The American Society of Landscape Architects recently honored two graduates of the Department of Landscape Architecture as two of the seven award winners in its annual competition. ASLA also cited the department as ranking "head and shoulders above the rest."

ASLA annually conducts its National Student Awards Competition, in which students from approximately 55 ASLA chapters are eligible to participate. The competition is designed to recognize superior works of design and research by landscape architectural students.

The jury of the 1987 competition voiced a special commendation to K-State's landscape architecture faculty and analytical work of the archeology of a city in Jordan, "Jerdepartment head Thomas Musiak.

"The projects submitted by KSU students for the past cepts contributing to the character of the best-preserved six years have been head and shoulders above the rest," said Patrick Moore, ASLA jury member. "We have been absolutely impressed with their consistent submittal of superior-quality projects." This acknowledgment was printed in the January/ February issue of the international magazine Landscape

Mohammed Nuru, one of the graduates, received one of two Undergraduate Awards in Design for his project "Kayin Ganye Ranch," a master plan for a resort in Kenya. His creation was a master plan for a proposed convention resort development in Nigeria featuring a conference center, mosque, chalets, hotel, heliport and citrus plantation.

The project was commended for its excellent graphics and problem analysis and was praised by the jury as "the Marcia Sloan, the other graduate, was recognized for an

NASA discovers faulty seal; shuttle launch date unsure

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Detective work led NASA engineers to a critical seal in a space shuttle main engine that was improperly welded by the manufacturer, the space agency said Tuesday. The repair may require replacement of turbo pumps on all three shuttle engines.

The effect of this and other new problems on plans for the first post-Challenger liftoff still is being assessed, said David L. Winterhalter, director of systems analysis and engineering at the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

The target date is mid-August, but NASA Administrator James C. Fletcher has delayed setting a firm While disassembling and inspecting one of the high-pressure fuel turbo pumps on a main engine last Friday, engineers found cracks in a so-called fish-mouth seal. It was determined the cracks were "use-related" - caused by firing the engine.

To check further, engineers made a cross-section cut in the part and found that the seal, which is fabricated from two metal pieces, had not been welded properly when it was manufactured.

The seal is in the turbine inlet of a high-speed fuel turbo pump and is designed to keep hot gases from escaping.

Still, two engines were mounted over the weekend on the shuttle Discovery, the first of the fleet to be flown when missions resume. The third was put in place last

"We are going to try to leave the engines as they are so we can do some preliminary checks," said Winterhalter. "We've got three other pumps ready to install."

He pointed out that high pressure fuel pumps have been replaced before while the shuttles' three engines were mounted.

Try stretching your grocery dollars by using ...

Well, class, today we're going to talk about another of the wonders in your refrigerator just waiting to be discovered: cheese.

Now, I'm not talking about the bricks of cheese found in those special cases in the deli section. If I'm going to spend $4 per pound for something, it's going to be a filet. So, the kind of cheeses we're going to discuss are the ones in the regular dairy cases. They're over there between the canned biscuits and the

There are several types of cheese here from which to choose. Natural cheese is the solid portion of the milk (known as curds) separated from the liquid portion (whey) and pressed into various forms (yummy). It is then left to ripen. The length of time it sits determines the flavor - mild, medium or Natural cheeses found in your friendly dairy cases include blocks of different flavors, like Colby sharp. You can usually buy a block of cheese for $2. Pasteurized process cheese is a blend of one or more varieties of natural cheeses that is heated or pasteurized. The heating stops the ripening, so the cheese has a uniform flavor and texture.

The pasteurized process cheese is then formed into square logs, sliced and sealed with those little pieces of plastic wrap. This way you can easily find it to put on your bologna sandwich. You may also know this cheese by one of its many aliases, such as Velveeta.

Our third type of cheese is pasteurized cheese spread. Pasteurized cheese spread is made by the same method as process cheese. However, it has a slightly lower fat content and a slightly higher moisture content.

Now, if you're brave enough to take cheese that one step further and do more than spread it on pizza and bologna, watch out for the cooking temperature. When you heat cheese, keep the cooking temperature low and the cooking time short. High heat and overcooking will cause cheese to become stringy and tough. If you're adding cheese to other ingredients while cooking, cut the cheese into small chunks so it melts evenly and quickly.

If you have too much cheese for one meal and you want to put it away, remember to always wrap the cheese and store it in the refrigerator. If you don't, besides spoiling, it will smell terrible.

Before we try this cooking thing, let me clue you in on a few pointers. Bags of pre-shredded cheese hang near the block cheese in the grocery store. Four ounces of shredded, crumbled or grated cheese should equal about 1 cup. If you are using cheese to cook with (as in macaroni and cheese), try using the shredded types of cheese. That way you don't have to worry about lumps in

Now you know everything anyone other than a food science major wanted to know about cheese, so let's get to work. It's time to try cooking with cheese.

Macaroni and Cheese

- 1 to 11/2 cups uncooked elbow macaroni, rigatoni or spinach egg noodles (about 6 ounces)
- 1/4 cup margarine or butter
- 1 small onion, chopped (about 1/4 cup) 1/2 teaspoon salt
- ¼ teaspoon pepper 1/4 cup all-purpose flour
- 1¼ cups milk
- 8 ounces process sharp American or Swiss cheese, process American cheese loaf or process cheese spread loaf, cut into 1/2 -inch cubes

Cook macaroni as directed on package. Cook and stir margarine, onion, salt and pepper over medium heat until onion is slightly tender.

Stir in flour. Cook over LOW heat, stirring constantly, until mixture is smooth and bubbly; remove from heat. Stir in milk. Heat to boiling, stirring constantly. Boil and stir 1 minute; remove from heat. Stir in cheese until Place macaroni in ungreased 11/2 -quart casserole dish. Stir cheese sauce into macaroni. Bake uncovered in 375-degree oven for 30 minutes. Makes 5 servings.

Manicotti

- package (8 ounces) manicotti shells
- 11/2 cups creamed cottage cheese 1/4 cup grated Parmesan cheese
- tablespoon instant chicken bouillon (dry)
- 1/2 teaspoon garlic powder 1/4 teaspoon dried thyme leaves
- 2 eggs
- small onion, chopped (about 1/4 cup)
- package (10 ounces) frozen chopped spinach, thawed and drained can (8 ounces) tomato sauce
- cup shredded mozzarella cheese (4 ounces)

Cook manicotti shells as directed on package; drain. Mix remaining ingredients except tomato sauce and mozzarella cheese. Fill manicotti shells with spinach mixture; arrange in greased rectangular pan, 13x9x2 inches.

Pour tomato sauce over manicotti; sprinkle with mozzarella cheese. Cover and bake in 350-degree oven until hot and bubbly, about 25 minutes. Makes 5 servings.

Grilled Cheese Sandwiches

- 2 slices bread
- 2 slices cheese
- 1 slice ham or bologna (optional)

Butter one side of each slice of bread. Place in skillet on medium heat, butter side down. Arrange cheese slices on bread. If desired, put one slice ham or bologna between cheese slices. Top off with other slice of bread, butter side

Cook until golden brown and flip. Cook other side until golden brown. Makes 1 sandwich.

Cheese Fondue

- 2 cups shredded natural Swiss cheese (8 ounces)
- 2 cups shredded Cheddar cheese (8 ounces)
- tablespoon comstarch
- 1 clove garlic, cut into halves
- 1 cup dry white wine tablespoon lemon juice
- 3 tablespoons kirsch or dry sherry teaspoon salt
- 1/4 teaspoon white pepper 1 loaf (1 pound) French bread, cut into 1-inch cubes

Toss cheeses and comstarch together. Rub garlic on bottom and side of heavy saucepan or skillet; add wine. Heat over low heat just until bubbles rise to surface (wine should not boil); stir in lemon juice.

Gradually add cheese, about 1/2 cup at a time, stirring constantly with wooden spoon over low heat until cheeses are melted. Stir in kirsch, salt and white pepper.

Remove to earthenware fondue dish; keep warm over low heat. Spear bread cubes with fondue forks; dip and swirl in fondue with stirring motion. If fondue becomes too thick, stir in 1/4 to 1/2 cup heated wine.

Makes 4 servings.

Cheese Enchiladas

- 1 large onion, chopped (about 1 cup)
- 2 large cloves garlic, crushed
- 1 tablespoon chili powder 2 tablespoons vegetable oil

Story by Renee Shephard

Staff illustration by Steve Wolgast

- 1 teaspoon dried oregano leaves
- teaspoon ground cumin
- 1/2 teaspoon salt
- 1/4 teaspoon pepper
- 1 can (28 ounces) whole tomatoes, undrained 11/2 cups shredded Cheddar cheese (6 ounces)
- 11/2 cups shredded Monterey Jack cheese (6 ounces)
- 1/2 cup vegetable oil 1 package (9 ounces) 6- or 7-inch corn tortillas (12 tortillas)
- 11/2 cups shredded lettuce
- 1/2 cup sliced radishes 1/4 cup sliced ripe olives

Cook and stir onion, garlic and chili powder in 2 tablespoons oil in 3-quart saucepan until onion is tender, about 5 minutes. Stir in oregano, cumin, salt, pepper and tomatoes; break up tomatoes. Heat to boiling; reduce heat. Simmer uncovered until thickened, about 30 minutes.

Mix cheeses. Heat 1/2 cup oil in 8-inch skillet until hot. Dip each tortilla lightly into hot oil to soften; drain. Dip each tortilla into tomato mixture to coat both sides.

Spoon about 2 tablespoons cheese on each tortilla; roll tortilla around cheese.

Place seam side down in ungreased rectangular baking dish, 13x9x2 inches. Pour remaining tomato mixture over the enchiladas; sprinkle with remaining cheese. Bake uncovered in 350-degree oven until cheese is melted and enchiladas are hot, about 20 minutes. Top each serving with lettuce, radishes and olives. Serve with dairy sour cream, if desired.

Makes 6 servings.

Easy Cheese Pie

- 1 cup shredded Cheddar cheese (4 ounces) 1 cup shredded mozzarella cheese (4 ounces)
- 1 cup shredded Monterey Jack cheese (4 ounces)
- 1 medium onion, chopped (about 1/2 cup)
- 2 tablespoons all-purpose flour
- 1 cup milk
- 1/2 teaspoon salt
- teaspoon dry mustard
- teaspoon Worcestershire sauce
- 2 medium tomatoes, sliced

Mix cheeses, onion and flour. Spread in greased pie plate. 10x11/2 inches, or quiche dish, 9x11/2 inches. Beat eggs slightly; beat in milk, salt, mustard and Worcestershire sauce. Pour over cheese mixture.

Bake uncovered in 350 degree oven until set, 35 to 40 minutes. Let stand 10 minutes; arrange tomato slices around edge of pie, overlapping slightly. Makes 8 servings.

Cheesy Bread Bake

- 1/2 loaf (1-pound size) French bread
- 2 cups shredded Monterey Jack cheese (8 ounces)
- 1/4 pound fully cooked ham, finely chopped (about 1 cup)
- 4 green onions (with tops), sliced
- 11/2 cups milk
- 1/2 cup dry white wine or water 1 tablespoon Dijon-style mustard
- 1/4 teaspoon red pepper sauce
- tablespoons grated Parmesan cheese Cut bread into 16 slices. Arrange 8 slices bread in ungreased rectangular baking dish, 11x71/2 x2 inches. Top with Monterey Jack cheese, ham and onions. Arrange remaining bread on top. Beat remaining ingredients except Bake uncovered in 325 degree oven until knife inserted in center comes out clean, 1 to 11/4 hours. Let stand 10 minutes before serving.

Makes 8 servings.

Candidate to rely on 'hard work'

By Becky Ives Collegian Reporter

In the national media reports of the New Hampshire primary, Norbert G. Dennerll is not mentioned as a likely winner of that early presidential sweepstakes.

But, the 58-year-old former Cleveland city councilman believes a little luck and hard work can make up for his lack of notoriety.

'Anything can happen in one day," said Dennerll. "All it takes is one reporter to write a national story, and my name will become known.

"Look at Gary Hart. He won the New Hampshire primary four years ago with only 2 percent recognition," he said.

Denerell counts on hard work by himself and a small campaign committee to take him to the White House.

"I just have to work hard," Dennerll said. "If I work hard then it will happen. I have the ability and the determination to do this.'

Currently superintendent of the Freedom Academy, a private nondenominational school, and of Griswold High School, also a private school, Dennerll held political office as a Cleveland city councilman for three terms from 1957 to 1964.

His background in education makes him an appealing candidate to college students, Dennerll said. And having to work his way through college makes him better able to understand the difficulties of paying for a college education. Dennerll is begin-by visiting major college campuses.

Robert Szabo, Dennerll's press secretary, said the support of college students is important to the campaign.

"We are going to be hitting most of the college campuses," Szabo said. "They are the future of America, and the students are interested in what is happening to their country."

After New York, Dennerll and his committee tentatively plan to visit North Carolina, Florida State, Boston University and University of Texas-El Paso.

Dennerll said college students must vote for a candidate who is not in the national spotlight.

"It's time for (college students) to elect somebody who understands their situation. They need to vote for somebody other than who the media says," Dennerll said.

Szabo said the lack of a strong front runner helped Dennerll to decide to run for president.

"About a year ago we were in the New England area to 'test out the waters' and many people could not name any of the candidates. Even in Massachusetts, many didn't know who (Massachusetts Gov. Michael) Dukakis is. That's when we decided that we had as good a chance as any."

ning his campaign trail in New York welfare and for college students.

"When I was in college, I had to work my way through," said Dennerll. "In order to help get through, I lived on campus, in a trailer for $18 a month. Now they are trying to put people up in condo-type housing and they can't afford it.'

Dennerll's experience with being careful with his money carries over to how he is running his campaign. He said he refuses to go to the business community for money that will all have to be paid back. Instead, he hopes to rely on private donations, and volunteer workers for his cause. Presently, his election committee consists of Szabo, a secretary and two volunteers.

"We work as hard as possible, and try to spend as little money as possible," said Dennerll.

Dennerll describes the amount of money spent on national defense as a rich, welfare system. He said it is useless to provide tax money to build things that don't work. Instead, the money should be be spent for causes such as welfare, medical needs and education.

"I believe in a strong defense, but not a foolish defense. Our first obligation is to our youth, and spending all that money on defense is like giving to the church before you feed your family," said Dennerll.

Dennerll has filed the necessary papers with the New Hampshire secretary of state to be placed on the Feb. 16 primary ballot.

Along with the New Hampshire ballot, Dennerll is on the ballots in Louisiana, Missouri, Texas, Arkansas, and Oklahoma. Dennerll said that besides the top seven candidates, he is on more state ballots than anyone else, and is looking into the actions necessary to take in order to be placed on other state ballots.

tempts K-Staters

By The Collegian Staff

More than 100 students, faculty and staff have bought tickets to attend the first dessert theater at K-State.

The Neil Simon comedy "Barefoot in the Park" will be presented at 7 p.m. Thursday in the Union Ballroom as part of the event.

A cast of four from the Alpha Omega Players of the Reperatory Theatre of America will be performing the play. The cast is part of a national touring company which tours nine to 10 months out of the year and boasts of more performances annually than any other of its kind.

Audience members will have a choice of three desserts, which will be served at 7 p.m., followed by the performance at 8 p.m. The dessert selections are a doublediablo chocolate tort, strawberry cheesecake and a lime pie with blueberry glaze.

"Since we are dealing with a student body, we felt it would be more cost efficient to have a dessert theater than the more expensive dinner theater," said Lisa Kratz, UPC program adviser.

The comedy deals with a newlywed couple who sets up housekeeping in a rickety old apartment. Conflicts occur with the bride's mother and a nosey neighbor. A movie, starring Jane Fonda and Robert Redford, was made of the play during the 1960s.

The carefree bride asks her serious husband to walk barefoot through the park, during the winter, to test his love for her.

A full house is expected, Kratz said. Tickets are on sale until noon on Wednesday at the Union Activities Center for $4.50 per person. Stage-side tables will be reserved on a first-come, firstserve basis.

Buffs won't be pushover for league leaders

By Tom Morris Sports Writer

Most coaches would agree an easy road game in the Big Eight Conference doesn't exist, and K-State's matchup tonight against Colorado in Boulder won't be a breather despite the Buffaloes' 4-11 overall and 0-2 conference records.

The Wildcats have dominated the series against CU, winning 68 of the 92 games played. However, K-State hasn't been overly successful at Boulder, posting a 22-18 mark.

"Boulder is always a tough place to play. Traditionally, people just don't go there and win easily," said team is 10-4 overall and atop the Big Eight ranks at 2-0.

Take last season for example. After a 1-11 start in Big Eight play, the Buffs knocked off the University of Kansas, 66-56, within the friendly confines of the University of Colorado Events/Conference Center.

In addition, Colorado has had a week off since a 96-76 loss to the University of Oklahoma.

"It gives us a chance to regroup, gives us some time to look at a film...and gives us a little more time to get ready for an excellent K-State team," CU Coach Tom Miller said.

Colorado, though, isn't the same

6-foot-10 forward - who led the team in scoring, rebounding, field goal and free throw percentages the past two seasons - jumped ship to the University of Iowa.

Since Bullard went to Iowa, it's only natural another Iowa native shoulders the offensive burden. Scott Wilke, a 6-foot-10 senior center from Panama, Iowa, leads the team with an average of 21.2 points per game. No one else on CU's roster averages in double figures.

"Scott Wilke is one of the best players in the conference to build a team around, and Colorado is a patient bunch. They work the ball K-State Coach Lon Kruger, whose team without Matt Bullard. The around and look for Wilke, and his scoring average indicates they are successful in that area," Kruger said.

Wilke was an honorable mention All-Big Eight performer in both The Associated Press and United Press International listings last year, and is third in rebounding (8.8) and fifth in conference scoring this season.

"Scott is a different kind of center than others in this league," Miller said. "He's not the quick kid like (Oklahoma's) Harvey Grant or Stacey King, but he's very solid. He plays good defense, knocks the ball in the hole and his numbers speak for themselves."

At Monday's practice, Kruger said

Missouri next foe for struggling K-State

By Chase Clark Sports Writer

Going into tonight's game, the K-State women's basketball team is finding it harder and harder to keep the win column ahead of the loss column.

The Lady Cats, 7-9 overall, will square off against the University of Missouri at 7:30 p.m. in Aheam Field House. The Lady Cats will be looking for their first Big Eight Conference win after losing their first four conference games.

"The kids still have confidence, they just need to quit beating themselves," Lady Cat Coach Matilda Mossman said. "We've been shooting bad and having lots of turnovers. We just need to stop that. When we get by that, we'll do OK."

The Lady Cats lost their conference opener Jan. 12 to Oklahoma State University, 87-64. Their other conference losses have come against the University of Oklahoma, 96-65; the University of Nebraska, 82-72; and the University of Colorado, 84-58.

"I hope we can get through the first seven games of the Big Eight," Mossman said. "That hasn't been very easy for us because our first three games on the road were against the three best teams in the conference."

Mossman realizes the Lady Cats have very little chance of repeating as conference champions. K-State will be fortunate to finish in the top four in the conference. But that doesn't mean she or the team is just going to let this season slide by and wait until next

"I think we have to go through that first round and play everybody and then the second time around our players are going to feel a lot more comfortable," she added. "They are going to know what to expect, and if we can just keep our heads up, I think we can start building some steam in the second

K-State has two players averaging in double figures on offense. Sophomore forward Janet Madsen leads the team with 13.3 points and 5.1 caroms per game. Freshman guard Nadira Hazim is collecting 11.2 points and 5.0 rebounds an outing.

The Lady Tigers were 11-6 overall and 3-1 in the conference. Missouri opened up Big Eight play with a win over the University of Kansas.

Three starters and five other players have returned from last year's Missouri squad that finished with a 20-9 record and a share of the conference championship.

Missouri's junior starting center, Tracy Ellis, is leading the Lady Tigers with 17.9 points and 9.8 rebounds per game. Sophomore guard Sandi Prophete is scoring 15.1 points and grabbing 6.1 boards a game.

The only other Lady Tiger averaging in double figures is junior forward Lisa Ellis who averages 12.3 points per outing. "They are a lot more balanced team than they have been in the past," Mossman said.

"They are averaging 80 points per game, but they're giving up 75 points.' NOTES...K-State leads the series with Missouri 16-14...The Lady Cats hold a 10-2

Lady Cats still have high hopes

By Chase Clark Sports Writer

Just because a team is young and inexperienced, that doesn't mean it can't be competitive. Take the K-State women's basketball team as an example.

The Lady Cats are comprised of no seniors, one junior, six sophomores and four freshmen. Add to these seemingly undefeatable odds the fact that their only junior is a junior-college

Sum it all up and you get a very young team with no true seniority or leadership and little to no experience in NCAA Division I collegiate basketball.

But at least one other factor must be considered in the equation. This is a young team that doesn't know it isn't supposed to beat older, more experienced teams. And better yet, the 11 members of the Lady Cat squad have at least one thing in common - they all hate to lose and refuse to admit defeat until the final buzzer sounds.

"Our kids have never given up," State coach Matilda Mossman said. "Our kids have never gone out and embarrassed us by the way they played on the floor. They have given us their full cooperation and their full intensity and that's going to really pay off for them in the long run."

"I have complete faith in this team," Mossman said. "I think they are going to go through it all and in the end they are going to be successful. And they are going to be successful this year."

With the majority of the Lady Cats new to the program, problems have arisen. They don't always understand what the coaches want out of them, but they always try to do what is asked of them and they always give 110 percent, Mossman said.

K-State has demonstrated it's an upand-down team, but that's the way a young team is supposed to be, Moss-

"Some nights we are going to go out and blow people off the floor and the next night we're going to come out and look like we don't know what we're doing," she said. "But that's just due to youth and inexperience. Any young team is going to perform that way."

COLUMBIA, Mo. - University of Missouri officials planned to meet Tuesday with members of a student group whose taunts during pre-game warmups caused Iowa State forward Jeff Grayer to go into the stands.

Grayer admitted after the Saturday game that the taunts threw him off his game, a 119-93 loss for the then-No. 10 Cyclones.

The group, a loosely knit, rowdy group which calls itself the Antlers, referred to Grayer's mother as a "fat cow" and called him "Mama's boy." "I talked to one of them before the

They can cheer for their team, and I don't mind if they taunt me. But when they want to get that personal, that's where I draw the line. That can cause fights."

K-State Associate Athletic Director Lee Moon said to his knowledge, K-State teams had never been the subject of anything but "normal harassment" when playing at Missouri.

Missouri Athletic Director Jack Lengyel said he called Iowa State Athletic Director Max Urick on Monday to apologize.

"We all have concerns," said Joe Castiglione, associate director for marketing at Missouri. "They are not an athletic-department organization. For the most part they have been very creative. Once in a while, they get out department does feel responsible for the conduct of K-State fans.

"We worry about the conduct of our student body and our fans," he said. "We hope they don't do things to bring discredit on the teams or the fans we have. We won that sportsmanship trophy last year, and the fans are as much a part of that as anybody.

Moon was refering to K-State's selection as the 1986-87 Big Eight Conference Sportsmanship Award for basketball, chosen by conference basketball officiating supervisors and basketball officials.

Moon also said the athletic department has received calls and complaints about the use of obscenities during games at Ahearn Field House.

"This bothered everybody quite a bit," he said. "It's gotten to a point where it's something we don't need. I'm concerned and would like every-

> "At the game it's pretty hard," said Iowa State Coach Johnny Orr. "I think you can control it before the game, like the situation we had at Missouri. They won't let us go to the game, they delay us getting there. They went to our hotel and were standing there yelling at us. I thought that was really bush."

Union director candidate euphoric about progress

By Greg Vogel Collegian Reporter

Jack Sills is "high" on the Union.

Sills, who has served as acting director of the Union for eight months and is currently vying for director, credits part of K-State's recent enrollment upswing to the Union's success.

"As K-State Union associate director and also acting director for the last eight months, I feel confident and proud to report of the Union's role in the enrollment turnaround we are experiencing," Sills said.

Sills was the third of four candidates to speak for the director's position. He spoke Tuesday in an open forum.

One way the Union has contributed to the enrollment increase is that it contributes to the recruitment and retention of students, he said.

"The K-State Union contributes to the satisfaction and thus retention of students by fulfilling its roll of a college union and meeting the needs and expectations of currently enrolled students," Sills said. A satisfied student is more likely to remain at his or her present institution, he said.

Sills, who retired this fall from the U.S. Army Reserves, said he believes his experience as a colonel and a commander of reserve units in Kansas can help him in the responsibility of the K-State Union director's job.

"Specifically valued to me from my military education and experience is the way a commander utilizes staff in arriving at a decision," Sills said.

The input of staff can be used to provide alternatives that can be helpful in making a decision, he

"The result is that the responsibility rests on the one individual, but input has been provided by several," Sills said.

Many principles of the Army can be applied to a union director, the union staff and operating departments, he said.

"My philosophy of leadership is to value input from the lowest level possible in the initiating of ideas,' Sills said.

The team concept must be emphasized, he said, adding that it is essential for staff to provide input. He attributes the Union's success to the three past directors, all of whom Sills has served under.

"It has been my good fortune to work for all three of these former directors and to learn from them and see them succeed," Sills said.

Sills came to the Union in 1962 as an accountant after teaching high school.

"I believe it to be accepted as fact that the K-State Union is one of the very best college unions in the United States, and I also believe that it is one of the very best in the world," Sills said.

If he becomes permanent director of the K-State Union, the Union will continue to adapt, he said.

"(The union staff) would continually look forward to a change in the situation as the University's mission and goal changes," Sills

Drum major tryouts to begin

By The Collegian Staff

Seventeen students will be competing today and Thursday to fill three drum major positions in the K-State Marching Band.

The drum majors will be selected on the basis of their overall performance, a question-and-answer period with several judges, a teaching session and their ability to conduct a pep band.

Tryouts are held every year, but there are more students going for a position this year than there have been in past years, said Stan Finck, assistant professor of music and director of bands.

The students will be competing for three of the four positions that are open. The fourth spot will be filled by a returning drum major.

'The students probably see a better chance of making it (this semester). Because when there is only one opening, you know you have to be No. 1, better than anyone else," Finck

Students must be in the band for at least one year before they are eligible to try out. Finck said once they are selected, drum majors retain their positions until they wish to quit, which is usually when they graduate.

The job of drum major includes "a pile of work, especially for a nonpaying job," he said.

The drum majors are responsible for directing and instructing the band, which comprises more than 200 members, during football games, practices and parades.

Crocodile kills pregnant woman

By The Associated Press

NAIROBI, Kenya - A crocodile in northeastern Kenya killed a pregnant woman who was bathing in a river on Tuesday, police said.

Villagers at Malindi Ngwena ran to the Tana River when they heard body surfaced. screams from Mwana-Ahu Bishen, 22, but found only churning waters, said a police official, who by custom was not identified. They got into canoes and beat the water with paddles for more than an hour until her

In another attack on the same river Tuesday, police saved a 10-year-old boy from the jaws of a crocodile minutes after the reptile dragged him from the river bank, where he was watering goats.

Committee OKs nominee Kennedy

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Anthony M. Kennedy's Supreme Court nomination sailed unanimously through the Senate Judiciary Committee on Wednesday and went to the Senate floor for an expected swift confirmation.

Majority Leader Robert Byrd, D-W. Va., a committee member, said he would be willing to waive procedural requirements to allow a Senate vote Friday or Monday on President Reagan's selection of the federal appellate judge from Sacramento, Calif.

The committee's action was praised by Reagan and Attorney General Edwin Meese III, with the president saying it "gives us considerable confidence that the nation will soon have a full court." Reagan said: "I look forward to a positive vote soon by the Senate that will bring this distinguished and scholarly legal mind to the court."

Before the 14-0 vote, senators praised the 51-year-old Kennedy as open-minded, an advocate of the constitutional right of privacy, one who respected Supreme Court precedent and a judge with an expansive view of constitutionally protected liberties.

But liberal senators also said Kennedy's former memberships in clubs with few women members, and some of his more than 400 decisions, showed an insensitivity to women and minorities. These lawmakers expressed hope, however, that Kennedy would change his views on the

Despite the unanimous vote, there were moments of acrimonious debate at the committee meeting not about Kennedy, but over the defeat of Reagan's first nominee for the high court vacancy, Robert H.

Bork was so much on senators' minds that Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa., kept referring to Bork in his remarks when he meant to say Kennedy.

The most vivid statement came from Sen. Gordon Humphrey, R-N.H., who said he was looking for a reason that Kennedy was cautious during his confirmation hearings, in setting boundaries on the right of privacy.

Humphrey said he concluded Kennedy "was being ultra-careful ... with the entrails of Robert Bork still on the floor" and "still dangling from the chandeliers."

"Judge Kennedy didn't want his guts ripped out by the senators on this committee, senators, some of whom in the debate over the Bork nomination, wittingly or unwittingly, functioned as front men for powerful lobbying groups opposed to Robert Bork.'

Disputing Sen. Charles Grassley, R-Iowa, Sen. Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz., said Bork "was not lynched by politics."

Bork was defeated because senators "didn't think he would interpret the Constitution in a meaningful and fair way," said DeConcini, a selfdescribed conservative.

Regents request more funding

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - A State Board of Regents official asked a legislative committee Wednesday for more money for state universities than Gov. Mike Hayden has recommended, but the panel's chairman was skeptical that lawmakers would agree to add the extra dollars.

Stanley Z. Koplik, regents executive director, praised Hayden's proposed budget for Fiscal Year 1989, which begins July 1, but said Hayden had recommended financing only about 80 percent of the first year of a three-year regents plan to increase faculty salaries and aid for regents institutions.

In not proposing full financing of the Margin of Excellence program, Koplik said, the governor left out increases for research and degree programs. Hayden did propose financing most of the salary increases for which the board has

"It's driven by a desire to, frankly, get our institutions back into the competitive game," Koplik told the House Appropriations Committee. "One of the goals of the program is to remove ourselves from spectator

However, the committee's chairman, Rep. Bill Bunten, R-Topeka, said Hayden's recommendations were reasonable. Bunten, a close Hayden associate, has said Hayden's proposed budget looked like one "I'd written myself."

"They (NASA) aren't going to be flying any civilians for a while. Because of the accident, things have been put on hold," Buyle said.

The disaster pushed launch dates back at least three years, he said. Ironically, the Challenger's failure hasn't hurt K-State's research. "It was of no disadvantage to the

Two years after the explosion of the space shuttle Challenger, grade school students still remember Christa McAuliffe, who was to be the first teacher in space. Maryanne Busby was in the fifth grade at Manhattan's Eugene Field School when the Challenger tragedy occurred.

"We were sitting in class talking and having a good time waiting for news of the launch," Maryanne, now a seventh-grader, said. "Our fifth-grade teacher had been watching the launcn. She came running into our class saying the shuttle had blown up.

"The class froze in silence — no one knew what to think," she said. The dimension of the tragedy wasn't immediately apparent to several of her classmates, Maryanne

"Several of the girls in the class began to cry, but many of the students didn't really understand what had happened," she said.

Farm vehicle laws may change

WICHITA - Farm and ranch families who operate certain vehicles may have to obtain commercial driver licenses if new federal regulations are put into effect as proposed.

For years, state laws have allowed people involved in agriculture to drive large trucks associated with that pursuit without having anything more than a common Class C driver's license.

The Commercial Vehicle Safety Act of 1986 may change that. The far-reaching legislation wasn't really focused on farmers and ranchers. "It's definitely directed at commercial vehicle safety and accident experience," said Fred McGraw, a spokesman at the Federal Highway Administration's regional office in Kansas City,

"While their intent is good, they've gone out here with a mop and plan to wipe up everybody. Department of Transportation should require commercial licenses for only those engaged in the commercial business of hauling," said Doyle Rahjes, president of the Kansas Farm Bureau, the state's largest farm

The American Farm Bureau Federation, with which Kansas Farm Bureau is affiliated, is fighting the regulations at the national level.

Rahjes is urging farmers and ranchers to write the Federal Highway Administration office in Washington, D.C., to protest before the public comment period closes Feb. 9.

Besides requiring a commercial license for operating trucks weighing 26,001 pounds or more, the proposed regulations would apply to vehicles as small as a pickup truck if the truck had on board a bulk fuel tank that could carry 110 gallons or more.

"We believe in Kansas, as across the country, most people are opposed to Contra aid," said Ken Cott, a history professor at Washburn University. "People in Kansas, by the thousands, have been expressing opposition to support of the Nicaragua Contras."

Cott, Lamar and Vernon Stevens, a retired Army Reserve officer from Salina, appeared at a Statehouse news conference to talk about the television ad and to discuss the effort to get Congress to reject President Reagan's call for additional aid to

Copies of nurses' test stolen

TOPEKA - The Kansas State Board of Nursing said Wednesday it will administer its registered nurses' examination as planned on Feb. 2 and 3, even though the test's security has been breached.

Scibetta said Kansas test scores will be analyzed statistically to check for evidence that the test taker had prior access to the

Two East Germans cross Wall

BERLIN - Two East Germans using a ladder scaled the Berlin Wall under fire from communist guards before dawn Wednesday and fled safely to West Berlin, police and residents

The fugitives then went to a bar in West Berlin before reporting to police.

The men, aged 20 and 23, suffered only minor abrasions from their climb, said a West Berlin police spokesman who asked not to be identified.

They made their escape about 12:45 a.m. into the Neukoelln district of West Berlin, police said. Residents said they heard East German guards fire three shots.

The Berlin Wall is about 13 feet high where the escape occurred.

At least five East Germans have fled over communist fortifications into West Germany and West Berlin this year.

Cruise missile test successful

COLD LAKE, Alberta - This year's second test of an unarmed U.S. Air Force cruise missile was completed successfully Tuesday over northern Canada.

The test had been postponed three times.

The missile landed on the Primrose Lake air weapons range near Canadian Forces Base Cold Lake on Tuesday afternoon, three hours and 43 minutes after it was released over the Beaufort Sea from a U.S. Air Force B-52 bomber, said Major Jan Martinsen of the base at Cold Lake.

"It was extremely successful," she said. "The missile was launched on time and crossed the target on time. ... It was really quite extraordinary."

The missile — in a carbon-copy of a test held a week ago - flew 1,500 miles down the Mackenzie River valley, across a corner of the Northwest Territories and British Columbia and then east through northern Alberta.

It landed at the weapons range on the Alberta-Saskatchewan border, 175 miles northeast of Edmonton.

University revises logo policy

By Steven Zadina Collegian Reporter

K-State is revising its licensing program to a no-exemptions policy in licensing its name, logos and symbols on commercial products. The policy revision will simplify its licensing procedure.

The old policy, which was nearly five years old, was revised because of exemptions included in the old contract. Some businesses including the Union Bookstore, Varney's Book Store, Ballard's Sporting Goods and other local businesses were exempt because they had supported the University in the past through promotions and by backing campus organizations.

"Around here, it's hard to tell where the campus ends and the community starts; we grew together," said John Fairman, assistant vice ram. These exemptions made it diffi- ing fees under the exemptions policy, cult to determine whether any store Fairman said. should pay licensing fees.

Businesses that were exempt under the old contract should feel little or no effect from the new contract, he said. The licensing fees that are collected are usually built into the manufacturer's cost whether or not they actually pay a licensing fee.

The only way these businesses should be concerned is through things like T-shirt iron-on transfers which may be subject to licensing in the future, Fairman said.

Under the new policy, Collegiate Concepts Inc./International Collegiate Enterprises Inc., based in Canoga Park, Calif., serves as the University's exclusive licensing representative for all products using K-State trademarks.

K-State was losing approximately 50 percent of its potential earnings under the previous policy because president for University relations and the licensing agent was unsure about administrator of the licensing prog- who should and shouldn't pay licens-

He said he expects the University to receive an additional $5,000 annually by adopting the no-exemptions policy. The University received about $10,000 last year under the old

In addition, the new policy should make the licensing and enforcing procedure easier and promote licensing growth.

Under the no-exemptions policy, campus organizations that want to use the K-State logos must get the product licensed.

"This will mean submitting a sample of or detailed plans for the product with a formal request to my office for a limited time licensing agreement," Fairman said, adding that sometimes there will be a small charge and often it will only be a "token charge." There will be no charge for items to be given away.

The University receives 6.5 percent of the cost of each item carrying the K-State logo. Of this Collegiate program.

Concepts Inc./International Collegiate Enterprises Inc. gets 3.5 percent. For this fee Collegiate Concepts supplies lawyers, promotes the use of K-State logos and approves all products to ensure quality control, liability protection and the proper use of University logos.

"The new program, through revenue collected by licensing, has the potential to raise money for the University that we can't do through state funding," Fairman said.

The money received through the program is used primarily for promotional activities for K-State, including radio ads, student recruitment and the purchase of promotional material for some campus organizations. It has also been discussed that some of the money could be used for scholarship programs. However, any money slated for scholarships will be determined by the amount of money received through the licensing

Second AIDS

By The Associated Press

NEWARK, N.J. - A second AIDS virus that was discovered 21/2 years ago in West Africa and later spread to Europe has now been discovered for the first time in a patient in the United States, researchers said Wednesday.

The researchers at the University of Medicine and Dentistry of New Jersey said it is the first time the virus has been seen in the Western Hemisphere. They said the patient was exposed to the virus in West Africa.

The virus is called HIV-2, for human immunedeficiency virus, type 2. That distinguishes it from the original AIDS virus, designated

The university said in a statement that investigations have revealed no evidence that the patient with HIV-2 has spread the virus to anybody else in the country.

Dr. Myron Essex, a researcher at Harvard University, has maintained the HIV-2 virus does not cause illness as severe or in the same frequency as the HIV-1 virus, a view disputed by researchers in the United States and France.

"It was inevitable that we'd see a case here. But there is no cause for alarm," Essex said Wednesday.

Luc Montagnier of the Pasteur Institute in Paris, who discovered HIV-2 and was one of the discoverers of the original AIDS virus, said illness caused by the HIV-2 virus is exactly the same as the illness caused by HIV-1.

ence Thursday. Last June at the international AIDS conference in Washington, researchers predicted that the virus would soon arrive in the United States, but they said it would not herald a second AIDS epidemic.

"It's not a cause of great concern from the public's point of view," Dr.

James Curran, head of the AIDS program at the Centers for Disease Control, said in June. "But it will be a problem for scientists trying to develop vaccines and treatments.

"The disease is a subset of the current disease," Curran said. "The same people who are at risk of AIDS now will be at risk from this virus. We don't anticipate it creating any other risk groups or causing a different kind of disease."

A screening test for HIV-2 has been developed and is awaiting approval by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration, Curran said.

Collegian Columnist

Many of our current leaders in Washington must have had instructors similar to the ones I've experienced. However, while they were trying to write and talk as specifically as possible to please their curious English mentors, something went wrong.

Our faithful leaders, using their portable, hand-held communication inscribers (pencils), suffered an incomplete success in their utilization of specific inscriptive communication. In other words, they can't write understandably.

Instead of using specific descriptions to aid in the communication of ideas, people have begun using overly specific descriptions that serve to completely muddle communication and bewilder the listener. Yes, it's possible to

Let's use Oliver North, for example - not that he hasn't been used as an example by enough other columnists already. Here is a man who uses so much description that he can make even the worst things sound good.

This is a man who doesn't lie, although he admittedly "withholds information." And he doesn't use lies in his reports, although he radically different from the truth." Now is this a painstakingly careful description, or

North is only one among many who persist in using such inventive speech. For example, former National Security Council director John Poindexter's evasive testimony included talk of such things as "residuals" (money), "non-log items that were kept out of the system so that outside knowledge would not necessarily be derived from having the documents themselves" (destroyed documents), and "how to use a technical implementation without a substantive decision" (transferring millions of government dollars without approval).

I don't mean to pick on North or Poindexter; they've certainly been picked on enough. They just make good examples. I could just as easily discuss Reagan's labeling of the Granada invasion as a "rescue mission." However, there are even better examples in use in the common world around us.

Military personnel have been heard referring to bullet holes as "ballistically induced apertures in the subcutaneous environment." Now that's certainly specific, but not very clear. Other equally confusing phrases have been used to refer to tents as "framesupported tension structures"; to killing as "terminating with extreme prejudice"; and to toothpicks as "wood interdental stimulators."

Now you're probably thinking, "Hey, that's kind of funny, but of course I would never use those sort of phrases in real life. It's just too Orwellian for me." Meanwhile, as you read the personal correspondence from was provided with additional input that was your mother, the domestic engineer, you hear the sanitation engineers picking up the excessive waste products and refuse outside while you wait until it is time to go to your job at the grocery store as a career associate scanning professional.

It's happening in all aspects of our lives at an alarming rate. This trend to make distasteful ideas more palatable for the masses by using sugar-coated euphemisms has resulted in referring to nuclear war as "the ultimate high-intensity warfare" and human war casualties as "collateral damage." The impacts could be enormous.

With the aid of television, which projects an emotional appeal to the masses, politicians can use this confusing "doublespeak" to grossly evade the truth and to evoke American consent and support for horrendous activities that would never be supported if they weren't complicated by the technical terminology and confusing jargon. If a bank robbery is referred to as just "an unauthorized withdrawal," it loses its emotional effect and

We are approaching Orwell's 1984 faster than we thought. Occupations such as law and medicine have already made it impossible for the common person to understand the technical language used in these areas. With the major violators of clear language being in the services that deal directly with human well-being, it is time for something to be

We already have special English writing classes for certain occupations. That's nice, but so far it hasn't been too effective. Maybe it's time to dissolve these classes.

University trashes cans for redwood preference

They're disappearing.

Those purple trash cans the administration thought would raise school spirit and enrollment are being replaced by redwood trash brown, were painted purple during the first months of Jon Wefald's presidency in 1986. Enrollment was dropping and budgets were being cut - it was the worst of times.

Now that K-State has outgrown purple cans, it's ready for redwood. Actually, it is following a master plan developed in 1982 to promote a

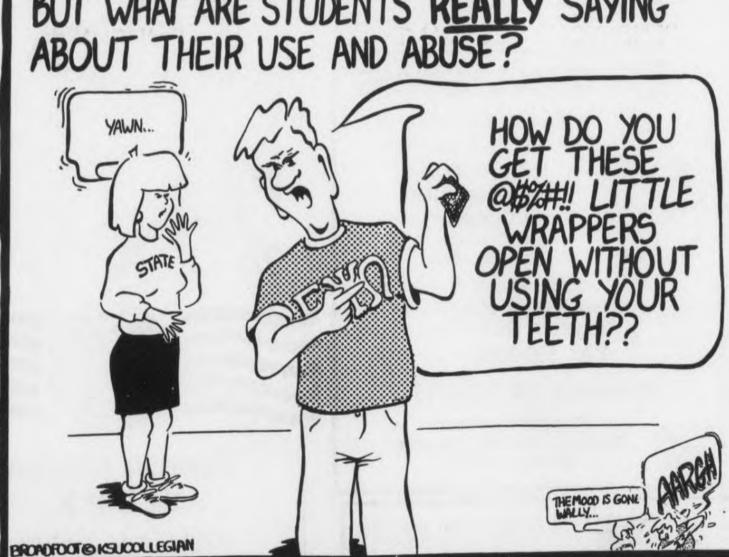

"parklike" atmosphere, which called for redwood bins.

It is debatable whether the purple cans were of more value in raising school spirit or in producing jokes.

Between 75 and 100 new bins are The trash cans, previously painted being placed around campus. The old cans will still be in the parking lots.

Some people wonder if the cost is worth ridding the campus of tackiness. Retailers sell the bins for about $500, but University Physical Facilities can make them for about $150 each. The total cost of the new bins is between $11,200 and $15,000.

Lafene's waste

I have been at K-State for 21/2 years and have yet to hear anything good about Lafene Health Center. It seems to be the joke of the campus. I know I have not had any good experiences with our medical clinic. It never fails - every time I go to see a doctor, I end up waiting for about an hour. Plus, why do I have to fill out a medical history report every time? They are supposed to keep them on file. Maybe it's something to keep my mind off the long wait.

I'm sure the doctors are highly qualified, but I'm always hearing about people who have been treated wrong or have received poor service, like an "I don't care attitude." If we are going to have a professional medical center on campus, it should be run like one. I realize nobody is perfect, but when it comes to someone's health you need to be darn

Editor,

Recently, there has been much talk about U.S. involvement in the Persian Gulf, Afghanistan and Central America. The dogging question is: Should the United States continue to help these people?

Mr. and Mrs. Smith, if you think that while you are snug in your homes and partying in your bars, fraternities and sororities - that any action taken by Congress will stop people even from New York. Even communists from fighting for freedom, you are mistaken.

Humans have been fighting for freedom well before St. Peter's guerrilla actions eastern Galilee, his awful patrol during Pas- used to be a nation of women and men, now sover in Jerusalem, his missions in Judea and Antioch, and still later guerrilla operations in Greece and Asia.

No matter how long and hard the road was, people have never stopped fighting oppressors and terrorists. Yet it seems like the freedom fighters are always denied and denigrated by lesser people.

Let's consider the Contras, for example. Mike Ribble Let's say that we stop aiding them, and they are stopped. For them, living under communism for one second is an honor they'd rather do without. Let's say the Sandinistas imprison them and kill their women and children, in a similar fashion as the children of Trotsky in Vietnam murdered the Vict Cong after the communist victory, according to the testa-ment of Truong Nhu Tang. What if the Contras were gone? What would happen then?

Hundreds, thousands of people from all corners of the earth would rise up to take their places - from the Qattara Depression in Egypt to the Montagnard villages in southeast Asia, from Afghanistan to Wroclaw, can't kill that fast.

The public perceptions of students at K-State amuse me. These people haven't suragainst the Herodians in the hills of north- rendered in these countries; we have! We we're a nation of sheep. So, we go back to our books, our drugs, our 16 million abortions, our parties and fancy clothes.

But, don't ever be mistaken. With our help or not, freedom guerrillas will fight from country to country; they will attack communists and terrorists from city to city, from town to town, from village to village, from block to block, from house to house, from room to room. They will always be visible, even in the dark, blood for blood.

We can only hope the humping parents of America are producing children who have as much high integrity, morality and sacrifice. Frank Padula

Committee exists to hear grade appeal

By Karen Allen Staff Writer

Students unsatisfied with their grades may be happy to know instructors don't always have the last word in grade appeals cases.

All grade appeals must be initiated within six months after the grade in question was issued, according to the process set in the K-State Student Handbook.

Although attempting to settle the dispute with the instructor is the first step, either party may appeal to the head of the department if the issue is not resolved.

In some cases, the issue may advance to the dean of the college most directly involved.

If the student or instructor is still unsatisfied, the case may be brought before the Undergraduate Grievance Committee.

The committee is composed of two faculty members, two students and one faculty chairperson. All academic grievance matters, including grade appeals and cheating, are brought before the committee.

The committee has the power to change a grade and has final jurisdiction in all cases. Paul Nelson, associate professor of statistics, was appointed chairman of the committee in September 1987. But he has yet to hear a grade appeal case.

"Nothing has been brought to my attention," Nelson said. He added that although the committee is called on "very rarely," it Teacher doesn't always have final say

The same is true for the College of Engiappeals have reached the college's Associate who also has not had a direct grade appeal made to him in recent years.

Hermann Donnert, professor of nuclear engineering and a former chairman of the grievance committee, said one reason for the decline of formal appeals is because the system is working.

"It is the court of last resort," he said. "The students are not pursuing it (further than the instructor), and the system is working.'

The system is set up so most of the grievances will work themselves out before reaching the committee, he said.

Donnert, who chaired the committee from 1978 to 1985, believes every student has the right to due process. "If a student can make a case that the instructor was arbitrarily unreasonable, then he has the right to be heard," he said.

Donnert said he heard many grade appeals cases while on the committee, including a number of cases where students appealed a B

In one instance, a student who was accused of cheating proved his innocence and the committee changed his grade of F to A, he

The majority of rulings in cheating cases have usually been settled in favor of the faculty, Donnert said.

"The faculty members usually nailed them against the wall," he said.

Students won 60 percent of the time in grade appeals cases, Donnert said. However, in some cases a grade could not be changed because it was simply a matter of a student not agreeing with an instructor's standards. Claire Dehon, associate professor of modern languages, heard only one grade appeal case while chairwoman of the grievance committee from 1985 to 1987. Dehon is supportive of the system.

Poor grades can lead to probation

By The Collegian Staff

A cumulative grade point average may not seem important to some people, but students who receive consistently low grades can be placed on a probationary status.

K-State's 1986-1988 General Catalog states that semester grades may be below 2.0 and not affect a student's status unless the cumulative average falls below 2.0.

A student may be on probation for as long as he or she is a student at K-State, depending upon the cumulative grade point

For students who live in residence halls or off-campus, being placed on academic probation poses fewer problems than for those living in Greek houses. There are no grade requirements to live in residence halls other than to meet the University requirements, said Bob Felde, assistant director of housing.

However, Greek houses have academic requirements, said Barb Robel, Interfraternity Council adviser. There are no universal guidelines, but most offer academic assistance - such as study programs and required study hours - for students with low grades.

Athletes are under the scrutiny of three different groups. The National Collegiate Athletic Association, Big Eight Conference and the University all set rules they must follow, said Mike Fisher, director of

The NCAA and Big Eight Conference rules are the same. For students with accumulated hours of 60 or fewer, a cumulative grade point average of 1.6 must be maintained. Students who have more than 60 hours must maintain a 1.8 GPA.

"Of course, a 2.0 cumulative (as required by the University) negates both of the Big Eight and NCAA requirements," Fisher Athletes must also be annually certified, Fisher said, and meet NCAA and Big Eight grade requirements.

In addition, freshman and transfer athletes must certify each semester their first year at a new university.

Scholarship winners to visit today

By Greg Vogel Collegian Reporter

If statistics hold true, about 76 percent of the 185 students expected to attend today's Scholarship Day should be attending K-State next fall.

Kansas high school students who have been awarded scholarships by K-State have been invited, along with their parents, to attend various informative sessions and other activities in the Union.

"Scholarship Day is our way of and financial aid.

recognizing and honoring the top high school scholars in Kansas, the scholars we have given prestigious scholarships to," said Larry Moeder, associate director of Student Financial Assistance and the coordinator of the event. The students will be attending sessions directed by faculty members and covering subjects relating to different colleges. Sessions will also be aimed toward parents to provide information on housing, admissions

Throughout the day, representatives from each of the deans' offices will be available to visit with students.

In the afternoon, each college will present information on curricula, course selection, departmental scholarships, honors programs and credit by examination.

There will also be a luncheon, after which students will be awarded scholarship certificates.

Moeder sees the day as a positive benefit for K-State.

"It's a good way to attract students and to let them know what's available at K-State," Moeder said. "We want to recruit top students to K-State - it just enhances the entire student body.'

In addition, it is hoped that since many of these students have been leaders in high school, they will take leadership roles at K-State.

Several scholarships have already been awarded to the students, including the Presidential, Putnam and Foundation scholarships.

Man dies after fire in hospital room

By The Associated Press

CEDAR VALE, Kan. - An El Dorado man died early Wednesday of burns suffered Tuesday morning in his room at the Cedar Vale Regional Hospital.

Jack E. Sade, 61, died at St. Francis Medical Center in Wichita, where he was taken by helicopter Tuesday afternoon.

Cedar Vale Police Chief Bob Burke said that Sade's clothing caught fire, causing second and third degree burns to 75 percent of his body. He said the cause of the fire was undetermined and was under investigation.

Burke said he did not know the reason for Sade's hospitalization.

Darrell Ringer speaks about the connection between the farm crisis in America and the crisis in Central America Wednesday evening. Ringer served as a state spokesman for the American Agriculture Movement in 1983. Speaker says economies aid companies, not people

By Janelle Larson Collegian Reporter

"Both Third World and agricultural economies are aimed to benefit multi-national corporations, not people," a spokesman for the American Agricultural Movement said Wednesday night at a meeting of the Manhattan Alliance on Central America.

Darrell Ringer spoke to a crowd of about 60 people on the topic "The Farm Crisis and the Crisis in Central America — Is There a Connection?"

"The Third World war is in the mid-section of the country," Ringer said, referring to the U.S. farm crisis.

The similarities between Third World countries and American agriculture are in the use and flow of capital, he said.

There are two theories about agricultural economies," Ringer said. One is that prices should be based on parity, covering the price of production and allowing for reasonable profit. The other is the free market, which is supported by those who have capital.

"We need to decide which is a just economic system," he said. "Even land-grant universities are betraying the people they were meant to help,'

"K-State research has encouraged farmers to increase their size and debt load and to change to singlecrop operations," Ringer said.

In meetings held Dec. 5 and 6 of 1987, the American Agricultural Movement approved a resolution calling for a committee to investigate possible legal action against K-State.

Reports published in December said the AAM believed K-State had used federal funds to conduct research in areas of agriculture that have become increasingly corporate-

"The over-riding purpose of the United States Agency for International Development is to get farmers in under-developed countries to raise crops for export," Ringer said.

Ringer, a fourth-generation farmer from Quinter, helped found the North American Farm Alliance.

Fat substitute developed

Product reduces said. calories

From Staff and Wire Reports

NutraSweet Co. on Wednesday unveiled the first all-natural substitute for fat that mimics its rich taste and texture but cuts the calorie content in ice cream, butter and other foods by up to 80 percent.

Visions of guilt-free treats inspired medical experts and investors alike to develop the substance, which is being called Simplesse and is made of ground-up protein from fresh egg whites or milk, the company said.

Simplesse does not require regulatory approval, and products using it could reach the market within 12 to 18 months, Robert Shapiro, NutraSweet's chairman and chief executive, told a crowded news conference. NutraSweet is the maker of the most widely used nocalorie sweetener.

According to Professor Harold Roberts, a dairy technologist in the Department of Animal Sciences, fat substitutes are really nothing new the technology has been worked on for years.

"The full impact of a product like this can't be fully assessed this early, but the introduction of margarbelieve we can expect this product Roberts said. to also make some impact," Roberts

The dairy industry has suffered many of the same problems other aspects of agriculture have, he said.

Consumption of dairy products is down overall, but products like ice cream, yogurt and cheese are holding their own or even increasing in sales, Shapiro said.

Simplesse relies on proteins, which can be altered in any number of ways, and the meat substitutes made from soybean protein can be used as an analogy for this product, Simplesse could help reduce diseases stemming from fat-heavy diets that cause 100,000 premature deaths annually in the United States, said Vernon Young of Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

"My colleagues and I are really very excited," said Young, a professor of nutritional biochemistry who was recently appointed to the scientific advisory board of the Skokie, Ill.-based NutraSweet.

Simplesse could help people lose weight and cut their cholesterol intake by providing a way to do so without sacrificing taste, Young said. "Food," he said, "is meant to be enjoyed."

"Under federal and state standards, dairy products made from fat substitutes are categorized as imitation dairy products," he said.

"There used to be laws in Kansas that excluded the use of fat substiine had a definite impact and I tutes, but this is no longer the case,"

The fat substitute even received a cautiously favorable reaction from the Center for Science in the Public Interest, a Washington-based watchdog organization.

The center has been lobbying against Procter & Gamble Co.'s proposed fat substitute, olestra, which was announced last May and is being scrutinized by the Food and Drug Administration.

"It (Simplesse) certainly offers interesting possibilities, although it doesn't mean automatic health benefits to consumers," said Dr. Michael Jacobson, the center's executive director.

In Washington, FDA spokesman Bill Grigg said, "The NutraSweet Co. has not yet provided the FDA with enough information for an appraisal, but the agency will look at the substance to determine whether it presents any regulatory or, in particular, safety issues."

The biggest drawback of Simplesse is that it cannot be used in frying or most kinds of baking because it congeals the same way as egg whites when heated. Heating it is harmless, but unappetizing.

Simplesse would allow calorie reductions in food servings ranging from 28 percent for yogurt to 54 percent for premium ice cream, 55 percent for cream cheese, 70 percent for refrigerated salad dressing and mayonnaise and 78 percent for butter, the company said.

Haiti: Images of democracy denied

Editor's Note: Collegian photographer Brett Hacker traveled to Haiti to cover that country's recent presidential election. His pictures and impressions create a portrait of the Western Hemisphere's poorest PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti — When Haitians returned to the polls Jan. 17, the Nov. 29 election day massacre was firmly fixed in their minds.

It was in November that Haiti's first attempt at a national election in 30 years was cancelled after widespread violence left 34 dead.

On Jan. 17, voting in polling places was practically nonexistent until mid-morning, when a slight busy period began. That period tapered off again by 3 p.m. until polling places closed at 6 p.m.

Although the second try at an election came off without any bloodshed, voters still did not have an unhampered election. Opposition leaders charged the election was a sham in which double voting and other irregularities inflated election officials' claims that 35 percent of 3 million eligible voters took part in the election.

The voting I saw was tainted by vote-buying and voter deception.

At one polling place in Port-Au-Prince, I turned a corner to see two young men washing from their index fingers the red ink used to prevent double voting by marking those who had already cast a ballot. There were reports of some people voting up to 10 times.

At one suburban polling place I saw minors voting. Reporters I met said they saw $1 per vote being paid to those who voted for the candidate who was proclaimed the winner of the election — university professor Leslie Manigat.

Nine finalists have been named in the competition for K-State's Classified Employee of the Year award. Three of the nine - one from each of the three employee categories - will be announced as winners by President Jon Wefald at an all-University ceremony March 23 in McCain Auditorium.

Jerre Fercho, director of Personnel Services and coordinator of the ceremony, said each winner will receive an engraved plaque and prizes totaling more than $500. The winners' names will also be permanently recorded on a plaque to be located in Anderson Hall.

In addition, the winners in each category will receive a reserved campus parking space, a family membership for one year to the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex, two tickets to an attraction at Fred Bramlage Coliseum and a $25 gift certificate from the K-State Union.

The three award winners will also draw for two season tickets to the 1988-89 K-State Players productions, two season tickets for the 1988 Wildcat football season and two tickets to each of two 1988-89 McCain productions.

Finalists come from three categories: office and clerical employees, skilled craft employees, and technical and professional employees.

Finalists in the technical and professional category are Charles E. Carney, an accountant for animal sciences and industry with 32 years of service; Sharon J. Hauck, administrative officer at the Registrar's Office with 17 years of service; and Linda Streeter, an accountant for the Budget Office with eight years.

In the skilled craft category, finalists are David Mitchell, facilities maintenance specialist for the dean's office in architecture and design with 11 years; Daniel J. Umscheid, animal caretaker for animal sciences and industry with seven years; and Randy Slover, physical plant supervisor for University Physical Facilities with

The finalists for the clerical and office category are Mitzie Wilson, office specialist for the Division of Biology with 17 years; Paula Seematter, office assistant for the Graduate School with 15 years; and Jan Hedrick, keyboard operator for News Services with three years.

Each finalist will receive a desk pen-and-pencil set for being recognized as one of the nine finalists.

The Classified Affairs Committee will interview the finalists' coworkers to determine the winners.

Retiring staff members will also be honored at the March event. Employees with 35 years of service will receive a gold pin. Employees completing five, 15 and 25 years will each receive sterling silver pins.

Lubbers nominates new director of ASK

By The Collegian Staff

A new campus director for Associated Students of Kansas has been nominated by Student Body President Troy Lubbers.

Scott King, junior in political science and public administration, will begin as head of the ASK office at K-State if he is confirmed by Student Senate at its meeting tonight.

Lubbers said he does not foresee any problems with the Senate confirming King.

King's experience was a key factor in the appointment, Lubbers said. King has been involved in ASK since his freshman year and was a student senator for one year.

"I chose Scott over the other applicants because of his ASK experience, his administrative abilities and issues concerning K-State," King the strong working relationship we said.

have," Lubbers said. "This year is a unique situation in that I am both student body president and ASK board chairman and those are the two positions the campus director must work with."

The campus director's duties involve coordinating lobby days, expressing K-State student concerns to the State Legislature, and educating students about what goes on in King describes the position as being a liaison between students and the legislature. If he is approved, King said his goals would include doubling the number of students currently involved in ASK.

No. 2 next for K-State

By Bill Lang Sports Writer

The K-State's Lady Cats game tonight with Louisiana Tech will be a "real lesson," as well as a chance to see what "top-ranked competition looks like," according to Coach Matilda Mossman.

"We're learning every time we step onto the floor," Mossman said. "This game will be a real lesson and one of a higher level."

The Lady Techsters come into Ahearn Field House with a 14-0 record and No. 2 ranking in the latest Associated Press women's college basketball poll.

"We've spent a lot of time getting ready for Missouri and Kansas, Mossman said. "This game is just stuck in there and we really haven't had much time to prepare for it.

"We're worried more about getting a win in the Big Eight right now," she added. "This game will give us a chance to see what topranked competition looks like."

Mossman said the Lady Cats chances of staging an upset don't look very promising.

"We're a young team and they are a very experienced team with a lot of depth and talent at each position," she said.

Louisiana Tech's starting lineup averages almost 65 points and 32 rebounds per game, while K-State's starting five averages 50 ppg and 25 rebounds per contest.

But the Lady Cats are not writing the game off.

"The girls are still holding their heads high," she said. "The girls are practicing as if they were 16-0 on the season and 4-0 in the conference.

"In this game we have nothing to lose," Mossman added. "We can learn a great deal and gain a lot from Mossman said the game also gives the people of Manhattan and the students a chance to see a top-ranked women's basketball program.

"Just having the chance to see them as a fan is worth the price of admission," she said. "We'll be out there giving it our best shot at trying to beat them, but just stepping on the same floor is something to be proud

Lady Cats drop fifth conference matchup

By Chase Clark Sports Writer

From the opening buzzer, there seemed to be little doubt K-State's women's basketball team was headed for its fifth loss in as many games in Big Eight Conference

The University of Missouri, 12-6 overall and 4-1 in conference play, came into Ahearn Field House Wednesday night and defeated the Lady Cats, 79-66. K-State's record dopped to 7-10 overall and 0-5 in the Big Eight.

"We're a team going up the iceberg and we can't get over the top," K-State Coach Matilda Mossman said, "We're climbing the hill. We're making strides. Just like in the second half when we got within nine and we had the ball. We're almost at the top, ready to take the step over and go up one more level, and all of a sudden we slide back to the bottom again.

"We just can't get over the top of the iceburg. We keep slipping back down. But we're going to do it, we're going to get over it someday," she added.

Missouri's Lisa Ellis scored the first points of the game to start off a 26-8 run by the Lady Tigers. The Lady Cats fought back to within 12 points, but fell behind by 17 at halftime, 44-27.

"Our mistake was going to a man-to-man defense in the first half." Mossman said. "They scored some easy layups against us. And then in our zone, we just didn't recover quick enough.

"I think offense is our problem," she said. "We took some horrible shots in the first half. As a result, they were getting long rebounds and scoring layups at the other end. We don't practice that way and we shouldn't be playing that way."

K-State came out in the last stanza and outscored Missouri 18-9 to close to within eight points with 11:47 left in the game. Missouri then went into a streak and stretched the lead to 20 points with 7:01 left in the game. The Lady Cats whittled away at the deficit and closed to within 12, 75-63, with 1:18 left before losing by 13 points, 79-66.

"I have to be proud of the team," Mossman said. "We certainly didn't give up - we didn't quit. When we made that run at them, got within nine and they pulled back out again, we could have folded our tents ... and said goodbye. But we didn't. We stayed in there and fought hard."

'Cats escape with victory

By Tom Morris Sports Writer

Just as it was with the infamous Alcatraz Prison, Big Eight Conference contenders have found it difficult to escape from the Colorado Events/Conference Center in Boulder with a win.

But K-State did just that Wednesday night, and managed to scrape out a 68-60 win against the Buffaloes. The Wildcats trailed by four, 49-45, with 7:15 left in the game, before going on a 13-0 stretch in the closing minutes to seal the win.

"(Colorado) out fought us ... until the last five or six minutes and that's not the way we've been successful," said K-State Assistant Coach Ron Stewart.

And K-State - 11-4 overall and 3-0 in conference play - proved it can win without a superhuman performance from Mitch Richmond, who was held to just 16 points.

"We were not shooting the ball well and Mitch ... in the past three or four games has developed a very strong pump fake. Tonight, Colorado just did not absolutely go for the fake," Stewart said.

Fred McCoy, as he did in the secsissippi University, picked up the offensive slack and led the 'Cats with 22 points — 14 in the second half. The 6-foot-7 junior center from Washington D.C. also shot 10-of-11 from the charity stripe. The Buffaloes proved they aren't a ond matchup against Southern Misone-man gang as previously believed. Standout center Scott Wilke was held to just 14 points, but freshman point guard Steve Wise went crazy against K-State's man-toman defense in the second stanza, scoring 12 of his career- and teamhigh 19 points.

Junior forward Brian Robinson shot six-of-six from the line and finished with 12 points for CU, now 4-12 overall and 0-3 in the Big Eight.

"We may have done a good job on Scott, but we didn't do a good job on the men who were setting the screens for him," Stewart said.

In the opening half, the 'Cats were uncharacteristically impatient and shot just 34.8 percent from the field - their worst first-half shooting performance of the season. But K-State's 3-2 zone defense held Colorado to just 38 percent from the field and the 'Cats built a two-point lead at

CBA may expand

Salina possible site

By The Associated Press

SALINA - A former commissioner of the Continental Basketball Association says Salina is one of five cities he is considering for an expansion team.

"My goal is real simple," James Drucker said during a telephone interview from his home in Philadelphia Tuesday. "I want to operate the most successful CBA team in the league. I don't want it to be the second best. I want it to be the best team in every aspect and that includes won-loss record and attendance. I want to really make it a showcase for the entire country to see."

Drucker, president of CBA Properties Inc., said he narrowed his search to five cities - Salina, Fargo, N.D., Fayetteville, N.C., Tucson, Ariz., and Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

The 42-year-old league, considered a farm system for the National Basketball Association, has 12 teams, including the Topeka Sizzlers. Drucker said his expansion team could be ready to play a 54-game schedule in November.

Drucker, who was the CBA com-receiving a franchise must have a 5,000- to 7,000-seat arena and no competition from professional or major college basketball, which are criteria Salina meets. He said it must also have the ability to sell 2,500 season tickets before the first game is

He set Feb. 15 as the date for the five cities to give him an answer on whether they want to proceed with the season ticket campaign that will run from the middle of February to the end of March.

Gerald Cook, president of the Salina Area Chamber of Commerce, said Tuesday his organization would meet with city leaders to see if interest is strong enough to pursue a franchise

"I think it holds a lot of potential for Salina to have a pro basketball team here because this is a big basketball town," Cook said.

Continental Basketball Association franchises are located in Albany and Rochester, N.Y.; Rockford and Moline, Ill.; Charleston, W.Va.; La Crosse, Wis.; Biloxi, Miss.; Pensacola, Fla.; Rapid City, S.D.; Savannah, missioner from 1978-86, said the city Ga.; Casper, Wyo.; and Topeka.

Once again, the Big Eight Conference has three teams among the top 20 in the Associated Press and United Press International polls. Oklahoma is 10th in both polls, while Iowa State is 12th in the AP poll and and 17th in the UPI poll. Missouri returns to this week's UPI poll, tied for 20th.

Iowa State mentor Johnny Orr wishes somebody would have asked him before scheduling back-to-back games with Oklahoma. The Cyclones played the Sooners Wednesday night in Ames, Ia. and will travel to Norman, Ok. Saturday to return the favor.

"I don't like it," Orr said. "I would have never done it if I had any say about it. Maybe if it was a poor team you wouldn't mind it, but I don't think anyone wants to play Oklahoma back-to-back."

Oklahoma Coach Billy Tubbs asked for the game to be changed so he could schedule a non-conference game Feb. 20 with New Mexico.

"We only have to prepare for one team," Tubbs said of the rare consecutive matchups. "We're going to play with it and not worry about the reason why it is. If we win both of them, then I think it would be the thing to do in the future. If we lose both of them, then I will never do it again." The Sooners won Wednesday's game, 109-86, recording their 1,000th victory. Three other conference teams have posted 1,000 wins and Missouri, 1,022. Lafester Rhodes continues to be a dominant force for the Cyclones. He scored 22 points against the Sooners Wednesday, and is averaging 23.0

Last year, Rhodes scored only 34 points during the season.

"He's done a heck of a job," Orr said. "I never dreamed Lafester would play like that in my wildest dreams. How could I? He had fouled out of every game he played over three minutes in."

Big Eight Notes

The conference will see its top two scorers go head to head Saturday in Lawrence, Kan.

Jayhawk Danny Manning and Wildcat Mitch Richmond rank one and two in scoring in Big Eight games. Manning averages 31.5 points per game, while Richmond averages 30.0 ppg. The pair ranks second and third in scoring in all games, with Manning canning 23.6 ppg and Richmond averaging 23.3

Larry Brown and crew will be going for their 11th straight victory over K-State, and their 55th straight win in Allen Field House. Should KU beat K-State Saturday, it will set a new record for consecutive conference victories at home with 24.

Ironically, they are tied with K-State in this category now. The Wildcats' 1949-53 teams posted 23 straight wins also. Heading into this week, the Big

NEW YORK — CBS affiliates will confer on whether to formally complain about Dan Rather's interview with Vice President George Bush, but the head of the group said Wednesday he thinks Rather "had an obligation" to ask tough questions.

Hayden's proposed budget contains $536.1 million in spending for the regents institutions, an increase of $37.1 million, or 7.4 percent. The regents had asked for an increase of $40.6 million, or 8.1 percent.

Hayden matched the regents' request by proposing a 5 percent increase in salaries for faculty and staff, recommending a 4 percent increase in student salaries and asking for a 4 percent increase in other operating expenses.

The regents and Hayden also agreed on increasing spending $7.2 million for maintenance, pay for promotions and funds to compensate for increased enrollments.

But the regents proposed an additional increase for research and teaching programs by another $8.9 million, and Hayden recommended a $2.1 million increase.

The regents also are asking for $6.3 million more to increase salaries at their universities by between 2.8 percent and 5.2 percent more. Hayden recommended spending $5 million, excluding research staff and administrators from the additional pay increases.

Hayden did propose spending $4.5 million on a 4 percent cost-of-living salary increase for regents employees that the board had not asked for.

It appeared the military junta, led by Lt. Gen. Henri Namphy, allowed Manigat to use every means possible to ensure his election to the presidency.

The National Electoral Council said Manigat defeated his 13 opponents in the presidential election with more than 50 percent of the Prior to the election, the Council announced a list of 11 candidates, eliminating those affiliated with the regime of Jean-Claude Duvalier. The action caused fighting between rival factions competing for the presidency.

At the insistence of the disqualified candidates, the issue was sent to the Haitian Supreme Court. The court ruled that three of the Duvalists could run in the presidential election, thus raising the number of names on the ballot to 14.

By doing so, the court was treading on new ground. The constitution states that no Duvalist can hold office for 10 years following the constitution's founding date.

Three of the four leading opposition candidates from the first election boycotted the Jan. 17 contest, claiming it would be a "sham of an election," with the results being orchestrated by the junta.

The three opposition leaders called for a general strike for both Jan. 16 and Jan. 17 - election day - but the strike was not unified and barely evident by the end of its first

Compounding the problems of the election - intended to be a first step toward building a democracy in the island nation - was the ignorance of Haiti's poorest people. Some of the people I spoke with in Cite Soleil - the slum area of Port-Au-Prince - didn't even know they were living on an island.

A Haitian soldier keeps a quiet guard in a suburban polling station outside of Port-Au-Prince. Few Haitians exercised their opportunity to is the disparity between the rich and the poor. The rich in Port-Au-Prince live on the side of a mountain, and living conditions deteriorate as one progresses down the mountain to Cite Soleil at sea level.

There, only 12 to 15 miles separate the rich and poverty-stricken, who live at opposite ends of the major street called Delmas.

The bottom line in Haiti is that the military is in power and has no

Also adding to Haiti's problems intention of relinquishing its grip on the country.

Haiti's election was a way of putting a puppet president in power to disguise the military's hand in running the country. It also gave the junta an opportunity to present a show election for the world to view and hopefully accept as the creation of a new government.

The reason there was no bloodshed this time, as opposed to the November election, was

On Nov. 29, it was different. There was the possibility that a president could be elected who would be less than accommodating to the wishes of the junta - something it felt it could not afford.

The thing I learned in Haiti is that everything that happens, happens for a reason. While on the surface, some things appear as if they have no motive, the opposite is the case. When citizens are killed and left in the streets for three days, the people are being sent a message.

When elections are rigged and the choice of candidates is determined by the government, the people are being sent a message.

And that message is a strong one: Democracy is not a possible reality in this country.

Bill could overload prisons

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - Before they debate a bill making it a felony to injure a person while driving under the influence of alcohol or drugs, members of the Senate Judiciary Committee said Wednesday they want to know how many more people it could place in the state's crowded prison system.

The committee's chairman, Sen. Robert Frey, R-Liberal, said he will ask Corrections Secretary Roger V. Endell to estimate how many more people could go to prison if the bill becomes law. Frey also said he wants Endell's department to provide such information for all bills that would make additional crimes felony

"My personal policy is to not do anything about new crimes until we do something about the prisons," Frey said before committee members voted to table the drunk driving bill.

Endell has told several legislative committees that he's interested in providing estimates of the effect of proposed legislation on the prison system because the system is severely overcrowded. The number of prisoners in Kansas prisons is growing by 400 a year, more than any other state in the nation, Endell has told legislators.

Under current law, a DUI driver who causes an accident in which someone is injured cannot be charged with anything tougher than DUI. However, if the driver kills someone in a DUI accident, the driver can be charged with aggravated vehicular homicide, a Class E felony.

The new bill also would make injuring someone in a DUI accident a Class E felony.

Local man subject of FBI surveillance

By Christine Doll Staff Writer and Erwin Seba Government Editor

How Steven Otto gave the Federal Bureau of Investigation the impression he was part of a gun-running operation to leftist rebels in El Salvador is known only to the bureau.

Soft-spoken and idealistic, Otto is bewildered by reports that he was under FBI surveillance when he was president of the Committee in Solidarity with the People of El Salvador at The Wichita State University. "Why they decided to focus on me, the

It was almost to the point investigated because of an allegation that it was supplying arms to opposition guerrillas in El Salvador to overthrow the U.S.-backed Otto said in an interview at his Junction City government.

Otto, whose father is an employee with security clearance at the Boeing Co. in Wichita, said he was not surprised the WSU group was watched as part of a nationwide investigation of CISPES. What does surprise him, however, are the tactics he thinks the FBI employed. Looking back, the unexplained now becomes understandable to him.

"What surprised me was when I found out they were out in the parking lot taking pictures of our friends coming and leaving," he

Not only did FBI agents take pictures of the parking lot, but inside his apartment as well, he said.

"There were a couple of times when we saw flashes coming from the parking lot. We couldn't figure out what it was," he said.

He said he could not imagine why the FBI would want to watch him at home. It was almost as unexplainable as when a man, at a CISPES meeting, asked if the group was sending guns to El Salvador.

"We thought it was a pretty strange question at the time," he said.

Although the FBI was suspicious of Otto, his former employer, Phil Vega, editor of the Junction City Daily Union, trusted him enough to let him cover the city and county government as a reporter.

"It's kind of ridiculous," Vega said. The Daily Union was one of the papers Otto worked for after graduating with a degree in journalism and a minor in political science.

Even if Otto was inclined to be a part of a weapons-smuggling operation, he said there was little he could do in Wichita.

"I can't imagine what they thought a terrorist cell in Wichita was going to do," he

Issue could involve all Kansas colleges

By Christine Doll Staff Writer and Erwin Seba Government Editor

Federal Bureau of Investigation surveillance of organizations opposed to the Reagan administration's policies in Central America may have included K-State groups, according to the faculty adviser of Students in Solidarity with Central

John Exdell, associate professor of philosophy and SISCA adviser, said Thursday that documents released Wednesday by the Center for Constitutional Rights in New York indicate surveillance of student groups extended to every college campus in Kansas.

News reports have mentioned surveillance at the University of Kansas and The Wichita State University.

The Center told Exdell that, based on documents it received as part of a lawsuit settlement, "all universities in Kansas have been subject to investigation."

WSU and KU are the only two universities in Kansas for which details of the FBI surveillance are available.

Exdell said the surveillance, combined with revelations coming from the congressional hearings held this summer into the Iran-Contra affair, is disturbing.

This summer's hearings revealed that the Reagan administration planned to suspend the U.S. Constitution if the United States invaded a foreign country.

"When you look at that secret plan, which I believe involved making mass arrests, it is most disturbing, Exdell said.

Exdell said he plans to make a Freedom of Information Act request for documents relating to the surveillance campaign.

News reports Thursday said the FBI surveillance began in 1981 and lasted five years. No group under investigation appears to have been prosecuted based on information gained in the surveillance.

According to the documents, the FBI's surveillance began because of an allegation against the Committee in Solidarity with the People of El Salvador. The allegation claimed the organization had provided illegal military assistance to the leftist rebels in El Salvador.

The FBI investigation expanded to include other political organizations opposed to Reagan Administration policies.

The Center for Constitutional Rights obtained the documents as part of a lawsuit it handled for CIS-PES against the FBI.

Hepatitis cases triple Local officials wary of outbreak

By Deron Johnson Campus Editor

The number of hepatitis A cases reported in Kansas tripled in 1987, and local health officials are concerned that current statewide outbreaks may reach Riley County.

"The staff was alerted this mornfor the possibility ... that (hepatitis A) is in the community," Dr. Robert Tout, director of Lafene Student afternoon.

Bob Moody, public information officer with the Kansas Department of Health and Environment, said 410 cases of hepatitis A were reported in 1987, compared to 137

"I don't know if we can say with any degree of certainty why 1987 increased over 1986," Moody said. "Once the initial case is established in the community, it can spread pretty quickly."

However, Moody said some "hot spots" exist, including an outbreak in Liberal and recent outbreaks in Johnson and Wyandotte counties.

Tout said the disease has yet to show up on campus.

Dole's 1986 campaign accused of soliciting illegal contributions

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - The 1986 Senate campaign of Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., received thousands of dollars in what may have been illegal campaign contributions from executives of a now-bankrupt company, The Kansas City Star reported Thursday in a copyright story.

Some former executives of Birdview Satellite Communications Inc.

were encouraged or ordered to contribute to Dole's campaign in 1984 and were reimbursed by the company, the Star said.

The Dole campaign said it had no knowledge of improper contributions.

The newspaper said Thursday that Federal Election Commission records and interviews indicated two former Birdview executives - Ste-

The two told The Kansas City Star that they gave to the Dole campaign after they were asked to contribute by Charles A. Ross, Birdview's president at the time.

Contra peace talks begin

SAN JOSE, Costa Rica - Nicaragua's leftist government and Contra rebels began their first face-to-face peace talks Thursday, bringing sharply contrasting objectives to a Roman Catholic seminary in the San Jose suburbs.

Neither side made a formal statement as the talks ended for the night, but the Roman Catholic bishop mediating the negotiations said the atmosphere had been cordial even though "the task is difficult."

Monsignor Bosco Vivas said each side presented its bargaining position, then mutually requested the evening recess to consult with advisers and consider responses.

The talks will resume Friday morning and end at midday, the mediator said.

Senate passes civil rights bill

WASHINGTON - The Senate on Thursday passed a civil rights bill restoring broad federal protection from discrimination against women, minorities, the aged and the disabled.

The Civil Rights Restoration Act, passed on a 75-14 vote, reverses a Supreme Court decision which four years ago severely limited the scope of the nation's civil rights laws.

However, the bill passed only after two weakening amendments were adopted.

One amendment effectively repealed 1975 regulations designed to prevent discrimination against women who have abortions or

The second amendment excludes people with AIDS and other communicable diseases from laws protecting the disabled if they pose a direct threat to workplace health and safety or are unable to perform their jobs.

Reagan, Mubarak differ on plan

WASHINGTON - President Reagan joined Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak in decrying violence in the Israeli-occupied West Bank and Gaza, but the two leaders apparently differed Thursday on how best to revitalize peace prospects in the Middle East.

Reagan applauded Mubarak's call for a six-month cooling-off period and attributed the deaths and injuries to "allowing the Palestinian problem to fester," while the Egyptian leader called Reagan a "man of wisdom and conviction."

But after a brief arrival ceremony for Mubarak, making his first visit here in nearly 21/2 years, the two leaders faced off in private talks that a senior administration official described as "very animated and very frank."

Polygamists' standoff ends

MARION, Utah - Bursts of gunfire Thursday ended a tense, 13-day standoff between a polygamist clan and police, killing an officer and seriously wounding the group's leader, who was suspected of bombing a Mormon chapel.

The shooting erupted just after dawn as police who had infiltrated the clan's compound used a police dog to try to isolate Addam Swapp and his brother from the log house they had left moments before, officials said.

In the exchange of gunfire, the dog's handler was shot in the abdomen and Swapp fell in the snow with bullet wounds in the arm and chest, said John T. Nielsen, Utah's public safety

Garden City focus of study

GARDEN CITY - Garden City is taking its place with the big guys, as part of a new study funded by a $1 million Ford Foundation grant announced Thursday.

The grant is for a two-year national study of ethnic relations. Along with Garden City, researchers will zero in on Chicago, Philadelphia, Miami, Houston and San Francisco.

The foundation has earmarked $150,000 for the Garden City portion of the study, entitled "Changing Relations: Newcomers and Established Residents in U.S. Communities."

Over the next two years, specialists in education, anthropology and related fields will live and work in Garden City as they examine the ways it has coped with rapid economic growth, population expansion and ethnic diversity.

'Garden City seems to have experienced rapid economic growth that has brought ethnically diverse people here in a fairly short period of time, and has handled it very well," said Don Stull, who will direct the Garden City phase of the Stull is associate professor of anthropology and research associate in the Institutes for Public Policy and Business Research at the University of Kansas.

Ken Erickson, refugee services coodinator for the Garden City office of the Kansas Department of Social and Rehabilitation, will aid the team of researchers from KU, K-State, The Wichita State University and the University of Colorado.

"We're studying the whole community and how the components mesh and interact," said anthropologist Art Campa Jr. He has worked closely with Hispanic migrants in Southeast Colorado since 1981 as director of a variety of programs for the Bueno Center for Multicultural Education, University of Stull said Garden City has been of interest to researchers for several years due to its sudden growth and recent influx of immigrants. Sites were chosen by a board established at the State University of New York, Binghamton.

Garden City is the only site where the Vietnamese population will be a specific focus. But Stull said the intent of the study, is not to examine any segment of the population in isolation, but to look at how all segments relate to each other.

K-State to offer drug education support By Alison Neely Stoff Writer Funding to help rural high schools The grant mandates that abuse pre-

Funded by a $180,000 grant from the U.S. Department of Education, K-State is offering a training program this summer that will arm rural high school educators with the knowledge to effectively combat alcohol and drug abuse.

The seminar, scheduled for June, will focus on the drug and alcohol problems faced by rural high school students and how to deal effectively with them, said Steve Benton, program director and assistant professor of educational psychology.

Similar programs have been conducted in Kansas, Benton said, but were primarily in school districts surrounding the larger cities, including Topeka, Wichita and Kansas City.

"There is clearly a need," he said. "I've noticed a lot of the smaller schools weren't being served. In a lot enabling, he said. of cases, the smaller schools have a greater alcohol problem."

The program will be offered to districts with no more than 500 students, Benton said.

Many of the high schoolers in rural areas view drinking and drugs as reasonable means of amusement because their mentality is "What else is there to do?" he said.

He pinpoints two reasons for the continued abuse. Alcohol and drugs help individuals escape pain and feel like they belong.

"Stress is a big part of it too. Alcohol and drugs release stress. We need to teach people other stress-relief methods," he said.

Adults also play a role in the problem. They are involved in denial and

With denial, either everyone just looks the other way or it is considered common behavior, Benton said, adding that parents believe nothing can happen to their children.

Enabling is not being aware of the symptoms of the problem.

During the program, participants will be taught how to see the behavioral traits of alcoholism in their students. These traits are not just for alcoholism in the students, but also for when a student has alcoholic parents, he said.

percent chance of becoming alcoholics themselves. The program teaches how to see (alcoholism traits) in students themselves as well as from parents," he said.

The training is necessary because most high school teachers, counselors and administrators have had very little — if any — training in this area.

"At the undergraduate level there is very little training on how to deal with alcohol and drug problems. I believe K-State only offers one course in that area," Benton said. The June session is only one part "Children of alcoholics have a 50 of the $180,000 program. Another week-long session is planned for June 1989. The training will be followed by a two-year period during which K-State will help the schools 'troubleshoot" their program problems by using the Telenet system. Telenet is a telephone system that can connect hundreds of different people from across the state at the same time. By using this system the different schools can exchange inforvention programs be developed by high school teachers, counselors and principals for all grades. However, Benton said, most schools will place most of the emphasis of the programs for students in the fifth through 12th

"K-State will expose educators to programs at elementary levels, but it is up to them as to whether or not they use them," he said.

FBI investigators cross fine line of harassment

The FBI's investigation of groups that oppose President Reagan's Central American policies walks a very fine and dangerous line.

HAVE A PRAYER?

The thought of any government agency surveilling a specific group because of its political beliefs is very disquieting. One of the fundamental rights that we in America enjoy is voicing our political opinions even when those opinions are in direct opposition to that of the government.

However, political beliefs are not an excuse for illegal actions. It is the legitimate job of the FBI to investigate - via legal means - groups or individuals suspected of criminal activity. But the line where a legitimate investigation turns into harassing surveillance that begins to infringe upon people's rights, is a fine one. And one that the FBI has crossed over in this case.

Documents obtained by a New Freedom of Information Act, show harassment.

that the investigation had gone far beyond checking allegations of criminal activity by one specific opposition group - in this case the Committee in Solidarity With the People of El Salvador. The documents show that the investigation was expanded to include over 100 other organizations.

Some of the many organizations included were the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, a hospital workers union in Philadelphia, the United Auto Workers in Cleveland and all the college campuses in Kansas. These are not groups that one would consider hotbeds of radical activism. Since the investigation began in 1981, there has been no proof of criminal action uncovered.

Yes, there is a need for investigation into criminal activity. But, especially where political groups are involved, care must be taken to ensure that people's rights are not being violated and that criminal York lawyers' group, under the investigations do not turn into ticipated in an angry, abruptly ending interview on live, national television Tuesday night.

Rather has received criticism for his questioning Bush about the Iran-Contra affair. Bush refused to comment on his role. Since the interview, he has received numerous calls offering support, according to his campaign office.

President Reagan supported Bush's decision not to disclose conversations between the president and the vice president concerning the sale of arms to Iran.

Rather does not deserve the criticism he is receiving, and Bush does not deserve the support he is receiving.

Rather is a newsman, not a public relations person. His job is to question people and inform the public about a presidental candidate. Bush would have preferred to have Rather politely question him about all the good he has done, or will do.

If the news were only what people rid himself of his weak image.

It would be much better for Bush, and the public, if he would just answer the questions honestly and completely and be done with it. It is easy to think Bush has something he is trying to hide; otherwise he would not have been so angry at Rather.

If Bush has indeed received numerous calls of support, it is because he has used the disastrous interview as an opportunity to help

Mecham's recall appropriate

As I left the Arizona sunset in my rearview mirror late last July, I somehow knew the worst was yet to come for the state's governor. Sure, Evan Mecham had already seen some rough times, and his resiliance - some would call it a deeply unfounded complacency - had kept him from snapping in a fierce wind of public criticism.

But a determined group of anti-Mecham protestors had just launched a recall effort, and Mecham's daily gaffes were costing the state dearly in revenue and reputation. Believe me. National embarrassment is something to which Arizonans have become accustomed since Mecham took office.

The constant circus of accusations and denials I witnessed last summer while on an internship with a Mesa, Ariz., newspaper was indeed stranger than fiction. And I think the controversy surrounding the governor and the lessons it contained were perhaps as valuable as the experience I received working with the newspaper staff.

Among the things that have put Mecham in hot water:

■ Upon taking office in 1987, he immediately rescinded the state holiday honoring slain civil-rights leader Martin Luther King Jr. The move drew nationwide criticism and prompted the cancellation of conventions and performances by groups and individuals outraged at Mecham's actions. As of last July, the state had lost nearly $25 million in revenue because of those cancellations.

Last summer, in an effort to appease those calling for reinstatement of the King holiday, Mecham signed the bill into law making the Sunday before the national King holiday the state's official King day. Many considered the proclamation a slap in the face since state employees weren't going to be Commentary paid for the day off.

Mecham has said the blame for the rising rate of divorce in America is to be placed on working women.

■ He referred to black children as "pickaninnies," which is regarded as a racist term.

■ The Republican governor referred to those who wanted to recall him as a group of "homosexual agitators and dissident Democrats." Ed Buck, a homosexual, is the leader of the recall effort. Recall supporters responded with buttons reading: "Heterosexual agitator."

With nearly every Mecham comment drawing state and national criticism, Arizonans are understandably embarrassed. In fact, one of the first questions I asked people after arriving in Arizona was how did this guy ever get elected?

Predictably, that too turned out to be a colorful story. Mecham - a Pontiac dealer from the Phoenix suburb of Glendale - was a perennial candidate in each gubernatorial campaign. And after several unsuccessful tries, he made it into office when three candidates - he, a Democrat and an Independent - split the vote. Mecham didn't even have a majority of the votes, but he did have enough to be declared the winner.

The rest, as they say, is history. But, as I alluded earlier, the controversy did contain its lessons. That same embarrassment that Arizonans felt over having electing Mecham to office was channeled into a successful recall drive. It was announced Monday that recall workers collected more than 301,000 signatures — about 85,000 more than necessary - and that Mecham will have five days to resign or face a recall election.

And since last summer, Mecham has been indicted on six felony counts connected with his alleged concealment of a $350,000 campaign loan he received from a contributor. He faces trial on March 9. Meanwhile, as if all that isn't bad enough news for the embattled governor, an Arizona House select subcommittee is continuing hearings on whether Mecham should be impeached.

The news of Mecham's indictment and his other troubles brings back memories of last summer when the constant feuding between Mecham, Arizonans and the media was usually enlightening and always entertaining. But don't get the impression that Arizonans are difficult or hostile people. They're not. In fact, they're pleasantly congenial, even -God forbid — Midwestern in their demeanor. They would just rather see Mecham on TV pitching a Pontiac than his latest statehouse

And, based on what I saw, I can't say that I blame them.

If Mecham is removed from office which at this time looks inevitable - it's safe to say Arizona politics will never be the same. And I think it's also safe to say that for most Arizonans, that will be OK.

International students a blessing

Diethness spudastis! Does it sound Greek or Latin? It is Greek for "international student." You are perfectly justified to ask why I am showering you with Greek vocabulary. It is to bring home how thick the ice is between international students (the party of the first part of the phrase) and American students (the party of the second part) here at K-State, and possibly at other U.S. schools. The situation is grave enough for a majority of the party of the first part to express a sense of 'greekness" towards the party of the second part and vice versa.

K-State has been blessed with the presence of international students from more than six dozen countries. The Indians and the Chinese constitute a majority. This is understandable since India and China together represent over one-third of the world's population. At the other extreme, we also have a representative each from countries like Togo (I bet most of you did not know it is in Africa) and Micronesia (now, where in the world is that, you

A significant share of the blame for the existing indifference between the two parties lies with the foreign students. Most internationals tend to be bookworms and the word 'socializing" does not exist in their English dictionaries. And if it does, then it is read to mean, "Thou shalt befriend natives of thy own country."

Personally, I believe that studying in a foreign country (especially United States, which is often called the melting pot) is a great opportunity to build friendship with people from all parts of the world, and specifically with the natives. Men of wisdom have proposed that "traveling to foreign lands" is a way to broaden one's horizons. Are not the majority of the international students wasting their opportunities? I urge all of you to whom the above applies, to put on your red shoes (or maybe blue) and make a serious effort to get to know people from the United States and other countries.

Commentary

RIZWAN MITHANI Collegian Columnist

The party of the second part - the hosts and hostesses - takes the larger share of the blame. The quote "Thou shalt befriend natives of thy own country" applies to most individuals of the party of the second part,

The international representation on campus provides a golden opportunity to learn about the different countries of the world. I am confident that most international students would be willing to share their culture with any interested Americans. Would you not like to see exotic photographs and taste different kinds of food? You just have to ask. "Ask and ye shall be answered; seek and ye shall

More than 5 percent of the K-State student population is non-American. Thus, by the law of averages, one out of every 20 people an American knows (and I mean know as friends and acquaintances) should be non-American. I can confidently say that not many of you meet this criterion. The situation is worse for the international students. Are 19 out of every 20 acquaintances of yours American?

It is interesting as well as enlightening to look at the views foreign students have of American students. One may broadly classify the Americans as ignorists, superficialists and sympathists. The terms are of my own

These three categories by no means represent a complete list, but, nevertheless, it is a Ignorists are of two kinds: type A and type B. Type A ignorists are simply ignorant of the fact that international students exist on campus. For instance, this guy from a fraternity who said, "International student? Oh yes. One time I did meet a chap from some country, somewhere, but...'

Ignorists of type B simply ignore the existence of foreign students. These types can be found all over the place.

Superficialists show a shallow interest in foreign students. They think that internationals are cute! A typical conversation between representatives of the two parties may proceed as follows.

"So, where are you from?"

"I am from such-and-such country." "Neat," he says, then pauses. "Where is After explanation, the superficialist would repeat, "Neat. What language do you speak

"Such and such."

"Cute!" he replies.

The sympathists are genuinely interested in foreign students and their native countries. They show a deep understanding toward international students and are always willing to share cultures and help. It is these people who offer rides to new students from the airport or the bus station. They also help them with settling in and adjustment. Lifelong friendships often result from such efforts.

I encourage students to become members of the International Club. It is an excellent platform for developing friendships with students from different countries. Note that it is called the International Club and not something like the Foreign Student Club, for the term "international" includes Americans.

Finally, I end with a quote from J.R. Harper, who said: "People just do not realize that they can get a taste of what the world is like without having to leave Manhattan, Kan."

Flashing, as defined by Webster's dictionary, is a vulgar, ostentatious display. Last summer and fall, some workers and patrons in Farrell Library were the recipients of several such displays.

"The first incident occurred during the summer when some temporary student hires were sorting books in the stacks," said Brice Hobrock, dean of

The flasher later reappeared five or six times, but hasn't been sighted since September, he said. "Although this is bizarre behavior, it is less prevalent here than at other places I have been," he said. "This type of behavior is extremely common in libraries, although not so much in academic libraries as in public libraries." Characteristics of people who flash are based upon flashers who have been caught, said William Griffitt, professor of psychology.

"Most psychologists who have studied this believe flashers are men who have weak social and sexual skills, who feel uncomfortable dealing with women," Griffitt said. "Flashing, for them, is a paradox: safe sex without

He said the flasher's goal is to get a reaction from women, whether it be surprise or fear. Or, he said, the flasher may have an ill-founded belief that the women may actually want to have sex with them.

"The typical flasher has strong concerns about his masculinity — crying out, 'Look at this, I'm a man,'" he said.

Usually, flashers aren't dangerous; they want to stay away from their unwilling victim. "Often the flasher will be masturbating at the time or will want to run away to masturbate right after the encounter," Griffitt said. "Their hope is to encounter the woman at the moment of ejaculation."

The best reaction for the victim to have is no reaction or to laugh at the flasher. But even though the typical flasher is not dangerous, Griffitt said he he didn't recommend staying around one.

He said there is no parallel behavior to flashing for women, although dressing seductively may be an outlet for feelings of being unfeminine.

Incidents of flashing have also occurred at the Manhattan Public Library. "Flashing in libraries is not uncommon because we are a very public place, and people in here can be anonymous," said Margaret Gates, director of the Manhattan Public Library. "There have been incidents in almost every library I have worked, including public libraries at Wichita, Topeka and Joplin, Mo."

The Manhattan library has only had two documented incidents and one unverified complaint of flashing in the last five years, said Fred Atchison, director of public services for the library.

"Incidents of this type are a rare occurrence in this library, but in the metropolitan areas the problems are much more significant," he said.

The most recent incident occurred in May 1987 and included the soiling of library materials, Atchison said.

Atchison said there were no apparent eyewitnesses to the incident but that the individual, whom he described as someone with no permanent address, was confronted by library workers and ejected from the library.

"We weren't able to press charges against the individual, but after he was banned, the incidents stopped," Atchison said. "The library is a target for the homeless and vagrants seeking warmth and even kids who are dumped off after school. People get careless in a library and are vulnerable to such

People who observe — or are victims of — a flasher should get a description and notify the police, said Lester Bieler, assistant director of the Riley County Police Department.

If the incident takes place in a library, patrons should notify the library staff so they can call the police, he said.

The law classifies it as lewd and lascivious behavior, he said.

It is a misdemeanor, and the maximum punishment is one year in jail and a $1,000 fine. But, maximum punishments are not routinely imposed by the courts, Bieler said.

The common practice for libraries or other public places that experience such incidents is to ban such individuals from returning, Bieler said. If they do return, they are charged with trespassing.

Candidate speaks on Union's merits

By The Collegian Staff

A "vital place to students" is how Vera Carr, associate director of finances for the University of Rhode Island, described the K-State Union during her speech Thursday in the Union Sunflower Room.

Carr is the fourth and final candidate seeking the position of K-State Union Director. The candidates were selected from more than 50 applicants by an 11-member search committee. The committee is expected to make its recommendation within a week.

Carr's speech addressed the Union's role in student recruitment and the future of its facilities.

"This is an excellent Union and is very well maintained," Carr said of K-State's Union. "With the funding you have, the budget is large enough to maintain what you have here."

She also said she would like for the Kansas Legislature to visit the Union and would like to host more conferences to increase the Union's prestige.

Through recruitment, Carr said she believes K-State will bring in a large number of quality

"We would like to recruit the older-than-average student, about 25 to 60 (years of age) - people who would like to go back to college and finish school," she said. Carr said the Union should research and evaluate its effectiveness in providing for students'

"We must develop a tool that measures our own effectiveness," she said. "We must evaluate ourselves."

Carr received a bachelor of science degree in public administration from Roger Williams College. She currently supervises all financial matters for the Memorial Union/Student Activities and Student Senate organizations at the University of Rhode Island.

She is also responsible for the overall supervision of the purchasing and inventory control functions of the URI's union.

'The Wall' assaults audience's senses

By Judd Annis Collegian Reviewer

"Pink Floyd: The Wall," which opens today for a two-day showing at Forum Hall, is an audio and visual assault of the senses that marches hand in hand with the rock group Pink Floyd's album The Wall.

Since its release in 1982, the movie has attracted more controversy and theoretical speculation than any rock film since "Tommy."

The film involves the screw-loose life of an English rock star named Pink (played by Bob Geldorf of the Irish band The Boomtown Rats and creator of Live Aid) whose hedonistic lifestyle has left him isolated from reality and behind a psychological

Movie Review

The audience watches Pink's grip on every aspect of his life loosen. He views his past through graphic flashbacks and fantasies that supposedly account for his paranoid illusions and ultimate unhinging.

A test of good art is its ability to move and capture its audience in a different light each time it's viewed, and "The Wall" does this frighteningly well. Its presentation is shocking, sometimes brutal, often disturbing, and yet quite compelling to watch. Its intensity never wavers.

Written by Pink Floyd member Roger Waters and directed by Alan Parker ("Midnight Express", "Fame" and "Shoot the Moon"), the film uses dynamic animation that proves to be a complimentary addition to the film.

To obtain the most from "The Wall", the viewer must pay strict attention to the music and lyrics, which attempt to explain Pink's plight and convey the feelings that led him to his burned out situation. The audio and visual aspects of this film are integral and simply allow the viewer a starting point from which to make sense of it all (if that's possible).

A complicated a project like this can be expected to have flaws, and "The Wall" does have its downfalls.

Given the lifestyle rock stars subscribe to and the realization that Pink may be just as much a self-pitying brat as he is a troubled artist, the film is a bit pretentious for its own good.

While the big screen and surrounding sound of an actual theater greatly inhances this film, it may be best to treat it with a grain of salt. I'll give "Pink Floyd: The Wall" a "B".

because Hemingway spoke for a great many people. He is a representative of their beliefs — people in chaos and having a lack of faith in institutions," Johnston said. "He is a representative of a world that they know. Much of what he had to say about life is more pertinent today than in his time. That is why his work will sustain."

"He is fascinating to many read-ers and scholars both for his work

Johnston never got the opportunity to meet Hemingway, as others who critiqued his work have. But if he could have spoken with the famous author, he said he wouldn't have tried to "probe his mind or his fiction" as other critics have.

"Hemingway was a great fan of the outdoors, as I am, and I suppose we could have talked at length about trout fishing," Johnston said, smiling at the thought. "We could have also talked about Spain, which he loved, and where I would some-day like to visit."

Although he never met Heming-way, Johnston did visit his grave in Ketchum, Idaho, which he cribed as "a very simple grave, a granite slab."

Drawings and ceramics combined

Artist makes more than ashtrays

By Victoria Ohmacht Collegian Reporter

For most people, their only exposure to ceramics is the first-grade lump of clay that starts off as a masterpiece and ends as an ashtray.

For Laura Fatemi, junior in graphic arts, the love of art that began in the classroom has grown into a talent featured in regional and national exhibits.

The Union has featured her ceramic sculptures in the second-floor showcase since Jan. 11. The exhibit ends today. "The most common word people are using is 'different' but in a positive way," Marilyn Woodward, UPC program adviser, said. "We've had a lot of feedback and inquiries, and the students seem to be very excited about (the exhibit)."

Fatemi successfully combines drawing and ceramics in her work, said Teresa Schmidt, assistant professor of art.

"Quite often people decorate the they don't tie in the shape of the ceramic with the shape of the drawing," and 14, and is married to Ali Fatemi, Schmidt said. Instead of simply drawing a hand on the surface, for example, the hand becomes part of the shape itself in Fatemi's sculp-

"When I saw the work, the first thing that entered my mind is that it is so well done. It is really very, very good work," Schmidt said.

Fatemi's work is untitled because she prefers to let her art speak for itself.

"I want people to look at it and decide what it means to them without my interpretations on it," she said. The eight pieces on display in the Fatemi has been an artist since she was a child, but her involvement in ceramics began after college art classes. She credits Yoshiro Ikeda, associate professor of art, for encouraging her interest in the art form.

Fatemi works on the sculptures in the university art department and also at home, "usually when everyone is in bed so I can have uninterrupted time.

"When a piece comes out of the kiln, you never know quite what is going to happen until you open the kiln and the firing process is completed. It can either be an emotionally charged moment, one of dread, or that moment can be a special pleasure."

Wheat growers dislike trade agreement

From Staff and Wire Reports

Wheat producers believe they may have come out of the free-trade negotiations between the United States and Canada with the short straw.

A trade pact signed by President Reagan and Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney on Jan. 2 was supposed to eliminate tariffs and barriers between the two countries by

The United States and Canada are the world's two largest trading partners with an exchange estimated at $150 billion annually, about $4.6 billion of which is agricultural products. Major U.S. farm exports include fruits, vegetables, cotton, rice and nuts. Canada mainly provides live animals, meat and other animal products.

But, it also has been shipping wheat into the United States in growing amounts.

Growers spokesman said annual Canadian wheat exports to the United States hovered around 4 million bushels for years. During the past marketing year, the figure reached 18 million bushels, probably because Canada subsidizes transportation about $20 per metric ton, he

U.S. companies can't export wheat to Canada because special licenses are required and no licenses have been granted for some time, NAWG said.

As the No. 1 wheat producing state in the nation, Kansas has a major stake in wheat export markets. At least 45 percent of the more than 360 million-bushel crop produced in Kansas each year is sold to export customers. States closest to Canada will be affected the fastest, said Steven Graham, administrator of the Kansas Wheat Commission. However, a real possibility exists that flour coming into the United States will affect Kansas, he said.

Low labor costs could make Canada competitive in flour milling.

Besides the wheat commission, the Kansas Association of Wheat Growers and state Agriculture Sec-A National Association of Wheat retary Sam Brownback all have expressed strong concern about the

At this point, the Commission agrees that free trade with Canada is good, Graham said, but the problem between the two countries is the specific language regarding wheat.

make two changes in the proposed trade agreement, which now faces approval by the U.S. Congress and Canada's Parliament.

First, the Commission would like the Canadians to remove subsidies on the rail transportation of wheat or else have transportation subsidies similar to Canada's imposed on wheat from the United States.

The Commission believes this would make Canadian and U.S. wheat equal in price.

Second, the Commission would like the trade agreement to retain a current federal law that allows the United States to launch a suit if unfair trading is suspected. Under the proposed agreement, the United States would no longer have that option.

While the new agreement is supposed to create free trade, Canada won't allow U.S. wheat imports until it agrees government farm subsidies for wheat are equal on both sides of the border. Critics claim the formula that will be used to calculate equality is biased in Canada's favor.

"The U.S. border is open and will become more so. The Canadian border is closed and likely will remain so. That doesn't sound much like free trade to me," said Randy Green, an He said the Commission hopes to NAWG wheat exports spokesman.

Paul Sim, senior policy analyst for the Western Canadian Wheat Growers Association, said Canadian wheat producers generally are pleased with the agreement.

"I think you have to recognize, though, it would have been slightly imprudent to allow what we view as highly subsidized U.S. wheat access to Canadian markets," he said in a telephone interview from his Regina, Saskatchewan, office.

Comments from another Canadian wheat official set off howls from NAWG and U.S. Wheat Associates, an export promotion group financed by state wheat commissions. Both groups already were sensitive to possible inequalities in the new agreement. When they read remarks made to an Alberta producers group by Charles Mayer, Canada's grains minister and a Manitoba farmer, they fired off a joint letter to U.S. Trade Representative Clayton Yeutter.

Mayer told the Alberta group the trade pact should mean major new sales of Canadian wheat to U.S. customers.

"We would sell more now but for political considerations. They have a statute that can shut down the border overnight. This agreement removes that threat," Mayer said in a published report of his speech.

"This confirms our worst fears regarding the alleged free-trade agreement with Canada. Mayer clearly regards the agreement as a major boost to Canadian exports," the joint letter said.

Green said NAWG hasn't yet received a response to the Dec. 22 protest letter to Yeutter.

A spokesman for the Manhattan Farmers Co-op Association estimates about 80 percent of local farmers do not realize the impact of the proposed agreement, or know about

'Cats looking to end Hawks' reign

By Tom Morris Sports Writer

Most sports fans are familiar with the adage: "It's not over until the fat lady sings."

In the University of Kansas' case, the fat lady needs to warm up her vocal chords three or four minutes earlier. For K-State, her tune couldn't start at a better time.

The Big Eight Conference-leading Wildcats have had strong finishes in their last four wins while shooting more than 80 percent (31-of-38) from the charity stripe in the last two minutes.

The Jayhawks, though, have blown second-half leads in losing to Notre Dame and Nebraska in its last two outings.

At South Bend, Ind., the Jayhawks forgot about Danny Manning in the closing minutes and the Fighting Irish went on to win by four. At Lincoln, Neb., KU couldn't buy a free throw late in the second half while the Cornhuskers climbed back close, Nebraska eventually won on a lastsecond shot.

The latter point has KU Coach Larry Brown concerned.

"We don't have one kid that can step forward at crunch time," Brown said. "I see fear in their eyes when they step up to the (free throw) line and that's frustrating because that should be an exciting time."

But after two consecutive road games, the Jayhawks, 12-6 overall and 1-2 in Big Eight play, return to Allen Field House in Lawrence for Saturday's 3:10 p.m. matchup with K-State, 11-4 and 3-0, where there are two streaks on the line the 55-game home-court winning streak and Brown's 10-0 advantage against

K-State Coach Lon Kruger said can be."

Lon Kruger's Wildcats hope to break two streaks Saturday — the Jayhawks' 55-game winning streak in Allen Field House and a 0-10 record against Jayhawk coach Larry Brown.

K-State had success in the first half against Colorado with the tradi-"The streak is there and it's tional 3-2 zone defense, but Kruger said the 'Cats will employ a variety of defenses against KU.

"We'll do what we have been up to this point in terms of mixing up the defense a little bit. The (man-to man's) our main defense, but I wouldn't be surprised if we changed that," Kruger said.

And the reasoning behind that is Manning, the only consensus All-American returning this season. The 6-foot-10 senior is KU's all-time leading scorer and is on the verge of becoming only the fourth player in NCAA history to score 2,000-plus points, collect 1,000-plus rebounds and shoot better than 60 percent from the field. Only David Robinson of Navy, Lew Alcindor of UCLA and Pat Ewing of Georgetown have performed this feat.

"How does anyone matchup against Danny?" Kruger said. "He's maybe the best player in the country. Whoever matches up with him is going to have their hands full."

After struggling for 35 minutes against Colorado's man defense, K-State will see a similiar style of play at Lawrence. There are variations between the two, Kruger said.

'Colorado's is more compact while KU's is more extended, so it's like two different defenses all together," he said.

NOTES...Kansas leads the overall series 128-82...KU leads the series in Lawrence 62-31...K-State guard Buster Glover is 13-0f-22 from outside the three-point line (59.1 percent) and just 9-of-32 (28.1) inside the line.

K-State still trying to end slump

By Chase Clark Sports Writer

Last season, three teams shared the regular season women's basketball Big Eight Conference crown - Missouri, Kansas and K-State. But only one squad came away as the Big Eight Post-Season Tournament Champions.

The two teams which met in the final round of the conference tournament - K-State and Kansas will meet at 7 p.m. Saturday in rivals.

Allen Field House for the first time since that eventful game nearly 11 all over the place," Mossman said. months ago.

Kansas played an aggressive physical game and humbled the Lady Cats on its way to an 85-51 victory in the championship game held last March in Salina.

Since that time, K-State Coach Matilda Mossman has had a lot of time to think about that game and prepare for Saturday's matchup with the Lady Cats' intra-state

"Kansas will press us full court That's why we expect the rough play we experienced last year." The Lady Cats are 7-11 overall and are in the midst of a sevengame losing slump, including a 0-5 conference mark, Last night, K-State was defeated by Louisiana Tech, 77-45. The Lady Techsters are 15-0 and ranked No. 2 in the latest Associated Press poll.

Topeka site of K-State's weekend tennis matchup

K-State's women's tennis team will face its stiffest test so far this season against Southern Illinois-Edwardsville Saturday afternoon at the Wood Valley racquet Club courts in Topeka.

K-State has a 1-1 record following matches against Arkansas and Memphis State last weekend. Coach Steve Bietau hopes his squad will keep up the same level of intensity Saturday that it did in its previous duals.

"We got off to a good start in Arkansas and we would that way," he said.

Bietau will keep K-State's lineup the same, with Annika Emtell at No.1 singles; Val Rive, No.2 singles; Sigrid Ivarsson, No.3 singles; Marijke Nel, No.4 singles; Thresa Burcham, No.5 singles; and Miste Bitner, No.6 singles.

Emtell and Ivarsson will team up at No.1 doubles, while Rive and Nel will play No.2 and Burcham and Bitner will play No.3.

Wildcat runners hit road

By Russ Ewy Sports Writer

After a good showing last weekend at the Missouri Invitational, K-State's indoor track and field team will compete in a four-team meet at the University of Wisconsin Saturday.

In the men's division, K-State will face Illinois State, Iowa State and Wisconsin, while the women's field will include Northwestern, Western Michigan and Wisconsin. Coach John Capriotti said with the stiff competition and the team's health problems, K-State is setting other goals rather than winning the meet.

"My goal is not to win the meet," Capriotti said. "It's a scoring meet, but we're not really concerned about the score. I think you need to understand what we're trying to do for the whole season. We're going up there to get efforts and try to get better and try to get healthier. We'll let the score take care of itself. We're more interested with the score at the Big Eight (Conference) meets.'

With several athletes performing below their potential due to injuries, Capriotti plans to get the team up to full strength before the start of the Conference meet by lowering their competiton load.

"I'm trying to be 'low key' and basically I want the kids to go up there and do a good job," Capriotti said. "I don't want to have to run kids in two or this races to win the meet - that might hurt us down the line. We need to get some people healthy and you don't get them healthy by running them in a lot of races.

"We're doing a good job, we're improving, but we have a long way to go and we need to keep getting better. We had a good year last year, and we would like to do as well this year. To do that we are going to have to be healthy," he said.

The meet gets underway at 12:30 p.m.

Lady Techsters upend Lady Cats

By Daran Neuschafer Sports Writer

It's too bad moral victories don't show up in the record books, because if they did, the K-State Lady Cats could have chalked one up Thursday night against nationally-ranked Louisiana Tech.

Instead, K-State had to settle for its seventh straight loss after giving the Lady Techsters all they could handle before bowing out, 77-45, in Ahearn Field House.

K-State, who fell to 7-11, possibly put together its most gutsy performance of late against the No. 2 ranked team in the nation.

"I am very proud of our girls," Lady Cat head coach Matilda Mossman said. "I feel good about the way our kids played. Louisiana Tech is beating their opponents by an average of 33 points, so we have nothing to be ashamed of.

"They are a very good basketball team, and we played them hard all the way." Mossman was especially pleased with her team's effort on the offensive end of the court, where the Lady Cats finally showed the patience Mossman has wanted.

"In this game, we learned what patience on offense can do for us. Now we have to keep this type of play going against Kansas," said Lady Cat point guard Elyse Funk. K-State plays the Jayhawks in Lawrence tomorrow.

"We've got to carry this over to Saturday," Mossman said. "We have to play 40 minutes of patient basketball."

but fought back - hard.

The Lady Techsters led, 24-10, with six minutes remaining in the first half, but K-State went on a 9-2 run to pull within seven, 26-19, with 3:15 left. But just as the crowd was getting back into the game, Louisiana Tech showed why they deserve their lofty ranking, scoring the final 10 points of the half to take a 36-19 lead into the locker room.

K-State shot just 25 percent from the field in the first half, but Mossman was pleased with the shots the Lady Cats took.

Louisiana Tech was able to get out and run against K-State in the second half, as it steadily built its lead to 65-43. The Lady Techsters then finished the game with a 12-2 run to seal

"It only presents a problem when that person is in that (organized housing) area and there's ... contact," he said. In that case, the student would most likely be isolated. Manhattan physicians, who were contacted Thursday afternoon, said they have seen no recent cases of hepatitis.

Moody, who said there is no immunization to the disease, said the key to preventing the spread of hepatitis A is personal cleanliness, including washing the hands after using the restroom or before preparing food.

"The importance of good personal hygiene should make its own case," he said.

Stacey Boyle is netting 9.1 points and 4.9 caroms per outing. The other two starters, Amy Davidson and Elyse Funk, are scoring 7.7 ppg and 5.6 ppg, respectively.

The Lady Jayhawks are 12-6 overall and 2-3 in the Big Eight. Kansas lost to Missouri, Iowa State and Nebraska. The Lady Jayhawks defeated Colorado and, most recently, Oklahoma State in overtime.

Maturity in the starting lineup has been a key to Kansas' success this season. The starting five consists of four seniors and a sophomore.

"They've got everyone back from last year but Evette Ott," Mossman said. "They are just as good as anyone else we've played in the Big Eight. I pick them to be near the top in the Big Eight when the season is

'K-State is Mitchin' after win over KU

Wildcats welcomed by 1,500

By Janet Swanson Campus Editor and Tom Morris Sports Writer

It wasn't a normal Saturday night in Manhattan. In fact, it was anything but normal. The University of Kansas' 55-game home winning streak had been broken - and K-

State was the one to break it. And, needless to say, there were several happy campers following K-State's 72-61 defeat over KU.

An estimated 1,500 fans and the pep band gathered around Ahearn Field House at 7:30 p.m. to welcome back their Wildcats, who just two hours earlier had snapped a 10-game losing streak against their intrastate rivals.

"How'd you like that victory over KU tonight?" President Jon Wefald asked the crowd. "This game was special to any K-Stater and to all our alumni. Gov. Mike Hayden called me and he was just euphoric."

But the crowd hadn't assembled to hear speeches. People were there to see the star of the show - senior forward Mitch Richmond.

Signs waved, but one seemed to capture the crowd's thought: "K-State is Mitchin'." Tom O'Connor, sophomore in graphic design, had more to say than that. "Who's Danny Manning? Mitch Richmond is Danny Manning. Mitch is God," O'Connor said.

But when Richmond addressed the crowd, he had a calmer attitude.

"We thank you. The team appreciates your support. We'll see you Wednesday night (when K-State hosts Iowa State)," Richmond

The win did more than break KU's streak; it broke their ego, O'Connor said.

"As far as ego goes, KU had one - now K-State does. But we won't let it go to our head," O'Connor said.

The win had been a long-awaited one, said Steve Levin, senior in business management. "We've got a lot of games to go, but it's Department and the K-State Police, most par-

Brian Hamner, sophomore in radiotelevision, watched the game at Haymaker Hall. The hall, he said, turned into "a small Ahearn Field House" following the win.

"It's great. The 'Cats are No. 1. You messed with the best and you die like the rest," he said.

Susan Graff, freshman in human ecology, said despite K-State trailing KU during most of the game, she never lost hope.

"I knew even when we were behind we would come back and win, ... They were playing like the 'Cats instead of like a team that didn't have their heads together," she

When the pep rally began to break up, Coach Lon Kruger made one last statement.

"Let's have a lot of fun tonight, but let's have some sense about it, OK?" he said. According to both the Riley County Police

"We just had the usual - alcohol in public places, using false identification. We had officers on stand-by, but we didn't use them," said Sgt. Kin Padgett of the Riley County Police Department.

Aggieville felt the crowd's rush as partygoers swarmed to celebrate. "It's been wild. Everyone has been out celebrating," said Scott Bliss, a Dark Horse Tavern employee. "Usually we don't fill up until 10 p.m. Tonight we filled up at 7:30 p.m. That's pretty amazing. I don't know what's stopping a riot." Said Sgt. Bill Reese of the Riley County Police Department: "It hasn't been any worse than usual for a nice early fall evening. But, it's still early.' The crowd at Brothers Tavern was fairly calm, said Wayne Bogart, part owner of the came out early for it," Bogart said. Officer Glenn Brown, with the campus police, said things were calm on campus as "They had that pep rally and it went off pretty good. Everything went fine," he said. In Lawrence, things were a bit calmer than

"I'm embarrassed. No - I'm not really embarrassed. I went. I cried. It was awful." said Christine Mayers, KU freshman in

"(After the game) was really weird. There were a lot of K-State people there, and they were yelling and stuff. Everyone from KU just kind of got up and left," she said. "But, no one is ever too depressed not to party here."

John McIntire, KU senior in education, said although he was disappointed with the loss, he preferred a loss to K-State rather than

What made the win important, said Doug Steele, senior in mechanical engineering, is that it left K-State 4-0 in Big Eight Confer-

"It shows KU isn't the best anymore. I'd hope that we would get more recognition because of the win," he said.

The win was one that should go uncontested, said Brad Doebele, sophomore in business administration.

'We won and they can't blame it on the referees," he said. "We're number one. We beat Larry Brown and we stayed on top of the Big Eight. It proves that we aren't a fluke."

Meese linked to alleged bribe for Iraqi pipeline

By The Associated Press

JERUSALEM - Foreign Minister Shimon Peres said he was not offered a bribe by a close friend of Attorney General Edwin Meese and "would have thrown the aide out the window" if he had been, a newspaper reported Sunday.

The daily Maariv quoted Peres as also saying in an interview that it was "just nastiness" to say a bribe was behind Israel's decision not to attack a proposed Iraqi pipeline. Meese, under investigation for corrupt business practices, has been linked to the affair by a 1985 memo from his longstanding friend, E. Robert Wallach.

In the memo to Meese, Wallach, an American Jewish attorney, cited a plan to pay off a top-ranking Israeli official in return for a guarantee that Israel would not bomb the pipeline.

The Los Angeles Times identified the official as Peres, Israel's prime minister at the time.

Wallach was acting as a gobetween for Iraq, which sought the pipeline as an alternative export route because the Persian Gulf was blocked by Iran.

The pipeline was to have run from Iraq through Jordan and then along the border with Israel inside Jordanian territory to the Red Sea port of Agaba. It was never built.

A Foreign Ministry official said Sunday that Peres met Wallach only once, at a party in the United The official, who spoke on condition he not be further identified, also denied that Peres discussed financial matters with Swiss Jewish businessman Bruce Rappaport, a friend of Peres who formed a partnership with Bechtel Group Inc. to build the pipeline.

The New York Times reported that Bechtel formed the partnership with Rappaport because of his close ties with Israeli leaders.

But the daily Yediot reported that Rappaport, in a conversation from Geneva, said: "This is all foolish rumors that don't have any meaning. (No bribe) was ever offered to Shimon Peres, the Labor Party, the government, the Likud or to Israel in general."

In another interview, Rappaport said Sunday that he acted as a middleman between Israel and Iraq regarding the pipeline that was never built.

Rappaport said he received a letter from Israeli officials saying Israel would not attack a proposed Iraqi oil pipeline.

No bribe was involved in obtaining the letter, he said in an Israel radio interview from Geneva.

He said his involvement in the project started "several years ago" when he was approached and told that the pipeline was "delayed only by Iraqi fears" of Israeli bombs.

Rappaport said he went to Israel where he mentioned the issue at a lunch with Peres. He said Peres told him his request to spare the pipeline would probably be

After returning to Geneva, Rappaport said, he journeyed again to Jerusalem and received a letter from Peres, "saying in principle ... that under certain conditions there will be no opposition" to the pipeline.

He passed the letter onto Iraqi officials.

"In November, December 1986, I received a letter from the Iraqis and was invited by the president of Iraq to come and talk to him," Rappaport said.

He said the Iraqis were not satisfied with the Israeli letter and asked for financial guarantees.

Curfew set in Israel Dozens wounded in riots

By The Associated Press

JERUSALEM — Dozens of Arabs were hurt in clashes and a Jewish settler was badly burned in a car firebombing in the occupied territories Sunday. In Jerusalem, riot police fought Arabs near one of Christianity's holiest

The army clamped a curfew on Nablus, the West Bank's largest city with 100,000 people, after lengthy street battles Sunday with masked youths, authorities said. They said four Palestinians were wounded by gunfire.

Scores more were injured after being beaten or inhaling tear gas throughout the West Bank and Gaza Strip, according to officials at several hospitals.

Bank city of Ramallah critically burned a Jewish settler. In Jerusalem, near the Church of the Holy Sepulcher, where tradition says Jesus was buried, police fired tear gas to disperse about 200 protesters. Most of the demonstrators were women, who shouted anti-Israeli slogans after attending a memorial service for Palestinians killed in seven weeks of rioting.

According to United Nations figures, 39 Arabs have been killed by Israeli gunfire since protests began Dec. 8. The Palestinians are demonstrating against the Israeli occupation of lands seized during the 1967 Middle East war.

Later Sunday, about 50 stone-throwing youths clashed with riot police firing tear gas near the church. Arab witnesses said police did not enter the church.

Police arrested five Arab youths after the second protest. About 30 officers marched the handcuffed detainees through the narrow alleys of the walled Old City, past shuttered stores and a few dozen tourists. At the Greek Orthodox St. George's Church in Ramallah, soldiers fired tear gas to disperse about 200 worshipers who left the church to march toward the city's nearby central square, said Ibrahim Duaybis, son of the minister at the city's Anglican Church.

Palestinian Christians, who tend to have more moderate political views than their Moslem brethren, up to now have played a minor role in the rioting led by Islamic fundamentalists and Palestinian nationalists.

But in a first show of organized involvement, leaders of various Christian denominations last Friday called for a daylong fast to express solidarity with the rioters. In Nablus, clashes continued for a second day.

Of four protesters hit by army gunfire, a 25-year-old man was in serious condition after being shot in the back, the army said. The army said a firebomb tossed at a car in the West

In one clash a dozen youths, their faces covered by checkered Arab headdresses, fired stones, bottles, iron pieces and marbles from slingshots for nearly two hours.

The soldiers stood back, occasionally firing rubber bullets or throwing stones back at rioters. When the troops advanced, the youths withdrew into a side alley, but continued firing.

Scattered clashes were also reported elsewhere in the West Bank and Gaza. The army said a 17-year-old youth was wounded when soldiers dispersed protesters in Jalazoon refugee camp north of Ramallah.

In Gaza City, 35 people were hospitalized overnight, some with beating injuries, including fractures, doctors

Elections begin in Philippines

MANILA, Philippines - Troops patrolled four central and southern provinces today as more than 1 million Filipinos began voting in regional elections delayed by fears of violence.

Police said Communist rebels struck Sunday in the Manila suburb of Caloocan City, killing two Philippine Constabulary soldiers in an ambush.

Polls opened today in the central provinces of Leyte and Northern Samar and in the Mindanao island provinces of Lanao del Norte and Lanao del Sur. Voters will choose governors, vice governors, mayors and council members.

Filipinos in 62 of the nation's 73 provinces voted Jan. 18, but balloting was rescheduled in the others because of threats of violence. Elections were held Jan. 25 in five provinces.

Col. Antonio Nale told reporters that six combat battalions, with a total of 2,000 troops, had been sent to the two Lanao provinces to provide additional security during Monday's voting.

There were no reports of trouble during the early hours of balloting. Both Communist and Moslem rebels operate in the two Lanao provinces, among the most lawless areas of the country. Communist rebels also operate in Leyte and Northern Samar.

In Manila, police said four young men armed with .45-caliber pistols ambushed and killed Sgt. Carlos Pabon, 39, and Sgt. Renato Mangligot, 33, as they drove through a crowded neighborhood of Caloocan City Sunday. Police quoted witnesses as saying the assailants shouted that they were Communist rebels.

Iraqis strike Panama freighter

MANAMA, Bahrain - A Panamanian-flag freighter was set ablaze and adrift in the northern Persian Gulf on Sunday, apparently by an Iraqi air strike, and the whereabouts of its crew was unknown.

A U.S. missile destroyer, the Chandler, first spotted the stricken vessel on radar late Saturday and sent up a helicopter at first light to observe it at close hand, a U.S. military source said.

"The helicopter reported that the ship was smoking and abandoned. No crew was located or observed," said the source, speaking on condition of anonymity. The ship was identified as the 15,241-ton Mare, a Greek-owned cargo vessel.

Iraq claimed its fighter-bombers carried out two attacks off the Iranian coast during a nine-hour period Sunday. Shipping executives said one of their targets appeared to have been the Damage to the ship appeared characteristic to that inflicted by air-launched Exocet missiles used by Iraqi planes in raids against Iranian shipping, one gulf-based shipping executive said.

Some shipping officials speculated that the attack may have been a mistake. Others suggested the Iraqis knew the Mare was bound for the Iranian port of Bushehr and thus considered it a legitimate target.

The executives spoke on the condition of not being identified.

Jury says sex is not therapy

MIAMI - A Dade County jury awarded $525,000 to a woman who sued her former psychiatrist because he had sex with her during regular therapy sessions.

After more than three hours of deliberation, jury members found Ralph Maercks 70 percent responsible for Sherri Birchansky's emotional damage, which they estimated at $750,000. "We know who the bad guy is now," Birchansky said to her attorney, Stanley Rosenblatt, after the verdict was read Friday. During the trial Birchansky, a 27-year-old University of Miami Medical School graduate, and other female patients testified that Maercks beat them and made sexual passes at them, claiming it was part of the therapy.

Maercks' therapy changed Birchansky from a normal 17-yearold who went to a psychiatrist because she thought it would be "neat" into an emotional wreck seven years later, Rosenblatt said.

Maercks' attorney, Thomas Schulte, said his client only had been guilty of an adulterous affair with Birchansky.

Museum gains 884,000 items

WASHINGTON - The Smithsonian Institution acquired 884,000 things last year, from a gorilla named Gus to Groucho Marx's striped pants and cutaway - not to mention an artificial heart, a 65 mph bicycle and a collection of 38,745 wasps.

Officials said new additions to the Smithsonian's inventory of 134 million objects also included a rare, 5.03-carat red diamond, one of band conductor John Philip Sousa's batons, a 220 million-year-old dinosaur skeleton, 1,098 masterpieces of Asian art and a 1939 Maytag washing machine.

Most of the items acquired in 1987 were scientific specimens placed in the National Museum of Natural History for study by scholars. These include the nearly 39,000 wasps from Asia and 9,000 butterflies and moths from Honduras.

The Smithsonian complex includes 13 museums and galleries and the National Zoo.

Addicts to receive free needles

ALBANY, N.Y. - New York City will be allowed to give clean hypodermic needles to drug addicts in an attempt to curtail the spread of AIDS, state health officials announced Sunday.

State Health Commissioner Dr. David Axelrod had opposed such a program, but changed his mind because the proposal was modified to require addicts receiving free needles to enter drug treatment programs, said Axelrod's spokesman, Peter Slocum.

The program, developed by New York City Health Department officials, would use the offer of a free, clean needle "as a carrot" to lure drug addicts into treatment programs aimed at getting them off drugs, Slocum said.

The addict would get the needle during a treatment session and could exchange it for a clean one at a subsequent session, Slocum said.

FBI pushes despite no proof

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - FBI headquarters continued to push its field offices to investigate groups opposed to U.S. intervention in Central America even though the local offices reported that they could find no evidence the groups were planning to commit terrorist acts, documents show.

In one instance, the Phoenix, Ariz., office reported that it was closing its investigation of the Tucson Committee for Human Rights after finding that it was a non-violent education group.

FBI headquarters wrote back that the Phoenix office should keep the investigation open because the group could be "a front organization" for practice.

Committee in Solidarity with the People of El Salvador, or CISPES.

The documents are among about 1,300 pages of FBI files released to the Center for Constitutional Rights, a New York-based civil rights and civil liberties organization, under the Freedom of Information Act.

The center released copies of some of the documents at a news conference this week showing that the FBI conducted an investigation into hundreds of individuals and organizations opposed to U.S. policies in Central America.

The White House on Friday denied any knowledge of the FBI surveillance and said President Reagan was concerned about the Reagan has asked FBI Director William S. Sessions for a report, spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said.

Fitzwater said the president "is concerned because there should be no investigation of Americans for their political beliefs."

Asked if Reagan had been aware of the surveillance, he said, "No one in the White House or NSC (National Security Council) had any involvement, connection or knowledge ' Attorney General Edwin Meese III said Thursday that he would review allegations of FBI harassment of individuals and organizations targeted in the investigation.

The FBI has acknowledged that it had conducted an investigation into CISPES, but has contended that it was looking into "alleged criminal activity rather than the motives and beliefs of those being investigated."

The FBI added in a statement that it "is sensitive to the constitutional rights of the American public and the bureau has no interest in interfering with the exercise of these rights.'

The FBI documents, show that the investigation was wide-ranging and involved infiltration of groups and physical and photographic surveillance. Several documents mention the tracing of license plate numbers on cars and trucks parked near meetings and demonstrations.

"There is nothing in the papers that shows why, if the FBI could not find criminal conduct, the investigation continued for three or four years," said Rep. Don Edwards, D-Calif.

Euthanasia article

CHICAGO - A young physician who wrote an essay describing a decision to inject a deadly dose of morphine into a terminally ill patient has been condemned by colleagues who called the action unethical and

A gynecology resident told how he ended the life of a 20-year-old cancer patient in an article titled, "It's Over, Debbie," in a recent issue of the Journal of the American Medical

"It was a gallows scene, a cruel mockery of her youth and unfulfilled potential. Her only words to me were, 'Let's get this over with," wrote the physician, who said he had never seen the patient before the night he ended her life.

The Chicago-based journal has received a flood of letters protesting the essay, said Dr. George Lundberg, the magazine's editor. The magazine has not yet published any of the Lundberg and his staff believe but have not confirmed - that the essay is based on an actual event. The doctor's name and hospital were withheld at his request.

draws

"I would say the mail is running 80 to 20 against publishing the piece at all, and the vast majority is running against the physician's action, Lundberg said.

"Some mail commends us for courage in publishing this essay at a time when discussion of issues such as those in the article needs to occur openly and from many viewpoints,"

Some experts say the actions described were both unethical and illegal, but Lundberg said a growing acceptance of physician-assisted euthanasia prompted him to publish the essay Jan. 8 over objections by members of his staff.

The Netherlands has legalized euthanasia. Lawmakers in New York debated and rejected legalizing mercy killing, and the issue is being argued by legislators in California.

Movies to be shown to benefit memorial

By Vince Huser Collegian Reporter

Nothing can bring back the 33 K-State students who were killed in the Vietnam War or probably the five who remain "missing in action."

But, Bob Copple, senior in industrial engineering, and Daren Sanders, sophomore in agricultural economics, are trying to make sure they are remembered.

"We're trying to have a fundraiser (for the proposed K-State Vietnam Memorial) in each of the residence halls," Copple said.

Copple, staff assistant for third floor Haymaker, and Sanders, social chairman of third floor Haymaker, sent a letter to the other halls' presidents asking them to host a movie night during the week of Feb. 14-20 in their halls. Funds raised from the night will be donated to the memorial fund.

Each hall will decide what movies to show, but Copple said he hopes they will stay with a Vietnam theme. A donation cup will be set up so residents have the opportunity to donate to the fund.

West, Ford, Edwards, Moore and Haymaker have agreed to have a movie night.

Bill Arck, director of alcohol and other drug education services and member of the KSU Vietnam Memorial Committee, said he is glad to see students getting involved.

"The memorial committee is open to any student organization or group of students who wants, in any way, to help raise funds for this memorial or to be involved in some way," he said.

The KSU Vietnam Memorial Committee was formed in late 1986 and has received tentative site approval for the memorial from K-State President Jon Wefald. The proposed location would place the memorial between Nichols Hall and McCain Auditorium.

Gov. Mike Hayden, K-State alumnus and Vietnam veteran, is the committee's honorary chairman.

Sanders said that dedicating a memorial "won't bring these guys back. But, it will show that we did think about them, and we do realize what they gave."

Sandinistas release prisoner

By The Associated Press

CARLINVILLE, III. - Farmer James Denby, reunited with his family Sunday after seven weeks in a Nicaraguan prison, said his captors repeatedly urged him to speak out against the Reagan administration's plan to aid the Contra rebels.

"I told them I was a lifelong Republican, and that was the wrong thing to tell them," said Denby, who denied charges that he helped the Contra rebels. "That was like saying, 'I'm guilty of everything; I'm your enemy."

Denby said he believes his release was intended by the Nicaraguan government to influence this week's U.S. House vote on aid to the Contras trying to topple the leftist Sandinista regime.

He said he was asked repeatedly over the last two weeks to speak publicly against Contra aid, but declined.

"In Nicaragua, they feel they're at war, genuine life-threatening war, with Reagan and the Republicans in the United States," he said. "They honestly believe that all Republicans are against them and all Democrats are for them."

than clothes Rebellion requires more

When it snowed during finals week, I dug out my loudest pair of flowered shorts and wore them to my tests.

I was cold and the snow stuck on my legs. I dress normally. Some water dripped on my Brit Lit final. But people smiled and laughed when they saw me on campus. Some thought they were the only ones clever enough to ask, "Think it's Hawaii?"

It was great. I get no special attention when I wore weird shorts in the snow because I got attention without doing any work. Cold is worth attention, easily.

Kansas should adhere to lottery agreements

Less than a year after the start of Kansas' state lottery, Kansas will open its new multi-state lottery game on Wednesday.

And, before the game has even begun, questions of its constitutionality have been raised. The Rev. Richard Taylor, president of Kansans for Life At Its Best, has said he will find a lawyer and the money to take the question to court and have it resolved.

When voters approved the lottery referendum in 1986, a admendment was made to the state's constitution to allow state-run lotteries. However, Taylor and others question whether the game is state run since it is a joint venture between Kansas, six other states and the District of Columbia.

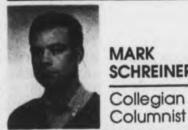

Based on this question of semantics, some legislators have said Kansas should withdraw from the game and break its contract. They question funding a project that isn't clear cut taken backward instead of forward.

and could eventually be decided in

Their concern is understandable, but to pull out of the contract because of such a remote possibility

Kansas has already spent over $4 million setting up and planning the multi-state game. Pulling out now would ensure that none of that would be recovered and the "big prizes" the new game offers would be lost. Staying in will give the lottery a chance to do what it's supposed to - help pay for the statewide reappraisal plan, promote economic development and help relieve prison overcrowding.

The state has taken initial steps at turning the state's economy around are to be commended. But, Taylor's group wants to halt this progress. However, Kansans and the courts should not allow these strides to be Commentary

MARK SCHREINER Collegian

But I was being dishonest. I was just wearing something. Wearing clothes takes no work, no courage, no thought, no talent. Wearing clothes takes only the ability to snap and button and zip.

Even jerks can dress nice. My parents could have given me a car for Christmas, and I could be a Young College Republican, but many people would mistake me for a liberal if I wore a large, floppy hat.

Last year, students at Shawnee Mission East High School held a hippie day. They wanted to promote peace. They wanted to draw the peace symbol. They drew the Mercedes Benz symbol - such is false rebellion.

I admit I often judge by looks. I expect good-looking people to be angels, and ugly people to be agents of Satan. I expect someone with weird clothes or hair to be radical. Usually I am wrong.

Most of us are not angels or agents of Satan or radicals - most of us are pretty average. We do not stand out much. But weird clothes or hair makes us stand out.

I am not putting down weird hair or clothes; I think they look good. But clothes are to wear, not to say, "I disagree with something. See, I'm wearing a torn jacket."

Looking rebellious is easier then rebelling. I can get a reverse Mohawk in an hour, but changing my parents' minds takes work and time and yelling.

Hair and clothes do not signal rebellion anymore anyway. They signal group membership; thrashers, punks, greeks.

Expressing anger or rebellion with clothes is accepted. How can a person honestly rebel using an accepted method of rebellion?

If Manhattan was Russia, the Student Senate might declare that any disagreement with their policies could be expressed only by wearing blue shirts. What good would rebelling with a blue shirt be if the rulers you are rejecting have authorized blue shirts? Authorized rebellion does not exist.

Some people want to rebel but see that clothes are the easiest, most accepted, most dishonest way to rebel. So they look somewhere else.

Some people dress without flash so they do not look like they are rebelling.

Some people rebel by wearing old, ugly clothes. They rebel with bell-bottoms. It may be the easiest way.

I have a brown hat that was knitted in 1969. I wore it in the snow with my shorts.

I pretend it says, "I'm too smart to let advertisers tell me what to wear." It is a pride thing. I want to beat TV.

I am wrong. Bad clothes are as dishonest as weird clothes. I should rebel against TV in a real way. Procter & Gamble will not say, "Ooh, he's wearing that brown hat. Quick, pull all our ads off the air."

My brown hat is as stupid as a Mohawk. I make no sacrifice to wear it, and no one cares if I wear it. No one will stone me, or change his or her attitude because of a hat.

Clothes are not to show "individuality." Being different should be easily noticeable without using clothes to express it. If it is not noticeable, who cares? Why is being known as being different thought of as the only benefit of being different?

Even black arm bands are cop-outs. Suppose a coach dies, and the team wishes to publicly express its grief. Which would draw more attention and require more sacrifice small strips of black cloth worn on the uniform or forfeiting a few games in the coach's memory?

Real rebels did not rebel with clothes. Martin Luther King wore a plain suit. Susan B. Anthony wore a four-foot diameter skirt that reached to her ankles. Neither could waste time on a wardrobe.

Wearing a K-State or resident hall or greek shirt, however, is honest. I may wear a shirt that associates me with K-State because I am associated with it in ways besides the shirt.

I admit I wear a shirt that says "Tennis Champ." I got it second-hand. I stink at tennis, and I admit the shirt lies, but I am not making a statement with it.

Clothes are clothes. The group Timbuk3 has a song that says this nicely:

Hairstyles and attitudes Are they connected? Are styles we embrace A matter of taste Or of values rejected? Hairstyles and attitudes How do they relate? How well do we use Our freedom to choose The illusions we create?

School should develop student day-care plan strain on these young parents.

Plans are under way for a program that will enable the school to provide day care for children of teens who want to continue their high school education after having a baby. A program that could keep them in school.

The day-care program would allow the teens to take their babies to the school nursery, while they attend their classes. They would be required to spend their lunch hour with the baby and take a parenting information class.

The nursery would be supervised by certified personnel during the school day. The program would not only be convenient for the teen, it would allow the school to provide a Day-care centers similar to the one described have been incorporated in some Kansas City and Wichita schools.

This type of day-care nursery would be a benefit to all concerned, as well as society as a whole. Many who decide to keep their babies find themselves on welfare. Finishing high school would improve their chances to stay off welfare.

The day-care program proposed would require the teens to take some form of vocational training to prepare themselves for a job.

Cost should not be an issue. It would be better for the teens, the children and society to pay a little more now — instead of paying later.

Unborn rights

Victoria Ohmacht is to be commended for her valiant effort to report both sides of the abortion issue. It is unfortunate that she, like many of the advocates on both sides of the issue, failed to grasp the essential point of difference, which is: At what point in time does an unborn child become a person with all the rights afforded by the Constitution?

The law, written by the U.S. Supreme Court in Roe vs. Wade, grants that status to the unborn child only after birth. Those favoring abortion adopt a vocabulary consistent with that position, often resulting in expressions such as "Second trimester abortions can now result in a living fetus." The absurdity of this becomes evident when you consider that it was a "living fetus" before the Lafene defense

There is no scientific basis for fixing any Editor, particular point in time when the unborn is entitled to the rights of a viable child. Science continually moves that point back closer to conception.

point in time becomes more apparent in considering two parallel developments in our history. In the last century, black slaves were not considered "persons" by the law. The issue divided the country and only ended with the Civil War. In the '30s, Jews were not considered people by the Nazis. The issue was resolved in their favor by World War II.

Letters

If we recognize the unborn to have all the rights of a person under the law, then it is easily seen that abortion deprives people of their right to life so that other people can have the right to a little bit more comfort and could remedy the situation. convenience.

Throughout our history, it has always been those favoring the rights of the helpless and downtrodden who win in the end. Unborn children are so helpless that they cannot even make their cries for pain heard. The abolitionists will win again - I only hope it does a.m. and noon, and from 1 p.m. to 3 p.m. not take another civil war to do it.

Dietitian license legislation creates debate

Opponents charge bill would cause health stores to close

By Audra Dietz Collegian Reporter

Kansas health food stores could be forced to close if a pending bill passes in the Kansas Legislature requiring all dietitians and nutritionists to be licensed.

The bill would keep unqualified people from giving nutritional advice or assisting groups or individuals in nutritional intake, supporters say.

No law currently exists requiring the licensing of those providing nutrition information as dietitians.

"Only dietitians would be able to tell you what to supplement your body with," said Randy Keller, owner of Manhattan Health Foods.

"We'd be forced to hire a dietitian and prices would go up" if the bill is passed, he said. Keller is not a dietitian or nutritionist and the bill would keep him behind the cash register, unable to service customers.

· Opponents say the bill will create a monopoly for dietitians and drive up consumer prices. The National Nutritional Food Association is frantically sending letters to Kansas health food stores telling operators to

"Kansas does not need to give dietitians a monopoly on everything related to nutrition," said an association letter.

Bill supporters say licensing will expand consumer services. Licensed dietitians can prescribe drugs and specialized diets; nutritionists

A clause in an insurance law. which states that only licensed dietitians can receive coverage if patients are referred to them by a physician, set the stage for legislative action.

The American Dietetic Association says licensure is sought for prestige and economic gain by professionals and it won't benefit consumers.

The ADA also says licensing won't protect the public from incompetent dietitians. Licensing exams are not designed to measure competency in applied nutrition; they only test basic knowledge.

Patrick Quilin, a registered dietitian, opposes the bill. In a report for the Journal of Applied Nutrition, he said most R.D.'s work in hospital kitchens and cafeterias, not health food stores.

We need to establish specialties in the profession first, then we may be worthy of certification," Quilin

Dietitians must pass the following exams: normal nutrition, dietary management and food service. Quinlin said it is illogical to think R.D.s are experts in applied nutrition "they're jacks-of-all-trades."

A counter-proposal calls for workers to become certified nutritionists. The only requirement would be passing a state competency test in applied nutrition. Certified nutritionists would not be able to prescribe drugs. Keller favors the counter-proposal.

He said if the bill passes, he won't shut down.

"I don't get easily scared," he said.

K-State personnel say proposal would combat misinformation

By Julie Hanna Collegian Reporter

Several K-State personnel support a bill under consideration in the Legislature that would require the licensing of dietitians in Kansas.

"For the benefit of the people of Kansas, this bill is desirable in an effort to combat misinformation," said Robert Reeves, professor of foods and nutrition.

"It's not going to change the nutrition program because we already offer what is necessary to become a professional dietitian," Reeves said.

Helen McManis, registered dietitian and assistant director of residence hall food service, said she favors licensing dietitians. When there's a legal definition of what a dietitian or nutritionist is, it will increase the availability of nutritional services, she said.

The long-term effects of such legislation will be tremendous, McManis said.

"There was a report out by a subcommittee of the U.S. House of Representatives in 1985 that said in the United States, $10 billion a year is spent on nutrition quackery," McManis said. "If we have licensed dietitians and nutritionists within the state, then there would be better monitoring of the so-called quackery."

"For the benefit of the people of Kansas, this bill is desirable in an effort to combat misinformation." -Robert Reeves

McManis used the example of a diabetic to illustrate quackery.

If someone with diabetes walks into a health food store, she explained, and is told by the clerk that it's okay to consume fructose, it's quackery because the clerk didn't know fructose is a type of sugar that is bad for a diabetic.

Dietitians are not trying to put ing similar legislation.

health food stores out of business by requiring licensing, McManis said.

"All we're saying is that nutritional information or assessment should be given by those who have had the education and know the interaction of certain chemicals in order to protect the public," she said.

The bill is set up so it will use a national American Dietetic Association registration exam as a means of qualification in Kansas. The exam is the standard for determining professional competency.

"Even the whole process of getting licensed is quite detailed in Kansas," McManis said. "The process of licensing in each state varies and so it makes it a complex situation."

If the legislation is passed, an advisory board composed of three licensed dietitians and two members of the public would monitor licensed dietitians in Kansas.

Seventeen states already have licensing regarding dietetics practice. Thirty other states are consider-

Wildcat drum majors chosen

Three win positions as band conductors

By Angela Hale Collegian Reporter

Three new drum majors for the Wildcat Marching Band were chosen during auditions last Wednesday and Thursday. Chris Erker, senior in music education, Chad Niehoff, sophomore in construction science, and Paul Siegfried, sophomore in finance, were chosen for the positions. Jennifer Dorsch, junior in agricultural journalism, is a returning drum major and was also a judge for the tryouts.

The 13 applicants conducted one of the basketball pep bands in the first night of the auditions. The applicants were judged on their ability to, among other things, direct some "tricky cut-offs and holds" and to keep the tempo steady, Dorsch said.

Marching techniques and fundamentals were judged Thursday night. Applicants were also asked how they would react as drum majors in certain situa-

Man given new life,

PORTALES, N.M. - A homeless Chicago man who was offered a new life on the eastern plains of New Mexico says he's working hard to make his benefactors proud.

Less than a month ago, Harold Thomas, 35, was trying to stay alive in a crude shack on the north side of Chicago as temperatures dipped lower and lower.

"I was about to die," Thomas said. "That kind of life was killing me. I was either going to die from the cold or somebody beating me to death."

Roy and Ethel Gilman, who operate about 1,300 acres of farm and ranch land near Portales, decided Thomas could have a better life than what was being served up on Chicago's streets.

The couple read an Associated Press story describing Thomas' life and called the AP's Chicago bureau to offer him a job as a ranch hand. Thomas arrived in Portales Jan. 16.

'Cats blast Hawks, end streak

By Tom Morris Sports Writer

LAWRENCE - Most landmarks eventually succumb to the wrecking ball, and such was the case Saturday in Allen Field House.

K-State snapped a 10-game losing streak with the University of Kansas and halted the Jayhawks' home-court winning streak at 55 games by defeating KU, 72-61.

For the Wildcats, it was without a doubt their biggest win of the season.

"At home, it's fun to win so your fans can see it and take part in it, but ... it's a little extra special to win on enemy territory," said K-State coach Lon Kruger, who had never won before at Lawrence as a coach or a player.

"It's a great feeling, stopping KU's winning streak," senior forward Mitch Richmond said. "I think this was one of our biggest wins so It's possible Kansas coach Larry Brown had a gut feeling the streak was in jeopardy, due to the Jayhawks' recent problems on the court after two consecutive losses to Notre Dame and Nebraska.

"We've had some unbelievable victories during that streak. It's time to start over," Brown said.

Richmond sent a note to the media covering the game to say he is a definite candidate for the Big Eight Conference's player of the year. The 6-foot-5 senior led all scorers with 35 points - 23 in the second half grabbed 12 rebounds and shot 10-of-10 from the free-throw line.

"What a great second half (Richmond) had," Kruger said.

"He hit the free throws, he grabbed rebounds and he took the inbounds passes. Right now, there's no player in the country who is doing more for his team than Mitch Richmond, and that's what MVP is all about."

Kansas' standout forward, Danny Manning - who is considered by many sports writers and broadcasters to be the best player in the country had 21 points. But he was ineffective in the second half against K-State's 3-2 zone defense and shot the ball just four times.

But Manning almost stole the show in the first half. He scored 15 points during the first 20 minutes and appeared omnipotent, hitting from both inside and beyond the 3-point

"He surprised us a little bit by moving (away from the basket). We knew he could shoot it (from the 3-point line), but we didn't know he was planning on doing it," Kruger said.

With center Fred McCoy spending most of the first 20 minutes on the bench with three fouls, Kansas built a 10-point lead at 27-17, with 5:53 minutes to go after Manning's tip-in. K-State point guard Steve Henson started the comeback with a 3-pointer, and Richmond scored six of his 12 first-half points in the final three minutes of play to pull the 'Cats within two at halftime, 31-29.

"It's time to start over." -Larry Brown

"We were down 10 in the first half ... and that probably makes (the win) a little sweeter. Kansas was kind of controlling things at that point, and we had a lot of reasons to be concerned. But we were proud of the way (the 'Cats) pulled together," Kruger said.

Guard William Scott gave the Cats their first lead of the game early in the second half when his 3-pointer put K-State up by one, 36-35. Scott had 12 points on the day - all from beyond the 3-point line.

After two consecutive 3-pointers from Richmond and Henson, K-State took its biggest lead, 58-49, with 4:50 left in the game.

Kansas pulled to within five points with less than a minute to go, but the 'Cats once again were almost invincible from the free-throw line in the closing minutes. During the last 1:27, K-State made 12 of 14 attempts from the charity stripe to seal the 11-point

LAWRENCE - It's a worn and used sports cliche, but K-State wanted the win Saturday more than the University of Kansas did.

"It was no one thing we did wrong, (K-State) simply played harder,' Kansas guard Jeff Gueldner said.

Sports Analysis

After trailing at haiftime, 31-29, the Wildcats outplayed the Jayhawks in the second stanza, hitting six-ofsix from beyond the 3-point line and outrebounding KU 23-11 - including four offensive boards during one possession.

Senior forward Mitch Richmond echoed his teammates thoughts when he said: "We thought if we could come in here and play tough ... we could win the game. In the lockerroom at halftime, we just said we had to work harder." Unlike last year at Allen Field House when Kansas built a 22-6 advantage and went on to win 84-67, the 'Hawks couldn't hold on to their 10-point first-half advantage and coach. eventually lost by 11.

"I don't know if they're (KU) playing with a lot of confidence late in the game. They're playing good, but just for 35-36 minutes," guard Steve Henson said.

Kansas coach Larry Brown is experiencing the same problem with his team that K-State coach Lon Kruger went through earlier this season - lack of a balanced effort for 40

"I thought our kids played well together; they just couldn't hit the open shot," said Brown, whose Kansas team lost three straight games for the first time since he began at KU in

"Sometimes when you're struggling, you put pressure on yourself and can't hit the shots," he said.

With the win, K-State moved to 12-4 overall and stands alone atop the Big Eight Conference race at 4-0. Kruger said he would be "tickled" to be at 2-2 at this point. Is it too early to start talking about a conference title?

"We're a long way away," Kruger said. "We're underdogs. We might be able to contend for the first division at this point."

The players agreed with their ■ See INTENSE, Page 12

Redskins dominate Super Bowl, win 42-10

By The Associated Press

SAN DIEGO - Doug Williams, Timmy Smith and Ricky Sanders ripped apart the Denver defense with a record 35-point, 356-yard second quarter as the Washington Redskins won the Super Bowl by routing the Denver Broncos 42-10 and shutting down John Elway.

It was the Redskins' second Super Bowl victory in five years. And it was an eerie reprise for the Broncos, whose coach, Dan Reeves, said they were haunted by their 39-20 loss to the New York Giants in last year's game, a contest in which they led at halftime then were outgained 200-2 over the next 20 minutes.

If that was a haunting, this one was a possession.

Consider this:

than 24 hours after root canal on a molar, and set a Super Bowl record with 340 yards on 18-of-29 passing, 306 in the first half.

■ The 35 second-quarter points — on just 18 plays - were 14 more than the Super Bowl record for a quarter and the most in a single period in NFL playoff history.

Rogers, rushed for 131 yards in the first half. five more than he had in the entire regular season. He finished with 204 yards in 22 carries, including his first two pro touchdowns.

Sanders, who caught two of the four TD passes, had 131 yards on receptions in the first half and finished with a record 193 yards and nine receptions.

The 356 yards gained by Washington in the second quarter was just 17 less than its season-long average for a full game, and its Williams, the MVP, was playing less six touchdowns set a Super Bowl record. It 'didn't start that way.

The Broncos scored on their first offensive play, a 56-yard pass from Elway to Ricky Nattiel, and added three more points on their second possession on Rich Karlis' 24-yard field goal.

The Redskins were killing themselves -Smith, a surprise starter for George Gary Clark, Sanders and Kelvin Bryant all dropped passes in the first quarter and a holding call on Don Warren erased a 25-yard run

Finally, they did something right, starting the second period the way the Broncos started the first.

On their first offensive play of the quarter, Williams hit Sanders on an 80-yard touchdown play to cut it to 10-7.

Sanders raced by Mark Haynes - the way Nattiel beat Barry Wilburn - and caught the ball in stride at the 37 and raced home.

Now, it was Denver's turn to stall as Elway continued on a streak of seven straight incomplete passes. And Washington came right back to go 64 yards in five plays to take a 14-10 lead just 4:45 into the second period.

Nineteen of the yards came on a run by Smith. Then, on third-and-1 at the 27, Clark slanted outside, beat Steve Wilson and dove for Williams' pass at the 2 and slid into the end zone.

Now it was time for another reprise of last year - Karlis missing from 43 yards out on a field goal set up by Elway's 23-yard run after breaking what appeared to be a sure sack by Dexter Manley.

Two plays later, Smith broke through a huge hole off right tackle and raced by Tony Lilly on his 58-yard TD romp, the first score of his pro career. That made it 21-10 with 6:27 left in the half.

Then, 21/2 minutes later, it was Williams again to Sanders, who went in motion to the left, cut diagonally across the field, and caught the ball all alone at the five for TD No.

No. 5, the 8-yard pass to Didier, came after Wilburn picked off an Elway pass at his own 21. Seven plays later, on third and 4, Williams lofted it softly to his tight end in the corner to tie the TD pass record and shatter yet another record - points in a quarter in any

The Redskins scored the only TD of the second half on Smith's 4-yard run early in the fourth quarter to break the touchdown record set by several teams, including the Giants against the Broncos last year and the Bears against New England in their 46-10 win two years ago.

LAWRENCE - It came down to a layup just before the buzzer, but in the end, K-State's women's basketball team lost to the University of Kansas, 52-50, Saturday night in Lawrence.

"I thought we played extremely hard and we deserved to win," K-State coach Matilda Mossman said. "I'm disappointed for our kids because I think they played extremely hard and they played well enough to win. They deserved to win."

With the loss, K-State dropped to 7-12 overall and 0-6 in Big Eight Conference play. Kansas raised its record to 13-6 overall and moved into a tie for fourth place in the conference with a 3-3 record.

Kansas jumped out to an 8-0 lead before K-State scored at the 15:43 mark in the first half on a 16-footer by Diana Miller. The Lady Jayhawks led by as many as ten in the first half and went into the lockerrooms with a 33-24 halftime lead.

K-State struck first in the second half and nibbled away at the Lady Jayhawk's lead throughout the half.

Lady Cat Nadira Hazim hit two free throws in the second half to give the Lady Cats a 48-47 lead with 2:12 left to play

The Lady Jayhawks were unable to convert on their next trip down the floor. Elyse Funk hit a 18-foot circle jump shot to put K-State up by three points, 50-47, with 1:08 left to play.

Kansas' Meosho Stroughter then hit a 3-pointer from the baseline with :30 left in the game. The Lady Cats called a time out with :20 left when they were unable to get the ball past half court on the inbounds pass due to a strong KU press.

"Meosho had a real good first half," Mossman said. "We put Amy Davidson on her in the second half, and I thought Amy did a real good job on her. We kept the ball out of her hands until those last few seconds of the game."

A deflected pass stopped the clock with :06 to go. Mossman called a time out to discuss the inbounds play.

Wisconsin outing good for Wildcat track teams

By The Collegian Staff

K-State's men's track team opened with a first place finish in its first scored meet of the season in a quadrangular at Madison, Wis. on Saturday.

The men scored 53 points and won seven events. The Wildcats' women's track team finished second in the meet with 47 points.

Among the top finishers for K-State was senior Kenny Harrison in the triple jump (54 feet, 21/4 inches) and the long jump (25 feet, 61/4 inches). Both were new marks for the field house at Wisconsin. Both jumps also qualify him for the NCAA Indoor Championships.

Junior Pat Hessini came away with a first place finish in the 1,000-meter run with a new K-State indoor record of 2:28.49. The old record was established in 1986 by Mike Rogers with 2:28.94.

Freshman Chuckie Allen took first in the 55-meter dash with 6.36, while senior Dan O'Mara captured first in the shot put with a toss of 56 feet, 6 inches. The men's other two first place finishes were by sophomore Kelly Williams in the high jump (6 feet, 11 inches), and senior Ron Stahl in the 3,000-meter run with 8:24.50.

The women had six first place finishers. K-State junior Kim Kilpatrick captured the 55-meter hurdles in 7.96 and also won the 300-yard dash in 36.19. K-State triple jump record holder Felicia Curry won that event with a leap of 37 feet, 11 inches. Junior DeDe Henderson competed for the first time this season and won the high jump with a jump of 5 feet, 81/4 inches. Sophomore Joy Jones came away with a time of 56.13 to win the 400-meter dash, while the women's mile relay team won the

"It was a real good meet for us," he said. "We still have a long way to go with some people, but others are doing real well. We just want to keep getting better during the year and hopefully be at full strength by the Big Eight Championships."

The track teams are scheduled to compete next at the Jayhawk Invitational in Lawrence on Friday and Saturday.

Fans play role in 'best of times'

LAWRENCE - When the final buzzer sounded Saturday afternoon and K-State had ended the 55-game home winning streak of the University of Kansas, the Wildcats took another strong step toward the national spotlight.
Mitch Richmond, who scored a career-high 35 points and clearly outplayed national player-of-theyear candidate Danny Manning, will be in the lead role if the Wildcats finally are able to make the move into a light similiar to that which has shone so brightly over KU during the last five years.

Will Scott, Fred McCoy, Charles Bledsoe, Steve Henson and others will continue to play supporting roles unselfishly, knowing that, although Richmond is the ticket, they all are important parts in making the Wildcats what they are: a team.

And you - each and every one of you -as fans will be the extras in the production. But don't let the word "extra" understate your significance.

With a player like Richmond making a run at conference MVP honors, a building like Aheam in its final year and a team like K-State making a run at its first conference title since 1977, you are extremely important to the overall success of the production and, ultimately, to the reviews it

Make no mistake about it, Richmond, his teammates, Ahearn and the fans will all be big keys if the Wildcats are to finally emerge from the shadows cast by the talented men who make their homes 80 miles east on I-70.

"Because few people are involved in formal education, conservation education is very difficult." -Charles Bussing

He received a grant from the United States Agency for International Development to work with the Botswana government in the formulation of the National Conservation Strategy, a combination of social, economic and environmental goals for development.

"My work involved several areas," he said. "The primary one was to develop a national conservation strategy for the country."

This consisted of interviewing people throughout all districts of Botswana to learn about environmental problems and filling in the gaps where information was missing.

"There is a shortage of basic resource information in Botswana,"

Bussing said, adding that there is little data on the vegetation, carrying capacity and species of the grassland. Such information must be available before relevant plans for improvement can be made, Bussing said.

Bussing explored potential areas for development, such as forestry, health care and water conservation.

"Because few people are involved in formal education, conservation education is very difficult," Bussing said. Information about conservation may be distributed through agencies such as wildlife parks, he said.

The National Conservation Strategy, which was started four years ago, will be submitted to the Botswana government this spring, Bussing said. Government officials will decide which of the suggestions will be implemented.

"Conservation has been a high priority of the government," Bussing said, "so I am hopeful that they will accept the report."

However, Bussing said there may be a conflict with one of the recommendations.

"Overgrazing is a major problem. Unfortunately, many government officials also own cattle and may not be receptive to suggestions to reduce cattle numbers," Bussing said.

Bussing worked in Botswana in 1981 on the Agricultural Technology Improvement project, a joint program with K-State and the government of Botswana. This experience helped to prepare him for his work with the NCS.

revisions exclude pay equ New campus job

University employees have good reason to be concerned about recent state revisions in their job descriptions, Mary Kissel of the Office of Affirmative Action said Friday as part of the "Friday Noon: Focus on Women" series.

The goal of the statewide reclassiwas to revise and modernize all classified job groups, Kissel said, but state officials are not including pay equity in the re-evaluations.

At K-State, for example, a maintenance painter is rated higher in areas like "level of difficulty" than keyboard operators, bookkeepers and executive secretaries.

Comparable worth means ranking all jobs in terms of identical factors, such as level of difficulty and environmental conditions, Kissel said. Salary ranges are then set on this basis, rather than on market value, tradition or attitudes of "that's the secretarial and clerical work. way it has always been," Kissel said. She said comparable worth is also a concern for men. "It is important to remember that some male jobs are also undervalued and underpaid," she said. "Looking at jobs from a more consistent framework could benefit them. It can also benefit men who are going into

Kissel said reclassification is a "difficult and complex task" for the state, but "(state) task forces are not generally tuned into the issues on equity." If comparable worth is not considered until the end of the reclassification process, "you will just perpetuate, for the most part, the inequities that now exist."

'Good Morning Vietnam' well-balanced By Gory Leffler Collegion Reviewer Williams' character funny, timely Most people are in greenent that Most people are in agreement that Robin Williams is a funny man. Many people also agree that he is a capable actor. Now comes the challenge. Can Robin Williams successfully integrate his comedy routine into a film about a carefree radio disc jockey and make it believable? Will he be acting or will he be joking? In "Good Morning Vietnam" he proves he can do both.

"Good Morning Vietnam" is the story of radio disc jockey Adrian Cronauer in 1965 Saigon. Cronauer is transferred to Saigon from his post in Greece to help boost morale among the men stationed in Vietnam. His style, however, is somewhat different than anything Armed Forces Radio Saigon has heard before.

Movie Review

To put it bluntly, before Cronauer, the AFRS broadcasts were boring. Cronauer himself comments that the music played "is used on insomniacs who don't respond to strong drugs." He swiftly changes all that. His time slots become frantically funny and exciting as he dumps Lawrence Welk and Frank Sinatra for James Brown and The Beach Boys.

Naturally, these changes are not taken completely in stride by the ate supervisor, Lt. Hauk, played by Bruno Kirby, finds the new format objectionable and sets out to put Cronauer in his place.

Hauk, who struggles to get his men to salute him, finds Cronauer's brand of humor offensive, vulgar and disruptive. But then again, this comes from a man who voluntarily listens to "Good Morning Vietnam" is a well-orchestrated balancing act between Williams' comedy and a story line that is involved, if not overly original. The addition of interesting supporting characters - from a Leo, the effeminate fashion consul-brass in charge. Cronauer's immedi- romantic interest to a gay Vietnamese bar owner dressed in flashy suits - help keep the story fresh when Williams is not being funny.

One of the more amazing things about "Good Morning Vietnam" is the improvisational segments during which the script is thrown aside and Williams is free with his imagination. For the most part, this is successful.

The material is funny, timely and still very much in character. Williams created several imaginary radio personalities (Roosevelt, the tough-talking weather-watcher, and tant) who were as memorable as any of the scripted characters.

Other times, however, the improvisation is forced and choppy, such as when Cronauer talks to several truckloads of G.I.'s while waiting in a traffic tie-up.

Forest Whitaker, as PFC Edward Garlick, also gives a satisfying performance as Cronauer's friend and confidante. In fact, the humor of Whitaker's character nearly overwhelms Williams' character in some spots. This is entirely necessary, as Garlick's presence gives the movie some balance and helps it avoid turning into a one-man show.

Thankfully, "Good Morning Vietnam" is much more than an episode of "WKRP in Saigon". The script attempts to deal with some very real issues: censorship for military purposes, friendship, and trust.

The most interesting struggle lies in making the men in Vietnam feel as if they are closer to home by dousing them with off-beat humor and rockn-roll. More times than not, the answers to these issues are satisfying.

Simply put, if you like Robin Williams, then it would be a mortal sin to miss "Good Morning Vietnam". This is an "A-" film that will leave you laughing while exposing you to a time and place that is still not fully understood.

7-Eleven blames close on zoning

By The Collegian Staff

A spokesman for the company that managed the 7-Eleven store at 1455 Anderson Ave. said the store closed last Monday because zoning restrictions against large signs, beer and gasoline sales made it unprofitable for it to remain open.

Jim Brady, spokesman for the Mako Co. of Tulsa, Okla., said he received numerous delays from city officials about changing the prohibition against gasoline sales in that area.

"I could get no cooperation from the city without major waits," Brady said. "In the meantime, I've got a competitor opening up one block away."

City officials say Mako Co. never approached them about changing the restrictions on the waste

Nebraska must now deal with the prize that no one wanted to win: being selected by the Central Interstate Low-Level Radioactive Waste Compact Commission to host a waste dump within the state.

Choosing that final disposal site is now completely in the hands of the state, said Jim Neal, public information officer for the State Department of Environmental Control of Nebraska.

U.S. Ecology, the company selected by the interstate compact to develop the waste site, will go ahead with the design work as soon as possible, Neal said.

"We hope to have the facility operational and licensed by 1993," he Compact representatives from all five states met Sept. 22 to make the final choice for the location of the dump site. Other states included in the compact are Arkansas, Kansas, Louisiana and Oklahoma.

Many Nebraskans have actively opposed locating the dump site in their state. Sandra Schofield, Nebraska state senator, sponsored an unsuccessful bill late last year that would have pulled Nebraska out of the compact.

Neal said he is aware of a plan to start a petition to establish a public referendum that would ban the site from being located within the state.

He said he did not know if this kind of referendum would have the power to block the facility from being located in Nebraska.

Kansas ranked in the top three states for selection as the recipient of the site. Dean Eckhoff, professor of nuclear engineering, said that Kansas' southeastern counties were well suited geologically for the site.

The Kansas proposal described a site 40 miles east of the Wolf Creek nuclear power plant, covering about 200 acres.

Kansas may someday be required to build a similar facility as part of a 30-year rotating waste dump selection system. All states within the compact must eventually select a dump site within their state.

The University of Kansas Medical Center and Wolf Creek nuclear power plant both produce nuclear waste that is either buried or shipped to disposal areas in Arizona or Washington, Eckhoff said.

At K-State, low-level solid radioactive waste is buried in a plot on the Agronomy Research Farm. Hazardous waste is shipped to disposal areas in New York, Arizona and South Carolina.

Nebraska plans to locate the facility between its two present power plants. This would require both nuclear power plants to transport their waste products an equal

"It runs in the minds of the people that transporting radioactive material is a dangerous act. (Nebraskans) feel they should build a site as close to the generator as they possibly can," Eck-

Both Westinghouse Electric Corp. and U.S. Ecology presented dump site design proposals to all states included in the compact. Although Westinghouse was given a temporary endorsement by the Governor's Task Force on Low-level Radioactive Waste last May, it was withdrawn in June.

Dancing' movie slips on poor acting

By Judd Annis Collegian Reviewer

If erotic dancing's your bag, and you don't want to get too caught up in an intricate plot, then "Dirty Dancing" just might be your flick of the year.

Set in a Catskills resort in 1963, the film stars Patrick Swayze as Johnny Castle, a street-wise dance instructor, and Jennifer Grey as Frances "Baby" Houseman, a conventionally liberal doctor's daughter.

The two meet, become lovers, and end up relying on each other throughout several events that, thrown together, constitute this soup of a movie.

Movie Review

Before Dirty Dancing ends its tour of film screens coast to coast, it's bound to be compared with "Saturday Night Fever," "Footloose," "Flashdance" and a host of other movies centered on sex, dancing and the expression of one of these phenomenon by way of the other.

I will, however, be the last to place this film in the same category.

Unlike some of its predecessors, this film's biggest disadvantage is the flimsy acting by its major characters. Both Swayze and Grey (who also appeared in "Ferris Bueller's Day Off") provide weak and thoroughly unconvincing performances, lacking sincerity at the most important moments - when they're one-on-one, supposedly portraying two people falling in love (or lust).

The most disappointing aspect of "Dirty Dancing" is that it continually insults the intelligence of the viewer, leaving nothing to the imagination and even less for the audience to believe in. The plot, which holds no it's practically crammed down the viewers'

Equally exasperating are the numerous subplots that are left undeveloped but which contain more potential than the main story line. More interesting is the relationship between Johnny and his close companion/ dance partner Penny (Cynthia Rhodes), or the lives of the local kids who go underground in order to practice their own form of selfexpression — dirty dancing.

Instead of expanding on any of these, the film forces its audience to remain on the sur-surprises, is spoon-fed to such a degree that face with its tiring and all too predictable path. It holds the viewers' hands all the way to ensure that no one uses any imagination.

Dirty Dancing is not without its merits, however. The dancing throughout is superb and captures the energy of the era with a sort of drive that, from time to time, gives this film a badly needed shot in the arm. The soundtrack is an enjoyable bit of nostalgia, featuring classics from the early '60s.

Without doubting director Emile Ardolino's good intentions, "Dirty Dancing" is one film that covers much and says little. Thus, "Dirty Dancing" deserves a D+.

Fone Crisis Center dealing with own 'crisis'

Kristi Hull, junior in psychology, answers a call at the Fone Crisis Center while Jeff Martin, sophomore in anthropology and chemistry, stands by. The center serves as a hotline for the Manhattan and Fort Riley area.

N.Y. police break gambling ring

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK - Some bettors were destined to be unhappy Sunday after undercover police officers broke up an illegal gambling ring that handled $500 million in bets on sporting events, $5 million of it on - said. the Super Bowl, police said.

"People who think they've won money are going to find that they're about 45 plainclothes officers raided out, that all bets are off," said police Capt. Michael Murray of the public morals division in southern Manhattan.

"But the ones who would have lost their money will be happy," Murray

Twenty people were arrested at rooms or apartments beginning about 7:30 p.m. Saturday, Murray said.

Police said the operation was controlled by the Genovese organized crime family.

The officers seized gambling records, including records that detailed the wagers of about 5,000 seven Manhattan locations when people who bet on the Super Bowl.

Decreased budget, staff limit assistance provided

By The Collegian Staff

In spite of a lot of community support, the Fone Crisis Center is still not out of the woods.

The center, located in the University For Man building, serves as a crisis hotline for the Manhattan and Fort Riley communities.

It operated last year on a budget of just a little more than $11,000 and that's the biggest problem the center faces, said Linda Ekdahl-Crabb, director of the center.

However, she said, other factors have had an impact on the center. A lower number of volunteers, a new telephone number and a rent increase can be added to the long list of obstacles the center has had to overcome.

The center's phone number was changed from an on-campus number to an off-campus number, Ekdahl-Crabb said. But the problem is not the change but lack of funding the center has to advertise and inform the community about it.

Currently, call forwarding is automatically rolling the calls from the old number to the new one. Ekdahl-Crabb said this service will last for 11

However, she said this could be another problem because the call forwarding will end around finals and the holidays.

Despite the center's problems, Ekdahl-Crabb does not believe the center will have to close its doors.

Manning, after scoring 15 points in the first half, finished with just 21. Richmond's second-half effort topped Manning's total output by two points. Wow.

But let's not forget the role the supporting cast has played in the recent surge.

Will Scott had 16 points against KU and hit 4-of-6 three-point shots to effectively deflate the KU balloon.

Charles Bledsoe pulled down 12 rebounds, as did Richmond, to help K-State establish superiority on the boards. In fact, Bledsoe and Richmond, with 24 rebounds, had just one less between them than did the entire Steve Henson has been brilliant lately running the attack, Fred McCoy has provided consistent inside punch and five other players have provided key minutes coming off the bench.

The scene of seven of the final 11 acts of the regular-season performance for these men will be the Mike Ahearn Field House.

The building that has been the home of 10 Big Eight championship teams since the conference expanded to eight teams in 1959 has a chance to have that number reach 11 in its final year as home of the men in purple

Average home attendance this season will likely top the 10,000-mark for the first time since the 1982-83 season, and that's only fitting in the final season of such a fine facility.

During the final seven games played in the grand old field house, each of you has an obligation of sorts. The obligation, simply stated, is this: support your Wildcats as loudly and positively as possible. Cheer so loud that the building shakes. Have fun, but do it with class. Recent fan behavior at the University of Missouri by a student group called the "Antlers" has put a black mark by the name of the university and does nothing to help the prestige of the basketball team or its fans. It would be great if K-State fans could show those looking in around the nation that they are above taking pot-shots at a player's mother (as did the Antlers) to rattle him.

Chant "airball, airball, airball," boo if you're upset at an official or an opponent, count loudly while a visitor bounces the ball at the free-throw line, or make so much noise you can't hear the person sitting next to you.

Don't, however, make racial slurs like "Buckwheat" or shout "asshole" loudly enough that viewers across the country get the impression K-State fans are some of the most tasteless in the country.

This isn't a lecture, it's just one man's hope everything happening over the next two months will bring what Richmond, his teammates, Ahearn and the fans deserve - the best of times.

We're getting ever closer to the national spotlight. Let's make sure once we get there we shine so brightly we blind everyone looking on.

Meyer said. "You look at any major college team and they turn the whole defense just to stop him. That says a lot for him."

Richmond and Manning are leaders on their teams and winning was more important to each than outdueling the other for the position of leading scorer.

"It was no personal duel," Richmond said. "I just wanted to win the game. I wasn't trying to outplay him. I was trying to win the game. It was nothing personal.

"I was frustrated in the first half, but in the second half I was calmed down. I felt pretty confident shooting during the game. It was a great feeling to win and to play well," he added.

K-State modified its defense going into the game to try and control Manning. Last year, the 'Cats played him straight up and he scored 33 and 29 points in two games against K-State.

Saturday, Manning avoided the K-State defense inside by scoring from the outside in the first half. During the second half, Manning was only able to get four shots off and was held to 21 points in the game.

Kansas found it much harder to defend Richmond and K-State. Richmond took shots and scored buckets from inside and outside the lane in the first half. And then when it got a little tougher to score inside, Richmond went 3-for-3 from the 3-point range in the second half and 8-for-8 from the charity stripe.

Kansas' Deborah Richardson connected on a finger roll under the goal as time ran out to give Kansas a 52-50 victory.

"It all came down to an inbounds play at the end," Mossman said. "Kansas did a great job of executing and getting the ball in to the big girl, and she put it in. Give credit to Deborah Richardson, she hit a big shot and won the basketball game for them."

Meese denies knowledge of payoff plan

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Attorney General Edwin Meese III said Monday that he did not recall reading the portion of a memo on a $1 billion Iraqi pipeline project that referred to a payoff plan involving the Israeli Labor Party of former Prime Minister Shimon Peres.

The memo to Meese, from his longtime friend, attorney E. Robert Wallach, is the focus of a criminal investigation of Meese's activities by independent counsel James McKay that began nearly nine months ago.

After receiving Wallach's memo in 1985, Meese took no action in regard to the potential illegal activity mentioned in the document, sources familiar with McKay's investigation have said.

Meese said that since Friday, when the memo's existence was first disclosed in the Los Angeles Times, "there has been a cascade of misinformation, false headlines, halftruths, innuendo and misunderstanding of the D-Ohio, called for Meese's resignation.

Meese responded to the accusations with a five-page statement which he read to reporters. He refused to answer any questions and walked out of the room as a reporter asked him whether he would remain as attorney President Reagan, returning from a speech he delivered to an audience of religious broadcasters, was asked about Meese's situation. "No comment. I'm not going to talk about it," Reagan said.

In Jerusalem, Foreign Minister Shimon Peres angrily denied Monday that Wallach ever offered him a bribe.

"They didn't say they offered me," Peres said when asked about the memo on Israel army radio. "What was said was ... it might be worth making an offer. No one said an offer was made or carried out. There's no basis to the reports that anything was done."

Meanwhile, Sen. Howard Metzenbaum,

"For the attorney general, the chief law enforcement officer of our country, to be spending his time going to grand jury investigations, being a witness in connection with trials that are occurring, being the subject of personal inquiry time and time again, I believe that provides a source of embarrassment to the president and, as a consequence, a source of embarrassment to all Americans," said Metzenbaum during an interview on The McNeil-Lehrer News Hour televised by the Public Broadcasting System.

Meese said in his statement that the "language in Mr. Wallach's memorandum that has given rise to this speculation consists of 10 words in one of two long documents he provided to me," Meese said in his statement.

"I do not recall having read the specific words that have now mushroomed into importance, but I certainly did not receive from the memorandum any impression of illegality whatsoever," the attorney general

He added that the memorandum, which is classified and which he refused to outline in detail, "contains no reference to bribes or payoffs."

The attorney general said that "I do not believe" that the memo "fairly implies that a violation of law was committed or contemplated" in regard to the pipeline.

Wallach was representing Bruce Rappaport, a wealthy Swiss businessman aligned with Peres. Rappaport was a principal in the pipeline project.

Wallach was in the "habit of giving me lengthy memoranda on many subjects," said Meese. "I rarely had time to read them thoroughly, particularly when they dealt - as these two did - with subjects outside my responsibilities as attorney general."

Wallach, now under indictment for racketeering in the Wedtech scandal, has been a close friend of Meese's for three decades.

Regarding the proposed 540-mile-long pipeline project, which never was built, role by McKay last week.

Meese said his "role in this matter was extremely limited."

He confirmed that he had two contacts in the fall of 1985 with an Israeli government

The official was Peres, said the sources familiar with the investigation of Meese, speaking on condition of anonymity. In one instance, Peres wrote Meese expressing Israeli support for construction of the pipeline. Meese wrote a letter in return to Peres, said the sources.

Earlier at the White House, Reagan's spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said Reagan had not spoken with Meese about the criminal investigation into the pipeline because it is "not appropriate" to interfere with McKay's investigation.

Fitzwater declined to say whether Reagan , had approved the pipeline project. "I'm just not going to get into any details," he said. Top White House aides were briefed on Meese's Frustration is a common emotion at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex, but it's not always caused by a physical workout.

Raydon Robel, director of recreation services, agrees with many of the Rec Complex users who are complaining about overcrowding.

"Right now the amount of use is fantastic," Robel said. "On an average day, we see about 1,500 people.

Within the last few days, we've been seeing 2,800 to 2,900 people through the complex per day.'

More people use the Rec Complex from January through March than any other time of the year, he said.

Robel cites the cold weather, intramural activities and students fighting holiday weight gains as reasons for the increased usage.

Students, faculty, alumni and anyone holding a facilities use card are eligible to use the Rec Complex at no

It is open from 6 a.m. to 11 p.m. on weekdays. And ideally, Robel said, students would use the facilities evenly throughout the day. But, he said, 4 p.m. to 8 p.m. is the busiest

The weight room is one of the most heavily used areas of the Rec Complex. More than 40 students can be seen lifting weights during the peak hours.

"It's great, but it's crowded," said Jim Perkins, sophomore in architectural engineering, about the weight room, "I've been in here sometimes when it's hard to move."

"The weightroom, to be honest, has been too small since we opened the building in 1980," Robel said. The area has been enlarged since its construction, and this area is now filled with free weights.

Warm or cold?

By Audra Dietz Collegian Reporter

Thousands may brave the cold, February wind today - not for U2 tickets or a chance to see Bob Dole in 501 jeans, but to see America's favorite rodent: the groundhog.

The groundhog holds answers to the annual question "How much longer will winter stick around? Or, is spring on its way?'

As the legend goes, groundhogs miraculously awake from hibernation and pop out of their holes on Feb. 2 to see if their shadows appear.

If there is a shadow, it's time to pull out more firewood because winter will be around for six more weeks. If a shadow isn't cast, spring is right around the comer.

Despite the legend, Collier's Encyclopedia says groundhogs don't just wake up from hibernation because they want to.

While hibernating, groundhogs experience a drop in body temperature down to 43 degrees, and their respiration slows. Groundhogs can't feel or hear anything during this

To revive their senses, groundhogs have to be in a warm place for a considerable amount of time. So spring, in essence, could be here by the time they thaw out.

Groundhogs have become a part of America's culture. Whether they forecast spring or winter, people still knows for sure

'We drink, like on any other holiday," said Darrin Ruddy, senior in advertising. "If he sees his shadow, I go to Dark Horse (Tavern); if not, I drink at Last Chance (Saloon)."

Ruddy said he has seen a groundhog, but it wasn't a pretty sight.

"He looked like a dog that ran into a brick wall, because his face was squashed up," Ruddy said.

Curt Fowler, junior in elementary education, said his sighting wasn't that bad.

"He had Mr. Spock ears," Fowler said. Groundhogs have long gray or brown fur and grow to be 27 inches long. Weighing up to 30 pounds, these rodents can make tasty dishes, according to some students. "I cook them like a rabbit. I just chop 'em up and put 'em in a stew," said Mark Oberhelman, junior in park and resource management. "I like them to be like Kentucky Fried with some Cajun sauce," said Brian Honeyman, freshman in mechanical engineering.

Oberhelman said he hunts groundhogs in the fields near his home in

"I don't like to hunt those critters. They're too small," he said.

"Hunting groundhogs is good practice for deer season," said Joel Steere, junior in business management.

Dole fares well in 1st caucuses

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - Bob Dole's home state Republicans gave him a big boost toward claiming all of Kansas' 34 delegates to the GOP national convention as week-long county caucuses began Monday.

The Senate majority leader and state party's favorite son candidate for the Republican presidential nomination rolled to a big advantage as the first of 105 county caucuses were held. They continue through Sunday, picking delegates to district and state conventions where national delegates will be elected.

In the 29 counties holding caucuses Monday night, Dole garnered 203 out of a possible 212 delegates, or 95.8 percent.

Television evangelist Pat Robertson, whose supporters have filed full or partial slates of delegate candidates in 61 counties, claimed just three delegates in Logan County in far western Kansas — while six delegates were elected as uncommitted, five in Doniphan County and one in Ness County.

Another 29 counties hold their caucuses tonight.

Two of the biggest counties holding caucuses Monday night, Reno and Finney, took well into the night to count ballots.

Despite the lack of practical experience some women may have, more women are feeling comfortable enough to start their studies in the engineering field as freshmen instead of transferring in later. Women entering the engineering field in the past were at times disadvantaged because they "did not possess the organizational skills" that were helpful in a lab setting, said Ruth Dyer, assistant professor of electrical and computer engineering.

Women have not always had the practical experience that many men gain through activities before they enter college, she said.

cal and computer engineering, said she wishes she had more hands-on experience to draw from for her labs. "It bothers me that I don't have the Green was originally a pre-law student at Creighton University in Omaha, Neb. She transferred to K-State to study engineering.

Despite the large number of women transfers from other majors, the number of transfers is decreasing, "Fewer women engineering students are transferring from other majors; instead, they are working straight through a traditional bachelor's and master's degree," she said. Life science majors often end up in engineering, Dyer said.

John Dollar, assistant dean of engineering, said although women make up only 13 percent of the students in engineering, departments such as industrial engineering have had as high as 40 percent women enrollment.

The comparatively high percentage of women in industrial engineering is because "women perceive IE as a little bit more people oriented,"

One-third of the departments within the College of Engineering have shown substantial increases in the number of women engineers architectural engineering has more than doubled its number of women since 1980.

"No longer does a woman have to be the exceptional student to have the confidence to enter the engineering field," Dyer said.

Device causes radiation leakage

DALLAS - The Nuclear Regulatory Commission has ordered 3M Corp. to suspend distribution of a device blamed for leaking radioactive particles at factories in Texas, Pennsylvania and California, officials said Monday.

Health inspectors began checking for radiation at a dozen plants that use the device.

"The NRC's concern is that, while this doesn't appear to be a great health hazard to workers or to the public, it does represent radiation that has gotten out of control," said Joe Gilliland. a spokesman for the NRC in Arlington.

Brooklyn sniper kills one man

NEW YORK - A sniper atop a Brooklyn building shot into a group of people on a streetcorner Monday night, killing one and wounding three others before fleeing, authorities said.

The incident took place about 8:30 p.m., when witnesses reported seeing a man on the roof of the four-story building in the Bushwick neighborhood, firing several rounds of ammunition into the air, said Sgt. Diane Kubler, a police spokeswoman.

The man fired into a group of people on a nearby streetcorner, but did not hit anyone, the spokeswoman said. He then fired toward another, opposite corner, hitting four people, and fled.

Police recovered 14 spent .22-caliber shells on the rooftop,

One of those shot, a 35-year-old man with a single bullet wound to the head, died at about 11:30 p.m. at Kings County Hospital, said Clarence Vickers, a hospital spokesman.

Family tends dead man's body

KNOXVILLE, Ill. - The widow and two children of a bookkeeper tended his body for eight years after he died, changing his clothing and bedding as though he were just sick,

The body of Carl L. Stevens, which had been reduced to skin and bones, was found last week after a relative who had become suspicious helped authorities gain entrance to his home, officials said.

He had not been seen alive since 1979, but even his mother, Helen Stevens, did not know he was dead, said Knox County Sheriff's Detective Steve Johnson.

"It's just very, very bizarre," said Sheriff Mark Shearer. "We are currently investigating the religious aspects of this. Let's just say they have abnormal beliefs in the power of healing."

Stevens' widow, Carole, 42, and a man described as her houseguest, Richard A. Kunce, 56, were arrested Friday and pleaded guilty Monday to misdemeanor charges of failing to notify the coroner of a death.

They were rdeased, but authorities then booked Carole Stevens, a registered nurse, and Kunce, a dentist in Aurora, on felony charges and returned them to jail.

Carole Stevens was charged with one count of forgery, accused of fabricating a power of attorney for her dead hasband in 1984, Shearer said.

Kunce was charged with a felony count of conspiracy to commit forgery for allegedly signing his name to the document as a witness, the sheriff said.

Stevens, born in 1939, was last seen alive in May 1979, Shearer said.

91-year-old widower seeks wife ROBINSON, III. - Wedded life begins at 80 - at least for Bill McClure.

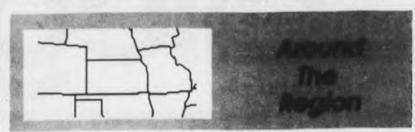

The widower recently placed personal ads in two newspapers seeking to meet an "elderly lady" of good character. "I don't have any use for a woman less than 80," McClure, 91, said recently. Four women have gotten in touch with him since the ad was published, he said, but all four were too young. "Shoot, one gal was only 63 years old," said McClure, who worked as a roofer until he was 82.

McClure said he didn't think he'd want to get married again after his wife, Alta, died three years ago. They had been married in 1916 and had four children.

McClure, who lives alone in an apartment above a store, said he sold almost all his furniture and was prepared to stay single.

Junction City man charged

LEAVENWORTH - A man who told authorities he accidentally ran over his brother at the Kansas Turnpike service area near Lawrence was charged Monday with aggravated vehicular Damon Helmig, 26, of Junction City, is also charged with misdemeanor counts of driving under the influence and failing to report a fatal accident.

The charges stem from the death of his brother, Darren, 23, also of Junction City. The younger Helmig was dead on arrival Thursday when his brother brought him to Topeka Memorial Hospital.

An autopsy showed that he suffered a ruptured spleen, four broken ribs and numerous scrapes and died one to two hours before arriving at the hospital.

Law enforcement officials continued investigating the incident after Damon Helmig gave conflicting accounts of his brother's death. He initially told authorities he parked a pickup truck at the service area about five miles northeast of Lawrence, put the standard transmission in neutral and left the truck running so the cab would stay warm.

Helmig said he went to sleep but woke up when he heard his brother screaming as he was being crushed beneath the

Leavenworth County Attorney Frank Kohl said that after giving several differing accounts of the incident, Helmig told authorities he intended to scare his brother by driving toward him and stopping just short of hitting him, but couldn't stop in

Lottery profits go to state fund

TOPEKA - The Kansas Lottery formally transferred $2.135 million in profits Monday to a state fund set aside for economic development initiatives and other programs.

Under legislation passed in 1987, the state receives 30 percent of the lottery's gross sales. So far, lottery officials have transferred $4.635 million into the state's Gaming Revenue

In the next fiscal year, 60 percent of the money in the gaming fund will be spent on economic development initiatives, 30 percent to offset costs counties incur because of legislatively mandated property reappraisal and 10 percent for prison construction.

Injury numbers rise as semester begins

Foot, ankle sprains common complaint

By Alison Neely Staff Writer

Bona fide and would-be athletes, beware: There may be a sportsrelated injury in your future. At the beginning of each semester the number of students visiting Lafene Student Health Center with sports injuries usually increases. Bob Mortimer, physical therapist at Lafene, attributes the injuries primarily to intramural basketball.

"It's normal for the beginning of the semester for the rate to be higher. Usually you can tell in the mornings (how many people were injured) by how many crutch (checkout) slips are in the box," Mortimer said.

The most common injuries are sprains of the lower extremities primarily the ankles and feet. They may be attributed to several factors, said Dr. Guy Smith, director of Eriksen Sportsmedicine Clinic at Lafene.

Making unrealistic demands on the human body is one cause of

In a conditioning program the activity level should not be changed overnight, Smith said.

"For anyone who makes a change in activity level, do so gradually," he

Other problems — including illfitting shoes or the wrong kind of footwear - also cause injuries and can be easily corrected, Smith said.

Treatment for this type of injury includes ice, physical therapy or - in the case of sprains - braces. Crutches, if needed, are provided free through the physical therapy department.

In approximately 70 percent of the lower-extremity injuries, the patient requires physical therapy, Smith said. Many of the others just need exercise instruction.

"We put a lot of people on exercise programs they can do at the Rec Center," he said. "They don't need physical therapy."

Most of the injuries occurring at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex are sprains, said Raydon Robel, director of Recreation Ser-

"Any user assumes a certain amount of risk for participating in this kind of program," he said. "As for the weight room, people pretty much supervise themselves.' Those who are injured while using the center's facilities are responsible for their own treatment, Robel said.

Study predicts cancer rates

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - The breast cancer detection rate among American women is the highest on record but death rates have increased slightly instead of improving from early treatment as experts had hoped, according to a federal study released

The study, compiled by the National Cancer Institute to reflect rates of incidence and death from all types of cancer, said breast cancer is still the leading cause of death from malignancy among women.

It says this finding suggests women are not taking advantage of screening techniques that could detect breast cancer at a stage when cure is more likely, although detection of breast cancer is at the highest rate in history.

The study also said that although report says. lung cancer remains the leading cause of cancer deaths, the death rate decreased among males in 1985 but continues to increase in women.

NCI used various studies to compile a report generally reflecting cancer statistics for 1950 to 1985, with some cancer estimates for 1987. It said the report is "a very general picture" of cancer incidence, mortality and survival.

The rate of cancer-caused deaths is declining for the general population although some specific types of cancer have shown increases in deaths and incidence, the report says.

"The cancer mortality rates among Americans under the age of 55 have been decreasing during the time period ... 1950 to 1985 (and) for all age groups up to the age of 85 when lung cancer, a largely preventable disease, is excluded," the report said.

For young cancer patients, the future looks brighter. Mortality rates among patients under 15 was about 3.5 per 100,000 in 1985, a decrease of about 33 percent over 35 years, the

But the results of breast cancer detection and treatment are not as good as experts had hoped, the report

It said there was an increased rate of breast cancer discovered in 1984 and 1985 which the report says "may be due in part to increased screening

However, death rates from breast cancer have increased slightly for women both above and below age 50 in the last two years of the study, the report said.

"The lack of a large decline in mortality is strong evidence that little effective screening is taking place because clinical trials have shown that early detection through mammography and physical examination with appropriate follow-up can reduce the mortality rate from this disease by over 30 percent," the report said.

Breast cancer rates among American women are between 104 and 107 per 100,000, "the highest incidence rates ever recorded," the report said, and up 17 percent from 1975 to 1985.

Lung cancer remains the most lethal cancer killer. Deaths from it are so numerous, the report said, that the total statistical picture for cancer is skewed by that one disease. Lung cancer deaths in 1985 totaled 122,395, about 90,898 more than would be predicted by extending the 1950 rates, the report said.

A downward trend in lung cancer among males was attributed to a reduction since 1965 in cigarette smoking, which the report called "the major cause of lung cancer."

Lung cancer rates increased among older women, but declined among women under age 45. For 1975-85, the number of lung cancer cases among females in general increased at the rate of about 4.7 percent a year, with an incidence rate in 1985 of about 36.3 per 100,000.

Malignant melanoma of the skin incidence has increased more than 200 percent in 35 years, with death rates climbing by 150 percent. The skin cancer rate increased 10 percent from 1984 to 1985. The report attributed the increase to lifestyle, principally an overexposure to sunlight.

Wildcat license plates proposed

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - Diehard alumni of Kansas colleges may have a new way to promote their schools next year, if state lawmakers approve a bill before the Legislature this session.

A bill introduced in the Senate last week would allow alumni and friends of any public or private post-secondary school in the state to buy special tags with drawings of a school mascot, such as a Jayhawk, or Wildcat - or even an Ichabod.

It would cost $40 to wear your loyalties on your plates.

The bill, which was referred to the Senate Transportation Committee for study, was sponsored by 23 senators, including Sen. Wint Winter Jr., R-Lawrence.

Winter said the idea for the bill came from the KU Alumni Association, as a way to get more visibility for the university.

B.J. Pattee, director of special projects for the alumni group, said Monday it was premature to discuss the bill's prospects.

In a memo sent last week to members of the Senate Transportation and Utilities Committee, Pattee said she has talked with alumni directors from Pittsburg State, Wichita State, Washburn, Emporia State, Fort Hays State, Kansas State University and KU.

Under the bill, the seven alumni organizations would have to guarantee the sale of a minimum of 500 plates in order to qualify. That would produce a minimum of $140,000 next year, KU's alumni officials said.

Mecham faces recall, trial, possible impeachment

By The Associated Press

PHOENIX, Ariz. - Gov. Evan Mecham denied wrongdoing Monday before a House panel considering his possible impeachment and won a standoff after he refused to answer questions from House attorneys. The meeting of the House select committee abruptly adjourned when the Republican governor insisted he would only answer questions from House members, not their attorneys. Hours later, House members, meeting in separate party caucuses, agreed to let Mecham testify under those terms on Wednesday. A week earlier, the governor had promised "no co ditions" on his testimony. "Governor, it's obvious that you feel that you should not comply with the rules that every other witness has complied with," House select Committee Chairman Jim Skelly said at the hearing.

"I am in this case the accused, not just another witness," Mecham said.

Also Monday, Mecham, in office just barely over a year, was ordered to face a recall election on May 17. He also faces a March 9 trial on criminal charges accusing him of concealing a $350,000 campaign

Skelly said he wanted to subpoena Mecham but he was outvoted by his fellow Republicans, who form a majority in the House. Skelly warned that even though House lawyers would work with committee members on a list of questions the governor may face softer questioning because lawmakers will not be as prepared as their attorneys would have been.

Reagan contends Sandinistas won't comply with peace plan

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - President Reagan argued Monday that Nicaragua's leftist leaders would not comply with a regional peace plan without a "threat hanging over them" and that his $36.2 million Contra aid package would do the trick.

Meanwhile, the White House scrambled to make the aid package palatable to doubtful House members as the outcome of Wednesday's high-stakes vote remained in the hands of some 20 fence-sitters.

"One question must be answered. Sandinista promises of the past have been broken. Can we believe them now?" Reagan said in a speech to the democracy and peace in Nicaragua is National Religious Broadcasters.

As the Collegian turns Dear readers, here's the latest

As if choosing new editors every semester isn't change enough, we at the Collegian are going to make this page's faithful readers undergo one more change this semester. Ultimately, however, it's a change that most of you will barely notice.

As the box with my picture in it would suggest, I am assuming the duties of editorial page editor for the Collegian. I have been editorial page editor before, and I welcome the opportunity and the challenge to do it again. I hope my stint as the page's editor last spring will give me the perspective and knowledge to develop the page to its greatest potential this spring. But why the change now, barely three weeks into the semester? Well, no one ever accused journalists of writing things in stone, especially when it came to their jobs. responsibility at the Collegian. So a combination of factors - including the desire to increase the paper's investigative reporting -led Editor Judy Lundstrom to name Chris the paper's special projects editor.

So, Chris isn't dropping off the face of the earth. In fact, she's doing anything but that. Readers can expect to see her byline and her efforts exhibited soon in the form of stories that will be hard-hitting and do more than scratch the surface. That, I believe, will substantially strengthen the quality of the Collegian.

As I indicated, I wanted to take on more responsibility. In addition to serving as editorial page editor, I will continue in my job as campus editor along with my co-editor, Janet Swanson. So, my wish has been granted, and I hope my sanity won't be a casualty. If strange things start happening on this page, you'll probably know I am slipping. And if I am, I hope you'll challenge me with letters and other comments. The readers are the ones who make this page work and worthwhile.

But I won't take any more of your time or belabor our housekeeping. I just wanted to explain what we're up to and say that we appreciate your patience.

I think our game of musical chairs is over. At least for now.

Congress' vote on Contra aid will determine fate of nations

Congress will begin voting Wednesday to determine the face of the Nicaraguan Contras and, more importantly, that of national sovereignty of Central American nations. By Thursday, the United States will have shown the world whether or not it respects the apparently unaddressed issue of the selfdetermination of its Latin American neighbors.

In a recent summit of Central American nations on Jan. 16 in San Jose, Costa Rican president Oscar Arias Sanchez gave in to American threats to discontinue humanitarian aid to his country by downplaying the importance of the upcoming Contra-aid vote. By stating that "the destiny of Central America is in our own hands" and by terming the situation "solely an internal congressional affair," Arias expressed the idea that the United States is not very influential in Central

The notion that Central American governments should be the ones to determine their internal - as well as external - foreign policies is ideal, but it's not a notion found in the minds of those who shape American foreign policy. Regardless of bias, it is evident the Contras are not a self-sustaining group. Therefore, it is now up to Congress to determine whether the Contras, as a military force, have outlived their usefulness.

The American government has repeatedly justified support of the Contras by claiming that the Sandinistas deny basic civil liberties to Nicaraguan citizens who oppose the pre-

In the aforementioned Central American summit, Nicaraguan president Daniel Ortega threw the U.S. government off track by doing precisely what Ronald Reagan had never dreamed he would do. Ortega agreed to lift the state of emergency declared in 1982 and restore civil liberties to the Nicaraguan population. He also agreed to grant amnesty to all Commentary political prisoners when a cease-fire is reached and the Contras "agree to incorporate into the civil sector." As reported in the Feb. 2 issue of In These Times, there are approximately 3,000 political prisoners in Nicaragua, 2,000 of whom were National Guardsmen in the Somoza dictatorship.

And finally, Ortega agreed to hold direct talks with the Contras, monitored by the Archbishop of Managua, Cardinal Miguel Obando y Bravo. Last Friday, Nicaraguan government officials and Contra rebel leaders met in San Jose to commence negotiations to secure a cease-fire in the region. Further talks are scheduled for Feb. 10-12 in Guatemala City.

What else must Nicaragua do to convince neighboring nations - as well as the United States — that it is serious about peace in Central America?

Perhaps what causes most Americans to doubt the intentions of the Sandinista regime is the theme constantly expounded by Ronald Reagan: that Nicaragua does not have a truly democratic government. However, regardless of one's opinion of American democracy, it would be erroneous to assume that Nicaragua could become a smaller replica of the United States.

This point is eloquently expressed by the editorial in the most recent issue of In These Times. The article points out that Americans are not realistic when they evaluate democracy in Nicaragua by today's standards. Did it not take until 1862 for America to abolish slavery? And was it not until the 1960s that serious steps were taken to secure civil rights for black people in our society? Considering the poverty and illiteracy the vast majority of Nicaraguans found themselves in when Somoza was ousted, the Sandinistas have progressed tremendously to create democracy - especially when compared to their neighbors.

There definitely are restrictions in Nicaragua on political speech and opposition to the Sandinista regime, but that is trivial when compared to Honduras, where the Inter-American Court on Human Rights recently accused the government of maintaining an army of death squads to eliminate political dissidents. Or what of El Salvador and Guatemala, where the governments crush opposition groups by indiscriminately murdering their leaders?

In El Salvador, Archbishop Oscar Romero is assassinated by death squads for criticizing the government, whereas in Nicaragua, dissident Cardinal Miguel Obando y Bravo is chosen to head the National Reconciliation Com-

The upcoming vote in Congress will be a determinate factor in the peace talks now in progress in Central America. By permitting another multimillion dollar package to go through, Congress will be merely throwing more fuel on the fire, making any possibility of a cease-fire questionable.

Reagan has consistently stated that the purpose of the Contras is to maintain pressure on the Sandinista government. Perhaps now is the time to put some pressure on the Contras and end this pointless war.

Doug Oetinger, senior in business and a resident of Moore Hall, said he thinks the bakery is a good idea and that its business will increase.

"I just found out they had 50 cent refills - and I found out about it from another student," he said.

Although its main intent is to serve the students, another is to make a profit.

"The Bakery is not set up to be a non-profit organization, but it's also not to be making so much money that it's not a service," she

The bakery is expected to recover its expenses and break even soon, Molt said. Revenue from the bakery will be put into the food center's general fund to provide more services for students.

LUMBERTON, N.C. - Two heavily armed American Indians who had taken over a newspaper office Monday to protest the death of a black jail inmate released their hostages after a 10-hour standoff.

"It's over. The hostages have been released," Jim Sughrue, Gov. Jim Martin's press secretary, said shortly after 8 p.m.

The Indians, who had identified themselves as Tuscarora-Cherokees, had demanded to speak with Martin. Sughrue said the governor had scheduled a news conference for 9 p.m. in Raleigh,

K-State students volunteer help filing tax returns

By Audra Dietz Collegian Reporter

Some K-State students are volunteering their services to those who need help filing their 1987 tax

Members of Beta Alpha Psi, the accounting honorary, are providing and helping people prepare tax returns from 4 to 6:30 p.m. every Monday and Tuesday at the Manhattan Public Library. The services will be offered until April 12. This tax service, called the Voluntary Income Tax Assistance (VITA) program, is sponsored by the Internal Revenue Service.

Not just any organization can provide VITA program services. The IRS sends out applications and then selects the best qualified groups.

In order to participate in the VITA program, club members attended IRS training sessions to learn how to prepare tax returns. The students also had to pass a take-home test graded by the IRS.

Beta Alpha Psi has provided free tax services for the last five years. Johanna Lyle, club sponsor, says there is always a good turnout.

"We service people with low income, a lack of English or people that just don't want to fool with the tax law," Lyle said.

Because of the new tax laws, this year should be busier than usual, according to Amy Carter, VITA program coordinator.

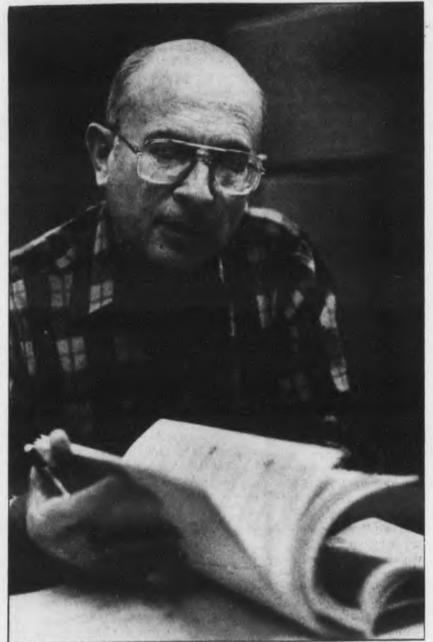

Carter said some people come in just to ask questions, but most people want their forms completely filled

Since the VITA program is a nonprofit service, the volunteers aren't liable for any mistakes. However, Lyle said, the volunteer workers are just as accurate as professional accountants.

To be a member of the honorary, students must have a 3.0 overall grade point average, and 3.0 GPA in all accounting courses attempted. Members must be juniors or seniors majoring in accounting. Students carrying a dual major in accounting and finance are also admitted as Elias Saig, professor of economics, is offering help to people with their taxes as a Volunteer Income Tax Assistance program representative.

Tax assistance offered in Union starting Feb. 9

By Candise Leonard Contributing Writer

It's tax time again, and if you begin preparing your tax forms and find you don't know where to start be comforted in knowing that free help is available.

"This service is to help them do (the tax return) themselves," Saig said. -Elias Saig

Beginning Feb. 9, the Volunteer Income Tax Assistance program (VITA) will be helping people complete their income tax forms. The service will be offered on Tuesday and Friday afternoons in the Student Governing Services office of the K-State Union.

Elias Saig, VITA representative, is one volunteer who has been trained under the VITA program.

People coming in for assistance should bring last year's tax return, 1987 W-2 forms and other appropriate receipts and information, he said.

This service is to help them do (the tax return) themselves," Saig said. "It's not that I do it for them - I don't believe in that."

As a former instructor, Saig said he enjoys the "self-help" concept of the VITA program. On an average afternoon, Saig expects to assist between 10 to 15 people. Appointments may be made with him if the office times are not convenient, or people may phone him at the SGS office with any questions.

If Saig cannot answer a particular question, he has an Internal Revenue Service consultant whom he can call. The IRS also has a toll free number for anyone who might have specific questions regarding the tax forms. The number for each area of the nation is listed in the instructions booklet with the Form 1040A. The number Kansas residents can call is 1-800-424-1040.

The IRS Tele-Tax system may also be helpful. It offers several taperecorded messages on various tax topics on a toll free line open 24 hours a day. The Tele-Tax number is 1-800-554-4477.

Free tax booklets and forms for both federal and Kansas returns are available outside the SGS office in the lower level of the Union.

The VITA program has been available at K-State since 1982. Free tax help is also being offered at the Manhattan Public Library and the Seniors' Service Center.

Withholding will not be penalized

WASHINGTON - The Internal Revenue Service, admitting it made a mistake in originally making its new W-4 tax withholding forms too complex, says taxpayers will not be penalized for having too little in taxes withheld from their paychecks this

Gibbs cited the confusion over the W-4 forms and a desire to make this year's tax filing go smoothly as key reasons for the decision, which he said would cost the government an estimated $86 million in penalty payments it otherwise would have collected.

"With so much at stake - public confidence, the credibility of tax

The IRS had been under attack over its new W-4 withholding forms, which were required by Congress to implement the new tax law. The new forms were supposed to permit taxpayers to more accurately balance their withholding with their tax liability.

The initial furor over the W-4 form forced the IRS to issue a shorter, lesscomplicated W-4A form. The agency said Americans who filed either form with their employers by June 1, 1987, would not be penalized if it turned out they had too little in payroll taxes withheld.

'Rich man's tax' to affect many

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - You might not think of yourself as wealthy but you may find yourself subject for the first time to what used to be thought of as a rich man's tax the "alternative minimum tax."

The tax, which has gone through various changes since it was enacted in 1969, is aimed at ensuring that higher-income people pay some federal income tax regardless of how many deductions and credits they legitimately claim. In its latest version, the tax has been tightened considerably and applied to more individuals than ever before.

You pay the alternative minimum tax, which is at a flat rate of 21 percent, only if it is larger than what you would owe by calculating your taxes the usual way.

You may be required to make the minimum-tax calculation if, in filling out your regular tax return, you use any of 14 tax preferences. These include accelerated depreciation on real estate or other assets, incentive stock options, depletion or intangible drilling costs from oil and gas ventures, losses from investments in which you play only a passive role, or losses from tax-shelter investments in farming.

You should make the minimum-tax computation if any of those preferences you claim and your adjusted gross income together add to more than $40,000 if you are married and filing a joint return, $30,000 if you are single, or $20,000 if you are married and filing a separate return.

Those figures are the exemption amounts for minimum-tax purposes and they decline gradually as income rises. There is no exemption once income exceeds $310,000 for couples, $232,500 for singles and $155,000 for married people who file separately.

The normal standard deduction is not allowed in calculating minimum tax, nor are itemized deductions for state and local taxes, certain interest and most miscellaneous expenses.

The only credit allowed is the foreign tax credit, and it can wipe out no more than 90 percent of minimum-tax liability.

Travel less deductible as education expense

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Travel is still broadening, but is now less deductible.

The new law denies a deduction for travel as an education expense when the education is supposed to be the travel itself. Using an IRS example, "a professor of Spanish touring Spain to maintain general familiarity with the Spanish language and culture cannot deduct such expenses."

Another provision disallows deduction of travel and expenses for attending a convention or seminar unless the session has a direct relation to the taxpayer's business.

For example, an investor may no longer write off a trip to an exotic port to get investment advice.

Wildcats to attend 'exclusive' camp

By Tom Morris Sports Writer

K-State football players Kent Dean and John Williams have been invited to the biggest party thrown football players. Black tie isn't an option, though.

Dean and Williams leave this week for Indianapolis and the Hoosier Dome for an exclusive workout - by invitation only — run by the National Football Scouting Combine, Inc., an organization that supplies scouting reports to its clients.

It's a chance for representatives from all 28 NFL teams to get a close first-hand what it's been like to look at the 300 athletes who the scouting combine predicts will be For Williams, a 6-foot, 180-pound scouting combine predicts will be drafted April 24th and 25th. It's also a chance for the two Wildcats to make their dreams come true.

"My idols were (former NFL wide for the nation's best senior college receivers) Billy 'White Shoes' Johnson and Drew Pearson, so I've always had a dream of being just like them. I've always wanted to accomplish that dream," Williams said.

"I don't think there's any athlete that hasn't had his goals set on being a professional ball player," Dean said. "I'm extremely excited because it's been so different going from high school to college and experiencing wide receiver from Lakeland, Fla., the invitation to the workout wasn't that much of a surprise. He's one of the fastest men in the Big Eight Conference, having placed sixth in the 100-meter dash and fourth in the 200-meter dash at last season's outdoor conference track meet.

But the invitation was a surprise for Dean, a 6-4, 245-pound tight end from Derby.

"Going into the season, I hadn't thought much about (making it to the pros). I hadn't had very much exposure because Fjust wasn't getting the ball thrown to me. I was just thinking about getting my degree," Dean, a marketing major, said.

Prior to the 1987 season, Dean had only caught 12 passes in three years. He finished last season with more than 30 receptions and the scouts began to take notice.

"There's been more scouts up here this year since the five years I've been up here. It's been like a zoo at times," he said.

If Dean thinks this season has been like a zoo, then the combine workout may appear to be a jungle. It costs more than $1 million to put on the five-day show, which is open only to the coaches, trainers, medical personnel and scouts.

Upon arriving in Indianapolis, each player is first taken to a hospital where they are given a full variety of tests - "From what I heard, it's almost like a NASA physical," Dean said — including a urine test for drugs, a full-body X-ray and an E.K.G. Each NFL team has an average of three doctors at the camp. The players are given a written intelligence test as well.

Then it's on to the Hoosier Dome where the players are weighed and measured, and trainers use calipers to measure the percentage of the athlete's body fat. They are tested for strength by bench pressing 185 pounds (235 for linemen) as many times as they can. They are timed in the 40-yard dash, and their vertical leap is measured. No contact drills are involved.

All this is in addition to visits the athletes can expect to receive from agents and union representatives of the National Football League Players' Association.

"(The agents) are basically nice, but they're starting to get a little pushy," Dean said.

"I get a lot of letters and calls to see if I have signed (with an agent), but I already have one," Williams added. The agents bother me, though, because they wake me up early." But it's worth it to the athletes who

The glamour and glitter of the NFL is appealing to both former Wildcats, but they do have other plans if they don't make a team.

"I've had five or six job offers for after I graduate, so it's not like I have to make it in the pros," said Dean, who has been contacted by representatives from the Seattle Seahawks, Cleveland Browns, Green Bay Packers and Denver Broncos.

"If I don't make a team, I'm going to work on my degree in physical Bay and the reigning world champion Washington Redskins.

Williams will be at the workout Thursday through Saturday; Dean, Wednesday through Friday.

Since the Wildcats' season ended almost three months ago, it's been a trying experience at times for Dean and Williams. But as they said earlier, it's a chance for the K-State duo to make their dreams come true.

And it doesn't hurt when they have the opportunity to turn four years of blood, sweat and tears into dollars and cents, either.

Drug program unique

By Kenny Harrison Collegian Reporter

The first of its kind. That's how Torrey Head, intern in marketing and promotions in K-State's Department of Intercollegiate Athletics, describes the department's drug and alcohol awareness program. "No one in the state of Kansas has ever had a program like this before," Head said.

Selected K-State athletes will pair up Feb. 11 and travel to 25 elementary schools in the area to speak about and show first- through sixth-graders how to "Just say 'no' to drugs."

Head said the athletes were selected to speak on behalf of the University because children that age view athletes as role models. He also hopes the athletes will have a positive influence on the children. While speaking at schools, athletes will wear their competition uniforms in order to reflect the athletic image.

If the program is successful, Head hopes the state will provide additional funds for the anti-drug campaign. Nonprofit organizations currently fund the project.

The drug awareness project is just one of many programs the athletic department is involved in, Head said. It also works on various types of promotional activities designed to keep Ahearn Field House crowds entertained during halftime at Wildcat basketball games.

Events such as the Dick Edwards shoot-out, a taco eating contest and the Budlight Daredevils, who will appear Feb. 6, highlight the halftime festivities for the rest of the season.

"We want people to have fun while they're (at Ahearn)," Head said.

Head added that the department is trying to get away from using the entire halftime period for corporate sponsors by having high school drill teams perform, giving them exposure while at the same time promoting the University.

"This gives the drill teams a chance to get a look at the University," he said.

Kent Dean is one of two Wildcats traveling to Indianapolis this week to be among 300 athletes who will be studied by scouts for the NFL.

Win proves 'Cats contenders, not pretenders

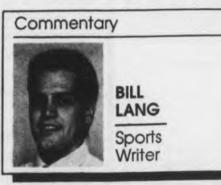

What else can one say about Saturday's game between the University of Kansas and K-State except, "HOW SWEET IT IS!"

The feelings of the students and the comments before the game were ones of mixed emotions. After all, who could blame 'Cat fans if they were a little nervous? K-State was heading into Allen Field House and attempting to pull off a win - something that hadn't been done there in 55 previous games. But there was also the feeling the 'Cats were destined to win, and that this was not only Mitch Richmond's year, but also K-State's. Add to this the momentum of three straight Big Eight Conference wins. All these factors helped propel K-State to a 72-61 victory over the Jayhawks.

In the words of the infamous Dick Vitale:

"It's showtime, baby! We're seeing some prime-time playing!

But let's face it, folks. The last time this season the 'Cats got a big win - a 69-62 victory over the University of Oklahoma Jan. 16 - they were less than impressive during their next outing, a 58-47 win over The Wichita tion outside Ahearn Saturday night, there are State University Jan. 19.

The Iowa State University Cyclones, 16-5 overall and 2-3 in the Big Eight, will be coming to Ahearn Field House on Wednesday night. Sure, they have suffered as of late, losing three consecutive league games. But they still have the fire power to blow anybody out of the water at any time, and that 'any time' could be Wednesday night against the 'Cats.

I'm not saying K-State is going to lose the 'Cats just need to go out onto the court as if they had lost to Kansas and take their frustrations out on Iowa State.

K-State coach Lon Kruger said after the Wichita State game the win over Oklahoma was hard to come down from. The same can be said for the win over the Jayhawks.

As one student pointed out at the celebraa lot of games left in the season and anything can happen.

But what has happened is K-State's men's basketball team has seriously made a mark for itself as a conference title contender, not a pretender. And every team will be shooting for the Wildcats now.

Right now the 'Cats are on the verge of breaking into the Top 20, something that hasn't been done by a K-State team since 1981. With a win over Iowa State, K-State should be in.

Until then - let's face it. We're seeing some P-T effort from the entire Wildcat men's basketball team - some "prime-time, Four Big Eight teams garnered votes in this week's Associated Press Top 20 college basketball poll. Oklahoma moved to No. 7, while Iowa State, after losing twice to the Sooners, dropped to No. 17. K-State received 106 votes and moved to 21st place, while Missouri is ranked 23rd.

Hit the road K-State: And don't come back no moh.

K-State took its traveling road show, which has produced victories at Oklahoma State and Colorado this season, to Kansas on Saturday - right in the face of the Jayhawks' 55-game home winning streak.

And the Wildcats did what the likes of Louisville, Kentucky and Notre Dame have of the deafening sixth man of 15,800 fans.

"We just couldn't hit the open shot," said KU coach Larry Brown, after Kansas lost for the first time in 10 games against Kansas State. "I thought some of our shots were so wide open and uncontested. Sometimes when you're struggling, you put pressure on yourself and you can't hit the shots."

Playing Oklahoma twice in a row was just as bad as Iowa State Coach Johnny Orr thought it would be.

The Cyclones lost in Norman Wednesday, and then watched Oklahoma center Stacy King celebrate his 21st birthday with 36 points and 21 rebounds Saturday. "I felt good out there today," King said. "I was able to turn and move well. I just turned Smurthwaite to change its emphasis

By David Hartman Collegian Reporter

After 27 years of existence, Smurthwaite House is about to undergo a reorganization.

Smurthwaite is going to change from a abilities of the women living there, said Rosanne Proite, assistant director of the Department of Housing.

The change came about due to a lack of interest in the house, which has a capacity for 64 women, but currently houses only 36.

After seeing the house numbers decline, officials in the Department of Housing semester, plus six hours of work around the decided it was time to change the way Smur- house per week. Under the reorganization, zation is to give women on campus a place where they can get a head start on future goals and issues.

"There are so many different places to be involved, women need to have their leadercooperative house to one that puts more ship skills placed under focus," Proite said, emphasis on scholarship and the leadership adding that she believes Smurthwaite's reorganization will accomplish that.

Also, because of the decline in house numbers and general lack of interest, Smurthwaite alumni "pushed to do something different" with the house that would have a positive effect on the residents, she said.

The cost of living in Smurthwaite is $790 a thwaite is run. The main goal of the reorgani- the house bill at Smurthwaite will remain the same, but residents will be required to only work four hours a week in the house. In addition, several stipulations will be introduced next fall. To qualify, each resident

- Be an involved and responsible member in the community of Smurthwaite House
- attend the house leadership retreat in the fall the weekend before classes start;
- maintain a 2.5 cumulative grade point serve in a leadership role or volunteer on campus; assist house officers and the house staff in the arrangements of at least one non-social program during the academic year;

- attend at least two house-sponsored, non-social programs per semester;
- attend at least two educational or cultural programs per year which are sponsored by participants in the program; and
- be involved in the planning and implementation of at least one community service project to be annually determined by Smurthwaite residents.

If a resident fails to meet any of these requirements or violates the housing contract in any way, she will be relocated in another residence hall as determined by a committee of students and staff. All K-State women are eligible to apply for the Smurthwaite House Women's Leadership Development Program, Priote said. Applications will be accepted through February, with current house residents receiving Applicants should show a potential for academic success through high school and college transcripts, and must submit two letters of recommendation with at least one being from a faculty member or school administrator. Preference will be given to Kansas residents, and the selection process will be completed on a yearly basis, with residents signing a housing contract for the entire year.

Proite said she hopes Smurthwaite will be full next fall "with a fresh slate of people who are interested" in academic success.

Kassebaum proposes bill Change to shorten budget debates

By Jim Vader Collegian Reporter

Hearings by the Senate Rules Committee began Jan. 26 on a proposal made by Sen. Nancy Landon Kassebaum, R-Kan., to reform the federal budget-making process. "This bill or one like it is the essential starting point to improve operations of the Senate," Kassebaum

Most of the Senate's time was spent debating the budget last year, she said.

Currently, the president first submits a budget proposal to Congress, laying out spending recommendations for the upcoming fiscal year.

The president's budget proposal is then sent to the authorization committees of both houses of Congress, which debate the proposed budget and then adopt their own proposal.

The proposed budget from the authorization committee then travels to the congressional appropriations committee, which debates and passes a budget proposal and sends it to the full Congress for approval. By this process, Congress debates over the same issue many times.

Kassebaum's proposal would combine the authorization and appropriations tasks to avoid lengthy delays on repeated debates. If this bill passes, Congress would consider the budget only from one committee. The bill also proposes that the budget extend over a two-year period so that it would not be debated

"It will be one clean process," said Mike Harper, administrative assistant to Kassebaum. A new committee of majority and minority party leaders and ranking senators would devise and propose a

"This would put leaders of Senate behind the budget to begin with. This would also give (the budget) greater momentum to be pushed through quickly and more effectively," said Guy Clough, legislative assistant to Kassebaum.

Although the bill would save time and energy for the senators, Kassebaum is not optimistic about the bill's chances.

"A lot of folks, particularly people in power of Senate, have interests in retaining the status quo because of their seniority and power. This bill calls for the elimination of the appropriations committee, which is one of the strongest in the Senate," said

Whittaker will run for 6th House term

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - U.S. Rep. Bob Whittaker announced during Kansas Day activities over the weekend that he plans to seek a sixth term in Congress representing southeast Kansas.

Whittaker's disclosure, which came as no surprise, was made at a caucus of 5th District Republicans.

"We've got more work to accomplish," Whittaker, 48, said. "I'm pleased that the 5th District has taken greater initiative on matters of statewide concern, and I think we can do more. With our increase in seniority, I want to run for a sixth term."

Whittaker, who was in Augusta today and planned to return to Washington today, said he does not expect to have opposition in the Republican primary election in August, but is expecting John A. Barnes of Cherryvale to seek the Democratic nomination.

Whittaker served in the Kansas House of Representatives in 1975-78, resigning his seat to run successfully for the GOP nomination to the U.S. House in 1978. He practiced optometry in Augusta before going to Congress. He is a native of Eureka.

"I just don't want to get caught voting for a tax decrease and in two years finding it a tax increase," said Rep. Robin Leach, D-Linwood. "People really don't like their legislators saying this is a tax decrease and in a year or two finding it's an increase."

Duncan told the committee that the $21 million in tax relief the plan offers occurs if the state tax law remains unchanged in light of federal tax reform.

"The governor's proposal reduces liability by $21 million in 1988," he said.

Area rapes down in '87

Only one offense reported

By Shelly Tierney Collegian Reporter

The number of rapes reported in Manhattan dropped in 1987 from 1986, according to statistics compiled by the Riley County Police Department. Only one offense was reported in 1987, compared to 10 in crimes reported to the RCPD was up in 1987, said Capt. Larry Woodyard, criminal investigation division commander. More phone calls were received in

Overall, the number of serious

1987 over 1986 from women claiming they had been sexually assaulted, said Katherine Parker, director of the Women's Resource Center.

"We have had more people talking about being assaulted, possibly because there is more awareness on the subject," Parker said.

This does not necessarily mean, however, that more women are reporting these rapes.

"The victim is very reluctant to report it if the offender is somebody she knows," she said.

Many of these assaults are date rapes, in which the victim knows the person who commits the assault, Parker said.

"Over the years, we have experienced a substantial number of sexual related attacks where the offender is known by the victim. It is common that there is some association between the victim and the offender," Woodyard said.

Judy Davis, executive director of the Women's Crisis Center in Manhattan, said 1987 seemed to be a relatively quiet year because of the low number of calls from women saying they had been sexually assaulted.

She said she was concerned about the under reporting of rapes.

Rape is a part I crime. Part I crimes are more serious crimes, including robbery, theft, burglary, assault, auto theft and murder.

In 1987, 1,764 part I crimes were reported to the RCPD - a 9 percent increase from the 1,611 part I crimes reported in 1986. The areas of Riley County outside of Manhattan experienced a five percent increase in reported part I crimes in 1987 from

The crime rate in the rural areas is generally lower than urban areas, Woodyard said.

Sororities, fraternities and Aggieville are prime areas where auto burglaries occur because there are high concentrations of cars in these areas, he said. Often there are marketable products, like radar detectors and stereos in cars, which can be attractive to a prospective burglar.

Generally, though, those who are likely to commit crimes cannot be pinpointed, Woodyard said. Usually a cross section of those committing crimes reveals a mixture of juvenile offenders, military, students and local citizens.

"There are no forerunners as offenders go," he said. "It is dictated more by opportunity."

Murder trial continues in Mobile

By The Associated Press

MOBILE - Attorneys Monday questioned potential jurors in the murder trial of two former Ku Klux Klan leaders accused in the death of a black teen-ager who was beaten and hanged from a tree. The case has already driven a Klan organization into bankruptcy.

Mobile County Circuit Judge Michael Zoghby withheld rulings on several pretrial motions Monday, including a defense request to exclude blacks from the jury.

Bennie Jack Hays, 72, and his sonin-law, Frank Cox, 32, were indicted in August in the March 1981 beating death of Michael Donald, 19, whose death resulted in a $7 million civil verdict that led to bankruptcy for the United Klans of America.

Zoghby gave attorneys permission to question potential jurors individually after nearly all the panelists raised their hands when asked if they had heard of the case. Zoghby estimated the trial would last a week.

The judge also considered a defense request for separate trials for Hays and Cox. Zoghby earlier denied that request, but defense attorney Neil Hanley asked the judge to

Earlier, Hanley argued that race must be an issue in jury selection because of the Klan's hatred of

"If I strike blacks (from the jury) because it's a Klan case, it is the same reason I would strike Jews from the trial of a PLO member," Hanley said.

But District Attorney Chris Galanos opposed the request.

"Just because they're black doesn't mean they hate the Klan," Galanos said.

Beulah Donald, 67, of Mobile, the victim's mother, sat in court Monday as the jury was selected. After her son's death, she filed suit in federal court against the Tuscaloosa-based United Klans of America Inc.

An all-white jury a year ago awarded her $7 million.

River pushes over truck with Haitian hitchhikers

By The Associated Press

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti A cargo truck trying to ford a river was knocked over by the raging waters, and dozens of passengers were missing and feared dead, radio reports and a hospital official said Monday.

The 10-wheel flatbed truck was trying to cross the Glace River 150 miles west of Port-au-Prince Friday when the force of the rainswollen river pushed the vehicle over, said army Capt. Sadraque Saintil in a telephone interview from Jeremie.

He said the truck was carrying 150 bags of coffee and an undetermined number of hitchhikers.

1,120 Republicans turned out, delivered all 35 of its delegates to Dole, and Finney contributed its 14. The vote in Reno was 882 for Dole and 238 for Robertson.

Of the other bigger counties meeting Monday, McPherson gave Dole 18 delegates, Ford 15 and Dickinson 13.

In counties where Robertson had filed complete or partial lists of delegate candidates to challenge Dole's slates, the Kansas senator won handily. In 15 contested counties, Dole won 135 delegates and Robertson three, with five officially uncommitted and perhaps favoring Robertson.

Dole and state party leaders, who openly backed him, have predicted Dole will corral all 34 of Kansas' delegates to the national GOP convention in New Orleans in August.

In Rawlins County in far northwest Kansas, which is the home county of Gov. Mike Hayden, Dole beat back a Robertson challenge, 5-0.

The lone uncommitted delegate in the early tabulation came from Ness County in west-central Kansas. Dole got the other three delegates elected

State Chairman Fred Logan Jr., who watched the results come in at state party headquarters here, said it was impossible to tell if the uncommitted delegate elected was pro-Robertson. He said only 11 Republicans turned out in the sparselypopulated county to vote.

Another bigger county to turn in its results in the early counting was Franklin, just southwest of the metropolitan Kansas City area. There, all 11 delegates went for Dole, because Robertson didn't file a slate.

Meade County was the first county to elect delegates in Kansas' Republican caucus process, delivering all four of its local delegates to Dole.

The GOP process for selecting the state's 34 national delegates continues through March 5 when the state convention elects the final 14 delegates.

Thirty-one of Kansas' 105 counties scheduled their GOP caucuses for Monday, but three of them postponed their meetings until Wednesday night when freezing rain made driving hazardous in southeastern Kansas. The caucuses were delayed two days in Allen, Cherokee and Montgomery counties, with a combined total of 37 delegates.

At stake in the 28 counties that were holding caucuses Monday were 209 local delegate slots, including 35 in Reno County, which includes Hutchinson and is located just west of Wichita.

Wilma Pennington, the GOP chairwoman in Meade County, said about a dozen Republicans showed up for the caucus in her sparselypopulated county, which is located along the Oklahoma border between Dodge City and Liberal in far southwestern Kansas.

They met in the courthouse in Meade and voted unanimously to send four delegates committed to the presidential candidacy of Dole to district and state conventions, she said.

Only the Dole delegates had registered to become delegates in Meade County, Pennington said. She said two people who said they supported former television evangelist Pat Robertson for the GOP nomination showed up at the meeting trying to be elected delegates. But they had not registered by the Jan. 22 deadline and could not contend for the delegate slots, she said.

Pennington said she had received telephone calls from other Robertson backers last week wondering how they could get elected delegates. She said she told them they had missed the deadline, which was set in state party rules.

The caucuses are picking delegates to five congressional district conventions and the state convention, where the national delegates will be elected. The county caucuses will continue through Sunday, with Friday the only night when none are scheduled.

The caucuses are expected to provide a test of the effectiveness of a quiet organizational effort by supporters of Robertson, who are bidding to wrest a few national delegates away from Dole, the state party's favorite son candidate.

Gov. Mike Hayden and state party leaders unanimously supported Dole's claim to all the state's national delegates, and Vice President George Bush and the other GOP candidates - except for Robertson - made no effort to organize in Kansas. "Nobody has anything against Pat Robertson. He's a good Republican," said state Chairman Fred Logan Jr. "But this is Bob Dole's state and the party isn't going to let him down. It New Orleans for Dole.

Dole's campaign filed full slates in all counties, and the senator said in an appearance here Saturday night he expects to claim all 34 national delegates in his home state.

By requiring preregistration, party regulars knew where the Robertson camp filed its candidates and made plans to flood those caucuses with more people than Robertson could to insure a sweep for Dole.

Kansas Republicans will elect 15 of their national delegates at the five district conventions Feb. 20, and nominate five more delegates for ratification at the state convention on March 5. The final 14 will be picked at the state convention, with Hayden expected to be elected a delegate and chairman of the delegation going to Steere said he shot his first groundhog near Goodland.

Vegetables, plants and other grasses are the groundhogs' favorite foods. Although groundhogs are also known as woodchucks, they don't eat wood, said Ric Urban, animal keeper at Sunset Zoo.

'You don't want to get too close to them," Urban said. Ironically, man's forest destruc-

Another area that handles a lot of traffic is the racquetball courts. Most of the courts for Thursday were already reserved by Wednesday night, said Pat Buchanan, Rec Complex employee.

Three of the courts are walk-on courts and are reserved on a firstcome-first-serve basis to handle the overflow.

Robel hopes to someday expand the Rec Complex to relieve the overcrowding. This expansion could include building four more basketball courts and turning the present two-court gym into a combination weight and aerobics room.

His plans also include turning the present weight room into a health education office with a resident dietician and exercise specialist.

Alabama gunman releases hostages

By The Associated Press

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. - A gunman saying he wanted to help the homeless held dozens of children and teachers hostage Tuesday before authorities fooled him into giving up his guns and then wrestled him to the ground, officials said.

"It's over," said Assistant Chief of Police Billy Wilkins. He said the kids were "all right."

Several officers wrestled the gunman to the concrete immediately outside the door to the elementary school building at West End Christian School, where as many as 80 children, four teachers and an assistant had been held hostage Tuesday morning. All but 26 of the pupils and one teacher were released earlier in the day.

"Please don't hurt me," said the gunman, identified by police as James L.-Harvey of San Antonio, Texas. He had invaded the school shortly after classes began and said he was trying to draw attention to the homeless and hungry in America.

"I've done everything you asked,"

Police told him he would not be hurt as they put him in a city police

The children then walked out single file. Their parents burst into cheers in a nearby gym when told their kids were safe.

The children, all in lower elementary grades, and their parents hugged each other and cried as they were reunited in the school's gym. The children kept repeating "We're all right, we're all right" as parents and grandparents said "Thank the Lord, thank the Lord."

Dole racks up more caucus wins

Riley County voters elect 22 delegates

From Staff and Wire Reports

Riley County Republicans elected a slate of 22 delegates committed to the presidential candidacy of Sen. Bob Dole during their caucus Tuesday at the University Inn.

The Riley County caucus was among 29 other such caucuses being held across the state. Dole continued to mount a huge lead in this second day of Kansas Republican balloting.

Taking up where he left off in Monday's first 30 county caucuses, when he claimed 96 percent of the delegates chosen, Dole rolled to victory after victory as another 29 counties held balloting to elect delegates to district and state conventions where the national delegates will be picked.

With 23 county caucuses reporting their results Tuesday night, Dole had claimed another 190 delegates, including 28 in Saline County, which he won by a vote of 678-164; 16 in Ellis County; 15 in Crawford; 11 in Labette; nine each in Marshall, Jefferson and Pottawatomie; and eight each in Brown and Clay - all counties where former television evangelist Pat Robertson had filed full slates of rival delegate candidates.

Robertson had not added anything to his Monday night total of just three delegates, and none had gone uncommitted through Tuesday's early returns.

The newly elected delegates will go on to the Republican second congressional district caucus later this month, where they will select delegates to attend the Republican State Convention in March.

FBI director says bureau inquisition was improperly led

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - FBI Director William Sessions said Tuesday that the bureau's investigation of a group opposing the Reagan administration's Central America policy was "not properly directed" in all instances.

Sessions, in his first in-depth discussion of the probe, denied that the FBI had expanded its investigation into the Committee in Solidarity with the People of El Salvador, or CISPES, to include other organizations.

He said that since members of CISPES were in contact with people from other organizations, a "limited investigation was conducted to follow up information that was not complete. The focus remained on CISPES, not the other organizations, and was to round out or develop information on the scope of activities and influence of CISPES."

But the New York-based Center for Constitutional Rights, which last week released some of the FBI documents it obtained through the Freedom of Information Act, contended that the investigation "covered hundreds of groups and individuals who were engaged in activities protected and encouraged by the U.S. Constitution."

The center, a civil liberties organization, also released two additional FBI documents that it said show the investigation was broader than Sessions has acknowledged.

Sessions, a former federal judge who became FBI director last Nov. 2, was asked at a news conference about a November 1983 memo from the New Orleans FBI field office that said in part "it is imperative ... to formulate some plan of attack against" CISPES.

He said the New Orleans memo wasn't known to top FBI officials who were directing the probe from Washington, although it was directed to the then-FBI director, William H. Webster. Had top officials known of it, "I would hope that it would have been directed differently," he said.

"I would say it was not out of control, but as to that particular facet it was not properly directed," Sessions said.

Reagan seeks to sustain

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - President Reagan made a last-ditch effort to salvage his $36.2 million aid package for the Contra rebels on Tuesday by promising to release money for arms and ammunition only if Congress agrees.

In an Oval Office address shunned by three major television networks, Reagan argued that today's vote in the House amounts to nothing less than "win or lose for peace and freedom. It is yes or no to America's national security."

"Our support is needed now tomorrow will be too late," Reagan said, pleading support for the Contras' battle against the leftist government of Nicaragua.

It was unclear whether Reagan's last-minute maneuver would sway those undecided about today's crucial vote. Prior to the evening speech, Democratic leaders had said the president was likely to lose.

"I think there's going to be a bipartisan group tomorrow against this proposal," said House Majority Leader Thomas Foley, D-Wash.

But Reagan argued that the Contras represented the last hope to prevent the spread of communism in Central America and must not abandoned.

"If we cut off aid to the freedom fighters, then the Sandinistas can go back to their old ways," Reagan said. Initially, Reagan proposed that the plan's $3.6 million for weapons would be held back until at least March 31. It would be released only if he found that no cease-fire had been achieved and the Sandinistas weren't abiding by their promises for democratic reform.

In his address, he changed the terms in an attempt to win over wavering lawmakers. He proposed that both houses of Congress decide within a 10-day period whether they agreed with him or not on the necessity for the military aid. Such a resolution is usually considered nonbinding by the Congress, but the president pledged to abide by it.

"If Congress adopts such a resolution within 10 days ... then I will honor this action and withhold deliveries of ammunition in this package," Reagan said. In the Democratic response writ-

K-State professors comment on speech

By The Collegian Staff

President Reagan's last attempt to salvage his Contra aid package Tuesday night met with strong words from K-State faculty. "It is time to stop the killing," said Merlin Gustafson, associate professor of political science. "I think it is a mistake to pour any more money down there to kill more people."

After listening to the commentary after the broadcast, Gustafson said he did not believe the bill

Some said they found the issue so redundant that they chose not to watch the president.

"I couldn't imagine that he would say anything he hasn't said," said John Exdell, professor of philosophy. "I think that is why the networks decided not to cover

Exdell said he believes Contra aid should never have been begun and that it should be stopped. "It is a brutal policy that violates law and morality," he said.

"Personally, I think it is time to give peace a chance," said William Richter, professor of political science.

The general opinion of all those interviewed was that Reagan's efforts would be futile.

"I believe Congress is going to vote it down," Richter said.

"Some (commentators) say it could be close," Gustafson said. However, he said, he still believes that Reagan's chances are not good.

ten before Reagan's speech, Rep. Lee Hamilton, D-Ind., said it was time for the United States "to support the Central American peace process, to put the Sandinistas to the test, and to take risks for peace."

Hamilton, who gained national attention as chairman of the House Iran-Contra investigating committee last year, acknowledged that the Nicaraguan government could renege on its promises to restore civil liberties. "But if they do, they will be rejecting a peace plan their neighbors endorse," he said. "Their bad faith will be clear, and Americans will be unified against them."

Hamilton said Reagan's request "is not enough to win the war. But as the Central American presidents have made clear, it is enough to sabotage peace.'

Reagan's speech was not carried by three of the four major television networks, who decided that Reagan was likely to say little that was new. Only the Cable News Network broadcast the address.

The lack of network attention aroused the ire of the White House chief of staff. Howard H. Baker criticized ABC, NBC and CBS, saying the decision interferes with the "traditional right" of presidents to communicate with the American people. "The decision ... represents an attempt to substitute their judgment for that of the president on what the country should have the opportunity to hear," Baker said in a written

Israeli army shoots Palestinian

OFRA, Occupied West Bank - A Palestinian was wounded Tuesday in new clashes with the Israeli army, Arab reports said. Jewish settlers vowed to carry out vigilante justice if the army failed to protect them.

The Palestine Press Service and officials at al Ittihad Hospital said soldiers shot a 21-year-old Palestinian, Said Yassin, in the pelvis after protests in the West Bank city of Tulkarem.

The Arab-run agency also said 20 Palestinians were beaten by soldiers during a demonstration in the nearby village of CONCORD, N.H. - Sen. Bob Dole charged Tuesday that Vice President George Bush has nothing more than "a resume and a retinue" and challenged his Republican presidential rival to "name one thing" he's done in the Reagan administration.

"Bush can't point to anything (he's done). So what does he do? He attacks Congress."

-Sen. Bob Dole

In an interview with The Associated Press two weeks before New Hampshire's leadoff presidential primary, Dole escalated his verbal war with Bush, who this week has leveled sustained attacks on Congress - without mentioning Dole by name.

"Good ol' George," Dole said. "Maybe it's aimed at those 85 members of Congress who are supporting Bush. There are some pretty good leaders in that group ... Bush can't point to anything (he's done). So what does he do? He attacks Congress.'

Dole said Bush keeps trying to show he is a leader by pointing to the mid-1970s, when he headed the CIA. Sarcastically alluding to Bush's refusal to say what advice he gave President Reagan on the Iran-Contra affair, Dole said:

"I wish he'd tell us about all those decisions he made in the CIA. I assume they're all secret though, and he surely couldn't divulge them. He can't talk to any of us because it's secret or to the president.

Dole also suggested that Bush's involvement in the Iran-Contra affair could hurt the GOP should Bush win the nomination.

"That's not an issue with Republicans, but it's going to carry over now if Bush is the nominee," Dole said. "I think people ought to take a look at electability in the

And Dole suggested that Bush "is in effect ... criticizing Ronald Reagan" by saying the federal budget process is flawed, because Reagan signed the budget compromise agreed upon with congressional leaders.

Dole agreed there are flaws. "But what is (Bush) going to do about it? Just condemn Congress? Does he have a plan (to reduce the deficit)? No, he doesn't have a plan."

In campaigning for president, Bush has "a big advantage," Dole said, citing Bush's appearance earlier Tuesday before a joint session of the state Legislature.

"Over there now, the streets are blocked, the limousines are there and the police are out and the personal staff - and the taxpayers are paying for all of it.

"We've got a limit on what we can spend in this state. It's not fair, no question about it," Dole said. "I don't think we ever thought about this when we wrote the (federal election) law, that a vice president in either party or a sitting president would have this big advantage - not just Secret

Dole challenges 'Good ol' George' Alumni give to Telefund 'Pledges exceed $36,000 first night

By The Collegian Staff

More than $36,000 was raised Monday in the first night of the KSU Foundation Telefund 1988 campaign.

The 889 pledges received by the College of Engineering and the College of Veterinary Medicine alumni opened the 1988 Telefund.

The Foundation's Rusty Andrews, director of annual giving and communications, and Gordon Dowell, assistant director of communications, are the coordinators of the

"We receive more gifts from alumni through Telefund than through any other single effort that we do in annual giving. It raises a large amount of money, but it raises a large amount of donors ... that's the basis of the annual giving program is to raise dollars and to raise the number of alumni that are participating," Andrews said.

Money raised from the alumni of the eight University colleges goes directly back to those colleges for Last year, more than 900 students scholorships and other studentrelated programs.

Both students and faculty from the colleges volunteer to phone alumni from colleges and take their pledges. and faculty contacted more than 15,000 alumni who pledged a record amount of more than $460,000. Volunteers call from 6 to 10 p.m. with a training session from 6 to 6:30 p.m., Andrews said. The calls are made from 60 phones, an increase of 25 phones from last year.

The Telefund will run Sunday through Thursday evenings during February. Telefund volunteers will not work on Feb. 18 because of the K-State-University of Kansas basketball game.

"Colleges are assigned a number of sessions depending on the number of alumni they have to contact," Andrews said. The number of sessions range from two sessions for Veterinary Medicine and Architecture and Design, to eight sessions for Arts and Sciences.

Dowell said three benefits exist for those participating in Telefund.

"One is that it does something good for your college," he said. On an average night one caller can raise from $500 to $1,000.

Secondly, he said, prizes will be awarded to the top solicitors. And finally, learning to use the phone is a skill that can help students after graduation, he said.

Miller's plan contains several problems, the primary one being that there is no allowance for education to prepare people for the skilled jobs that are most likely to provide them with steady employment. Instead, these people will flood into the already overcrowded and unsteady market of cheap labor, minimizing any realistic chances that they can escape their dependent condition.

Starting with 'Sesame Street,' TV's been a life-long addiction

Last week I wrote about weekend vacations in my small home town which I often use as an escape from the sometimesmaddening pace of K-State. Since last week's column, it has occurred to me how contemporary my habit of eating and watching movies is. I am a member of the first generation in the history of mankind that can enjoy almost all of life from the comfort of an armchair, and I love that.

What I'm talking about is the role television plays in my life. And it is simply amazing how large that role is. I've grown up seeing more of the world artificially reproduced in living color than I have actually seen in real life. And, strangely enough, it has made me a more sophisticated person than I ever could have been without it - I think.

From the very beginning, television played an important role in my life. In fact, I wouldn't be very wrong if I said that my formal education actually began with the first season of "Sesame Street."

I think I was 2 or 3 when "Sesame Street" first went on the air, and I immediately knew this was a wonderful show. It was wonderful getting to see funny muppets and gentle grown-ups teach me the alphabet and the number system. And it taught me important things about cultures and people - such as it's no fun being a grouch, and monsters are people too. "Sesame Street" was a liberal education that had a lasting effect on me.

Thanks to the advanced education I gained from watching "Sesame Street," I was one-up on everybody else when I entered pre-school, and I went out of my way to show it. Television had a lot to do with making me the behavior problem I was in school. The teachers taught slower, asked too many questions, didn't use cartoons or muppets and weren't nearly as nice as Bob or Gordon or Marie or Mister Rogers told me: "You're special/ There's no one just like you/ Like you my friend/ You're special." I loved Mister Rogers. He was a wonderful friend; he talked to me like a grown-up; he recognized that I was special. Every friend I've had since Mister Rogers has had to break my Mister Rogers barrier. It's a tough barrier to break, but when a person has done it, I know he is truly a friend in every sense of the word. To him, I'm special; there's no one just like me; and I can talk grown-up and feel profound.

After Mister Rogers, it was several years before TV could have such a lasting effect upon me again. In fact, real TV (i.e., network TV) has not really ever been able to attract me. My solid grounding in the classics, like "Sesame Street" and "Mister Rogers' Neighborhood," has made me turn up my nose to such shows as "Three's Company," "Facts of Life" and pretty much all the other mindless network shows. In my adolescence/early adulthood, I've turned to HBO and rented movies for my video education. In fact, I've fallen in love with movies the way a bookworm falls in love with books - or maybe

What started me on this column about what I like in television was the thought that I do not read fiction unless I absolutely must. I watch TV instead. For me, television replaces the craving for a story that I would have were I a bookworm. Really, when a I compare the two — television and books — it is hard to see how books could ever attract. It's easy and more real to watch life than to read about it, and it is getting easier and more real.

Recently, my TV watching has evolved into an art - an art aided by technology. My family owns a VCR that can freeze a picture with perfect clarity. And with our stereo accompanying, I can watch movies in a sound quality that rivals any theater. Playing "Top Gun" is an experience in sensory overload with which no book can compete. I turn up the volume and send the full, unattenuated signal to the family's 3-foot loudspeakers. The walls shake and the neighbors look outside their front doors to see if something just landed in the Kippes' lawn. When I watch "Top Gun," I'm sitting miles away from any major airport, but I'm experiencing the auditory life of an airport baggage handler cruising the tarmac

I could write hundreds of words describing the sound of a plane taking off, but it would never be the same. And that is precisely the point I'm making: A book can only describe life and, therefore, it can easily become tiring. A movie can make fantasy come alive right in front of me. And all I can write is that it is incredible; you simply have to see it.

A paralyzed government Congress' staffs hinder process

Other perspectives Test ban treaty would be enforceable

A seismic study has found evidence of 71 secret nuclear bomb tests in Nevada that were conducted between 1963 and 1978, according to the Natural Resources Defense Council. It's alarming that the tests were even conducted, but the study proves that any nuclear testing by the United States or the Soviet Union could be detected, should the countries agree to a test ban

Although the study suggests that any secret nuclear testing by either party could be detected easily, a total nuclear test ban would discourage such testing even further. It also might prevent an entire generation from become victims of the nuclear threat hanging ominously over our

The Daily Nebraskan University of Nebraska

Our country's government is paralyzed. That was more or less my conclusion after working in Washington, D.C., last summer as a U.S. Senate intern. I know that sounds like a pretty cynical statement - especially coming from a student who, after thorough indoctrination, should extol the virtues of our democratic form of government. Actually, I do believe in our form of government, but I do not believe it's as capable of decisive action as it was a few years ago.

There are several reasons why this paralysis has set in. Congress and the Reagan administration are locked in the worst case of partisanship that has plagued our government in 20 years. This is supported by Bob Dove, who has been associated with Congress for the past 30 years and who was the U.S. Senate Clerk for the Senate when it was under Republican control from 1980-86.

This case of partisanship has led to the excessive haggling over the Iran-Contra hearings, the Bork nomination and other agenda items, including trade legislation. "Excessive" is in the minds of most "reasonable" Americans, a class of citizens which by definition excludes Sen. Ted Kennedy. Americans seem to be fed-up with the inability of Congress to make decisions that it should be able to make, and with good

However, partisanship is inherent in a twoparty political system, and there is another reason why Congress is deadlocked. Quite simply, the staffs of our congresspersons and senators have grown too fat, and it is hightime for a lipo-suction cure.

This is the opinion of Mark Bisnow who, as a former congressional staff member, one thing.

Commentary WALLY BROCKHOFF Collegian Columnist

commented on the subject in a column that appeared in last Sunday's Kansas City Star. He cited as an example the Omnibus Trade Bill that Congress passed last year.

Given the U.S. trade imbalance and the recent furor over unfair trading practices, one would think that devising a trade bill that advances U.S. interests in world trade would not be that tough to agree on. Actually, if it had simply been left to an insulated, deliberative body, a fair and broad trade bill would probably have been the result. However, the true story is quite a bit different.

I had the privilege of observing the debate in the U.S. Senate on the trade bill. What I witnessed was a massive parade of amendments to the bill that would protect special interests, including a tariff on goat hair imports to protect a few Wyoming goat herders that was introduced by - you guessed it - a senator from Wyoming. It was as if each senator was allotted one amendment to protect his or her voters. It reminded me of going to the grocery store with my mother and brothers and being told that I could only have

What does this have to do with congressional staffs? Simple. In order to advance their causes, special interest groups have to be heard by someone who has time to listen to them. Ninety-nine percent of the time, that "someone" is a staff member because our elected representatives are, understandably, too busy to listen.

The three-fold increase in congressional staff since 1970 has been justified in the name of fighting special interests. But I would submit that it increases - not decreases - the special interest groups' role in the legislative process due to the increased access they have.

Aside from this, staff size should be cut for another reason. Staff size is justified to the point where it serves legitimate constituent concerns. I doubt that most of you would consider it legitimate when that staff spends its time writing computer-generated letters that are so ambiguous they fail to address the issue that the constituent wrote about in the first place. I could not believe the number of constituent letters I read that started: "I hope the aide who reads this makes sure that you personally see this, but I doubt that you will." This level of skepticism is disturbing, especially when people have been taught repeatedly that they should write their representatives about their concerns.

Our elected officials need to be as accessible as possible; that is a founding principle on which our representative government rests. However, I do not think that an ambiguous letter that took three hours of a legislative correspondent's time means any more accessibility than no reply at all.

War on drugs shows signs of progress High school drug abuse decline | Education for substance abuse credited to awareness programs

By Chris Wilhelm Collegian Reporter

The nationwide war on drugs may be showing signs of progress.

During the past several years, politicians have been waging a battle to combat the use of drugs. And, although their efforts may not be the only factor, a recently released federal report indicates that drug use among high school students has been declining.

The survey, released by the Department of Health and Human Services, showed that cocaine use by high school students went down for the first time in 13 years.

"Almost all drug use has declined since 1979," said Bill Arck, director of Alcohol and Other Drug Education Service. "With the exception of cocaine, there has been a decline in drug use across the board since 1979, including alcohol."

cocaine, compared with 17 percent of all high school seniors surveyed in a similar poll.

One of the factors contributing to declining drug use is the success of junior high and high school awareness programs, Arck said, adding that public figures also help bring attention to the widespread problem.

"If the president gets on television and talks about the drug problem, it tends to have a trickle-down effect," he said. "On a statewide basis, Governor Hayden and his wife get involved, which leads to organizations and churches getting involved, until the problem gets its biggest boost from targeting on the parents."

With many greek organizations moving toward dry rush and the Department of Housing sponsoring an Alcohol Awareness Week, the

> "One of the biggest factors leading to the decreased use of controlled substances is the busting of peer groups," he said. "With organizations out there such as the Lions Club, Kiwanis and the Boy Scouts making people more aware of the problems of substance abuse, people are beginning to realize what a danger these things can be."

Arck likened the problem of chemical abuse to smoking.

"(Chemical abuse) is almost like smoking: People realize that it is harmful and they give it up, and that's why smoking is on the decrease," he said. "I think the same is true with substance abuse."

supported with $65,000 grant

By Chris Wilhelm Collegian Reporter

Even though substance abuse has been on the decline locally and across the nation, K-State administrators - with the help of a grant are aking steps to ensure the trend will continue.

K-State was awarded the Fund for the Improvement of Post-Secondary Education grant last year to help students deal with problems ranging from substance abuse to simple anxiety.

The $65,000 grant will pay for administrators, students and speakers to promote wellness and the nonabuse of substances.

The Personal Achievements Contracts-Community Alternatives to Substance Abuse program is designed to train students who will help other students.

Some of the money is being used

(PALS), said Donna Edwards, project coordinator.

"By focusing on wellness, we hope to indirectly decrease the use of alcohol and substance abuse," Edwards said.

The program focuses on the idea that students are more apt to discuss personal problems with their peers. Students having a problem with substance abuse or those who just need help adjusting to college life can sign up to talk with a peer assistant.

"We think the students will be more comfortable talking with other students on these types of issues rather than talking to a psychologist or psychiatrist at Lafene (Student Health Center)," Edwards said.

The program involves training 12 students who live in all kinds of living situations. Four PALS are beginning March 1.

fraternities and sororities and four in alternate housing.

The PALS take a three-hour course to help them deal with students' problems. After six weeks of the course, the PALS move into an advisory capacity, helping students by offering them information, support and, if necessary, referring them to someone better equipped to deal with their individual problem.

All of the interaction between PALS and students is strictly confidential.

The PAC-CATS program will be sponsoring seminars throughout February, which will run concurrently with National Collegiate Drug Awareness Week Feb. 8-13 and Wellness Month. The PALS will be signing up students for advisement

Singing groups boost recruitment

By The Collegian Staff

Two campus singing groups have "chimed in" on the recruitment effort for K-State.

The K-State Singers and Men's Glee Club will be performing at various Kansas City high schools this week in an effort to expose high school students to the possibilities at K-State.

The groups will journey to Kansas City Thursday to participate in the Eastern Kansas League Choral Festival at Blue Valley North High School.

Gerald Polich, associate professor of music, said a morning concert is planned for the student body of Blue Valley North. The afternoon is reserved for the eight Kansas City area high schools participating in the festival, he said.

Polich conducts both the Men's Glee Club and K-State Singers.

Jane Welch, performing arts department chair for Blue Valley North High School, organized the events for Thursday.

Opportunities for K-State groups to tour Kansas high schools are an excellent way to tell prospective students about the University, Polich said. K-State Singers and Men's Glee Club have been praised in the past as excellent recruitment tools for the University, he said.

Eastern Kansas League schools include Turner, Blue Valley, Bishop Miege, Bonner Springs, Olathe North, Olathe South, Bonner Springs and Blue Valley North high schools.

Reno County voters find problems at poll

By The Associated Press

HUTCHINSON - Errors by computers and humans prevented between 35 and 50 Reno County residents who thought they were registered Republicans from voting in Monday night's caucus.

During a normal election, the computer glitch would not have been a problem. A voter could have declared his party affiliation if he was listed as uncommitted or could ballot as a "challenge" vote. But the Reno County caucus had no system of challenge voting.

Faculty turnover may create problems employee benefits and records in

By The Collegian Staff

The baby boom, World War II and the Korean War all directly increased K-State's enrollment and the number of faculty members.

These faculty members are now nearing eligibility for retirement.

"The increased retirement rate is related to the history of growth periods in the University. ... Post World War II and Korean War growth (of students) brought in greater numbers of faculty, a significant number of which stayed at K-State," said Provost James Coffman.

"That led into (growth from) the baby boomers and the 1960s and 1970s increases, so in the 1950s to the 1970s there was a very large increase in the size of the University student-wise, and therefore a large increase in faculty," he said.

A large number of those faculty members are reaching retirement age, said Ronald Downey, professor of planning and evaluation services. Downey is also chairman of the Faculty Senate subcommittee on salaries and fringe benefits.

During a 10-year period that began in 1986, about 333 faculty members will reach age 65. That equals more than one-fourth of the 1,200 instructional, research, extension and administration positions at K-State, he said.

In the past, 50 percent of the faculty eligible to retire will do so at age 65, another 35 percent will wait until age 70 to retire, and the remaining 15 percent will retire either after or before age 65, Downey said.

Although new faculty members can provide a new direction and new points of view for a program, the University loses enormous amounts of experience with retiring staff, Coffman said.

Often retiring faculty members are working on a variety of activities, and it may take two new faculty members to replace one retiring member, he said.

Coffman agreed that fiscal problems accompany faculty retirements.

"An unfortunate fact is that we wind up bringing young people in at more competitive salaries than people who are already here," he said.

People retiring after many years of service may have a lot of accrued vacation time and sick leave, Coffman said. When that accrued leave is cashed in for retirement severance pay, some positions have to be held PROJECTED FACULTY RETIREMENTS bill which would change the way retirement salaries are computed for some retiring faculty, she said.

Before 1962, faculty members worked under the Kansas Public Employee Retirement System. Then, their retirement salary was based on their highest 16 quarters of service, plus any severance pay they received. The severance pay included unused annual and sick

Currently, retiring faculty members' 16 highest quarters also include this severance amount, while determining final retirement pay.

The new legislation will base retirement pay on salary alone.

The bill will only effect faculty members on the KPERS plan, Gehrt said. About 1 percent of K-State faculty is currently on this system, but more than 80 faculty members have prior service under the system.

The majority of the faculty are members the Teachers Insurance and Annuity Association or the College Retirement Equities Fund. These two plans are not dependent upon state decisions, but rather on the fixed investments and stock market performance, she said.

Medical insurance is also a consideration for retiring faculty.

"One of the major disincentives to retirement is the lack of medical insurance. People will often hang on for a while just on the basis of getting medical coverage," Downey said.

Light a fire-Fondue tonight

By Chuck Horner Staff Writer

In the spring a young man's fancy often turns to thoughts of love, but when powder snow is knee-deep on the mountains, thoughts often turn to skiing.

From Chamonix in France to St. Moritz in Switzerland, an apresski dinner is made extra special with a fondue.

A fondue can provide a catalyst for good conversation and a relaxing time among friends. But getting started can, sometimes, be half of the battle.

You don't have to spend your life savings, or put your first-born child up as collateral to travel to Europe, just to enjoy the pleasure of a fondue and the pleasant environment it creates, or as the Swiss say, "gemutlich essen."

The necessary ingredients are as near as the closest stores and the know-how is in this article, so read on.

Cheese Fondue

- 1 pound aged Swiss Emmentaler cheese
- 1 pound aged Gruyere cheese
- 2 cups dry white wine
- garlic clove
- 2 tablespoons comstarch
- dash of pepper
- dash of nutmeg
- Large loaf french bread, cubed into 11/2 inch squares Preparation instructions:

Dice cheese into small pieces and place into a large bowl along with the cornstarch and shake to coat the cheese.

Slice the garlic clove and coat the inside of a fondue pot or a large non-metal saucepan (cheese will not melt if a metal pan is used) and pour in the wine. Heat the wine slowly until bubbles rise from the bottom of the pan.

Add the cheese to the wine slowly, a handful at a time and stir with a wooden spoon until the cheese is melted.

The cheese may appear stringy or clumpy, but keep stirring until it becomes smooth and creamy.

Add the pepper and nutmeg, stir, and transfer the pan or pot from the stove to the fondue warmer or a chafing dish warmer.

If the cheese and wine begin to separate, raise the flame level on the warmer and stir the fondue.

Provide each person with a fork and portions of the cubed bread. Skewer the bread with the fork, dip it in the cheese and enjoy.

Cocktail, or small whole onions, small sweet or dill pickles and commercially prepared peppers are also excellent for dipping in the For a tasty variation of cheese fondue, substitute tomate sauce for the wine. Fondue is also good ladled over baked or boiled potatoes.

This recipe serves six hungry skiers or anybody else with a hearty appetite and is best when accompanied with a bottle of white wine.

For those seeking a departure from cheese or wine, or wanting a fondue that can supplement a cheese fondue, Fondue Bourguignonne, or if you prefer, meat fondue, may fill the bill.

Fondue Bourguignonne

(meat fondue)

- 4 cups cooking oil
- 1/4 pound (or more) lean beef steak per person to be served Assorted sauces for dipping the meat into. Some suggestions are: Sweet and sour sauce
- Bearnaise sauce
- Hollandaise sauce Curry sauce
- Barbecue sauce
- Picante sauce Horseradish suace
- Assorted salad dressings

Commercially prerpared easy-to-fix mixes of bearnaise, hollandaise and curry sauce are available in larger grocery stores from manufacturers such as Knorr, or you can give it the Julia Childs' approach and make them from scratch from the recipe in a cook book.

Preparation instructions:

Trim excess fat from the steak and pound lightly to tenderize. Cut meat into bite-sized cubes.

Marinating the meat overnight in a mixture of your favorite spices and Italian oil and vinegar salad dressing can give meat extra

Place oil in a large kettle or fondue pot and bring to a slow boil. Oil should be about 3 inches deep. Transfer to a fondue or chafing dish warmer with the flame at high setting. Skewer meat with a fondue fork or other long-handled fork and place into hot oil. The meat will cook very rapidly initially, but cooking time will increase as more meat is cooked.

Remove the meat from the fork it was cooked on before eating to avoid burning your lips.

An alternative to cubed beef steak is to use ham, chicken or beef that has been sliced paper-thin while still frozen.

For the more health conscious, a beef broth can be substituted for the oil, but a hotter flame will be required to keep the broth hot enough to cook the meat. Using the thinly sliced ham, chicken and beef works best with this type of broth. Providing diners fresh vegetables such as brocolli, cauliflower, snow peas and bell peppers to cook along with the meat will enhance the meal. Using beef broth does have a distinct advantage. When everyone has finished cooking, toss any leftover meat and vegetables into the kettle, allow to simmer and serve as a tasty soup.

Beef Broth

Ingredients:

- 2 pounds of beef bones (pieces)
- 11/4 quarts cold water
- 1/2 teaspoon salt of a bay leaf
- cup chopped onion
- whole clove
- whole peppercorns

Remove meat from bones and cut into small pieces. Combine bones, meat, water, onions and spices in a large kettle. Allow to simmer, uncovered, for three hours and then strain off the broth.

Refrigerate the broth overnight and then remove any congealed fat from the top with a spoon, the beef broth, but it is very high in sodium content.

Commercially available beef-bouillon can also be used in lieu of

Whether you are going for the Guiness record for the most fondue ever consumed, or are just relaxing by the fireplace, Chocolate Fondue will broaden your horizons as well as parts of your anatomy, but its oh so good.

Chocolate Fondue

Ingredients:

- 1 pound semi-sweet chocolate
- 2 tablespoons of rum, brandy or kirschwasser. Suggested fondue dippers:
- Cherries

Strawberries

Apples (cubed) Orange segments

Pineapple (cubed)

Pears (cubed) Peaches (cubed)

Bananas (sliced)

Angel food or sponge cake (cubed)

Note: apples and bananas will turn brown after they have been cut. To preclude this, pour 1/2 cup of lemon juice in a bowl and stir in the prepared fruit, then drain. There won't be a residual lemon taste to the fruit.

Preparation instructions:

Choose the dippers you prefer and after preparing them (cubed or sliced) place in separate bowls and chill thoroughly.

Break chocolate into small pieces and place in a heavy saucepan or fondue pot. Melt chocolate over a low heat on the stove and stir in the liquor.

Transfer from the stove to a fondue or chafing dish warmer and use fondue or other long-handled forks to dip fruit or cake into the chocolate fondue.

Serves four to six hungry people with a voracious case of the Human sexuality courses to be initiated in schools

By Susan Rouse Collegian Reporter

The days of learning about sexuality on the playgrounds, in the girls' bathroom or in the boys' locker room are over.

This fall, Kansas schools will initiate a new human sexuality program in the classrooms, following a mandate by the State Board of Education in November 1987.

The mandate states that public elementary and secondary schools in Kansas must provide a comprehensive human sexuality and AIDS education.

Private schools that wish to retain accreditation must also follow the Betsy Bergen, associate professor of human development and family studies, said the mandate will allow students to learn more about sexual development, socialization of gender roles, birth control, family planning and sexually transmitted diseases.

"These will be taught at a level that (the students) can understand,"

Bergen said. However, the mere "mechanics of sex" will not be the only thing taught, she said. The program also aims at enhancing self esteem, improving decision-making skills, increasing knowledge of human sexuality, including education on AIDS and sexually transmitted diseases and increasing communication skills, Bergen said.

"For so long we have expected people to make the right decisions, but without adequate information," she said. "We want them to have the knowledge of sex, and based on that knowledge, we want students to make a decision that will cause their behavior to be in their best interest."

The state recommended that education in schools should start with the basic knowledge of sex, knowing the sexual parts of the body by the proper names, understanding the concept of self-esteem, and communication within the family.

Kansas is one of five states that has mandated a comprehensive kindergarten through 12th grade program for sex education, Bergen said.

"That makes us pretty unique. Kansas is a progressive state in this area, since we have recognized the seriousness of AIDS, sexually transmitted diseases and teenage pregnancy," she said. Bergen said the mandate allows each school district to determine how the information is taught.

As a member of the planning committee of the Higher Education Human Sexuality Network, Bergen will be helping the schools implement their programs. The committee consists of 10 representatives from Kansas colleges and universities.

"First, the district needs to decide what it wants for the school," she said. "The needs and goals are going to be different for each community. We help them be comfortable with the topic of sexuality."

14 arrested in effort to remove battle flag

By The Associated Press

MONTGOMERY, Ala. - The Alabama NAACP president and 13 other black lawmakers bent on ripping down the Confederate flag atop the state Capitol were arrested Tuesday as they tried to scale an 8-foot fence around the building.

State troopers and Capitol police met State Rep. Thomas Reed, the state president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and other black lawmakers at a padlocked gate leading to to bring down a Confederate battle the building, which is closed for renovation.

The black leaders contend the Rebel battle flag, flying from a cupola on the Capitol dome, is a racist symbol of slavery and black oppression.

State police were acting on orders from Gov. Guy Hunt, who wants legislators to decide the flag issue and promised that no one would be allowed to rip down a Capitol flag.

This is just the beginning of my effort to remove the Confederate battle flag from the Alabama Capitol," Reed said as he left the county jail following his arrest.

The NAACP also is campaigning flag over the South Carolina Statehouse, as well as to remove rebel flags from the designs of the Georgia and Mississippi state flags.

No. 16 Cyclones ready for Wildcats

By Tom Morris Sports Writer

Let it be known Iowa State Coach Johnny Orr doesn't like his teams to stray too far from the friendly confines of the James H. Hilton Coliseum in Ames — especially when it involves making the trek south to Manhattan.

Orr, in his seventh season at ISU, has only won one time in six tries at Ahearn Field House. In the overall series, the Cyclones have won only four times in 39 attempts in Manhattan.

"Yeah, we've had our problems down there," Orr said.

K-State Coach Lon Kruger also knows the importance of playing in front of a friendly audience. The University of Kansas' crowd, Saturday at Lawrence, kept the Jayhawks in the game against the Wildcats until the closing minutes.

"I appreciate the support that KU's crowd shows for the basketball team and their sportsmanship for the players before, during and after the game," Kruger said.

The sportsmanship aspect of KU's fans is what Kruger was most impressed with. Sure, there was an occasional fan spurting out some vulgarities, but there weren't any group chants involving profanity which have been heard at Ahearn this season, something Kruger said he would like to see eliminated.

What runs a close second to claiming the outright Big Eight Conference title is winning the conference's sportsmanship award for the second consecutive year, Kruger said. K-State was awarded the sportsmanship trophy, voted on by Big Eight officals, at the season-opening practice Oct. 15, 1987.

"That's something we're proud of. (Crowd all coaches have to be conscious of today that loves to run and gun. because crowd control has got to be on our minds at all times," said Kruger after the initital practice.

With that in mind, K-State, 12-4 overall and 4-0 in the Big Eight, hosts 16th-ranked Iowa State, 16-5 and 2-3, tonight in Ahearn. Tipoff is at 7:05 p.m.

It's a matchup between ISU's offense, ranked first in the conference with an average of 94.4 points per game, and K-State's toprated defense, which allows 60.8 points an Grayer, a senior from Flint, Mich., has recovered from knee and ankle injuries suffered last season and leads all Big Eight players with an average of 25 points per game.

Rhodes, a senior from Memphis, Tenn. was a virtual unknown before the season started, having only played in 12 games last year. But he scored 54 points in a 102-100 overtime win against the University of Iowa 20 more than his season total in 1986-87 and is fourth in the conference this season with an average of 23.2 points per game.

K-State won't be able to sag the defense inside as it did against KU because the Cyclones have outside threats in forward Elmer Robinson and guard Gary Thompkins, Kruger said. Even though ISU has lost three consecutive games, neither coach would agree the Cyclones are a team with problems. "Iowa State is still playing well. It's just a matter of them playing Missouri at Columbia, and playing Oklahoma back-to-back which wouldn't wish on anybody," Kruger said.

"I don't think anything has happened to the team," Orr said. "We've had to play Missouri and Oklahoma on the road and then had to turn around and play Oklahoma again.

"It's just a bad break and now we've got to o down and play at Kansas State. That's playing three of the top teams in the Big Eight on the road, and I don't think a lot of teams would win with that kind of schedule."

NOTES...Tonight's game will be broadcast by the KSN Sports Network...The notification student season tickets are not good for the Nebraska-K-State game Saturday in Ahearn is a misprint. Students with season tickets will be admitted to the game.

dds new dimension

a force for the No. 16 Cyclones.

Rhodes, who averages 23.2 points per ame overall, is the fourth leading scorer in Big Eight Conference behind teammate Jeff Grayer (25 ppg.), K-State's Mitch Richmond (23.6 ppg) and University of Kansas' Danny Manning (23.3 ppg.) But K-State's recollections of this newly-born dynamo are hazy. I'l don't even remember him playing against us," said K-State forward Charles Bledsoe, "From what I've seen of him so far this season, he's playing with a lot of confidence and he's playing loose." It's true Bledsoe doesn't remeber him. Rhodes did not get any playing time in last two meetings between K-State and Iowa

Bledsoe will have the chance to know who Rhodes is and how he plays tonight when the Cyclones invade Aheam Field

His total point production so far this season has reached 488. Last year, he scored a total of 34 points. His game high this season nearly doubled that output, as he scored 54 points in an upset win over the University of Iowa.

How does one explain the sudden Jekyl-Hyde syndrome Rhodes has acquired?

"He's having a phenominal year," K-State coach Lon Kruger said. "He's an excellent athlete and very mobile on the court. He's also a very active player on both ends of the court. Who ever gets him (on defense) will be very busy.

"He shoots well from the outside and well inside the paint," he added. "We'll probably start with Charlie (Bledsoe) on him and go from there."

Iowa State next foe for struggling K-State

By Daran Neuschafer Sports Writer

Those who have been snow skiing or sledding know the toughest part is getting to the top of the hill. Once you get to the top, all the fun starts because things become much easier.

The K-State Lady Cats are not doing any skiing or snowing, but they are finding it a little tough getting to the top of their mountain. And their mountain, in this case, is capturing their first Big Eight Conference victory.

Coach Matilda Mossman hopes her team will reach that point tonight, when the Lady Cats, losers of their last eight ball games, take on the Iowa State Cyclones in Ahearn Field House. Tip-off is scheduled for 4:30

Mossman remains optimistic about the Lady Cats' current situation, even though they are in the midst of their worst losing streak ever. The 1970-71 Lady Cat squad lost six straight games during that season, well before Mossman took the reigns. Since she arrived in 1984, K-State has seen nothing but success. Until now.

"When you haven't been in this situation before, it's tough to analyze what goes on in the kids' minds," Mossman, who owns a 61-46 career mark at K-State, said. "You don't know exactly what to do, but we just keep stressing the fact that we are getting closer.

"If we could just get over the hump, I think things would be a lot different."

The closest the Lady Cats have come to getting "over the hump" was Saturday in Lawrence against the University of Kansas.

After being soundly beaten on consecutive nights by Missouri and second-ranked Louisiana Tech, K-State bounced back against the Lady Jayhawks, who are the defending Big Eight Tournament champions. And had it not been for some miscommunication on an inbounds play late in the game, Mossman might not be as concerned as she is now.

"Our girls played extremely hard. They deserved to win," Mossman

But instead, a last second layup gave Kansas a 52-50 victory, and left K-State struggling. Iowa State brings an 11-7 overall record into tonight's contest. The Cyclones are 3-3 in the Big Eight, having won their last two games, including an 82-66 victory over the Oklahoma Sooners last Saturday. The Cyclones return four starters from last year's squad which finished 12-16. Mossman said they are also getting good play out of a couple of freshmen off the bench. "They are a good basketball team," Mossman said. "And they are just now starting to come around and play the way they are capable of." Iowa State has three players averaging in double figures, including their floor leader Etta Burns, who is scoring 11.6 points per game. Burns is the lone senior on the Cyclone

K-State, besides battling the effects of the current losing streak, is also battling the flu. Sophomore Janet Madsen, the Lady Cats' leading scorer, missed practice on Monday, and point guard Elyse Funk missed practice on Tuesday due to illness. Mossman thinks Madsen will play tonight, but Funk's availability is questionable.

NOTES...The Lady Cats have a 10-1 record against Iowa State in Ahearn, while Mossman has a 5-1 overall mark against the Cyclones...K-State assistant coach Jane Lobenstein was a member of the Cyclone team which beat K-State in Ahearn during the 1984-85 season.

CANTON, Ohio - Mike Ditka said it really wasn't fair to have had as much fun as he did playing football and still be elected to the Pro Football Hall of Fame.

The Chicago Bears coach was elected Tuesday along with Fred Biletnikoff, Jack Ham and Alan Page.

"It's mind boggling," said Ditka, who played 12 years in the NFL. Biletnikoff, a flanker with the Oakland Raiders famed for his timing and exacting pass routes, said: "I can't tell you how excited I am. It's a big, big thrill for me."

Ham, a key performer in the Pittsburgh Steelers' "Steel Curtain" during four Super Bowl victories in the 1970s, said: "I'm ecstatic. I'm going in with some pretty good company."

Page, a cornerstone at defensive tackle on the Minnesota Vikings' famed "Purple People Eaters" defense, said: "(My) whole career was a highlight."

Ditka, 48, out of the University of Pittsburgh, was named NFL rookie of the year in 1961 after catching 56 passes for 1,076 yards and 12 touchdowns. Three years later, he had 75 catches, a record for tight ends that stood for 16 years. The 6-foot-3, 225-pound native of touchdowns. The native of Erie, Pa., caught 40 or more passes for 10 straight seasons.

Ham, 39, missed only four games in his first 10 seasons in the NFL. The outside linebacker from Penn State finished a 12-year career with 251/2 sacks, 21 fumble recoveries and 32 interceptions.

Page, a 42-year-old native of Canton, home of the Hall of Fame, became the first defensive player to be named NFL most valuable player in 1971. He was the NFC's defensive player of the year four times and was an all-league choice nine years in a

Baseball team helps community in projects

By Jim Vader

Collegian Reporter

Usually, non-revenue sports programs rely on the community they function in for support. K-State's baseball team, however, has turned this concept around.

During 1987, the baseball team took on various community projects in order to give something back to the community that supports them. In its first project, the team, along with two living groups, Sigma Chi and Sigma Sigma, raised pledges for every run the Wildcats scored throughout their fall season.

"We had a great offensive season," said baseball coach Mike Clark. "Through eight games, we scored 116 runs. This raised $1200 for the Big Lakes project."

Luxuries for apes completed at zoo

By Melinda Tiemeyer Collegian Reporter

Ideally, a person's living quarters must be both comfortable and functional. It seems chimpanzees are not below needing these same things.

Chimps at the Manhattan Sunset Zoo have received special attention recently as their living space has undergone remodeling, providing them with special luxuries.

Some of these luxuries include new climbing structures, proper watering and drainage systems, and windows in the walls of the chimpanzee exhibit at the zoo.

A grant from the Institute of Museum Services has made it possible for these improvements to be made.

Steve Matthews, zoo director, said a grant of $5,500, combined with matching funds from the city, allowed $11,000 to be spent for renovation of the exhibit.

The grant only allows us to renovate one space, not build a new one," Matthews said.

"We're trying to improve the quality of care for the animals. It's not the ultimate plan, but the grant has allowed improvements to take place," he said.

Among the improvements made is proper drainage, which allows better sanitation for the chimps and easier maintenance for zoo keepers.

Sanitation pipes were placed inside the walls instead of outside. Matthews said this eliminates the problem of chimps damaging the

"By enclosing that area we were able to minimize a cross section of germs," Matthews said. "Baby chimps are especially susceptible to human germs."

A new climbing apparatus was built for the chimpanzees' enjoyment and exercise and a new water heater was purchased to aid in the cleaning of cages.

"We also put windows in the dens so they can see outside from anywhere in the room," Matthews said.

In addition, cracks in the walls were repaired and the size of the mesh was changed to prevent damage to the fence by the chimps.

Matthews said the chimps were not moved to another location during the remodeling.

"We were able to successfully keep them on one side and repair, and then move them over to the other side," Matthews said.

Officer injured by gun

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - A policeman was injured Tuesday when a shotgun accidentally discharged at the conclusion of a police operation in which a man was arrested after barricading himself in his apartment.

The officer, identified by hospital authorities as Michael Beard, 41, was listed in good condition about an hour later at Research Medical Center. Beard was knocked unconscious by the shotgun blast but suffered only minor abrasions, a hospital spokesman said.

Sgt. Laura Mulloy said the shotgun discharged accidentally as officers were moving through a narrow hallway and Beard was either handing the shotgun behind him or receiving it at the end of the operation.

She said the police operation started when officers were called to a neighborhood south of the downtown area to investigate a complaint of loud noises.

Hostages

ly 12 hours. Some parents went to their knees in joyful prayer when the assistant police chief announced that the hostage crisis had ended with the children safe. Harvey had said during the crisis that he wanted to publicize the needs of the homeless. Gov. Guy Hunt sent a taped message and said in it he "promised him whatever I have authority to give, whatever it takes to get those kids out."

Harvey had said: "There are people on the street who don't have a place to sleep or anything to eat. I'm doing this for them. This is a political act, not a criminal act."

The gunman made his comments to Associated Press reporter Hoyt Harwell several hours after invading the school's elementary division building.

He had sent a request for an AP staffer to enter the school building and hear his case to help "get my message out." Nine children were released by the gunman after Harwell entered the building and heard the man's statements, and a pregnant teacher was released not long afterward, leaving the 26 students and one teacher who were in the building until the crisis ended.

Earlier the gunman had freed about 40 of the initial hostages, with the freed children walking across a street in intermittent heavy rain to Harvey, who appeared to be in his 40s, pointed the gun at an angle above Harwell's head during their meeting. The children remained quiet in the classroom. At one point he said he wanted "immunity and a pardon." He said he had seen the disadvantaged in his travels across the Southwest and elsewhere in America and was frustrated that he hadn't got his message out.

"I'm putting my life on the line to do this," the man said. "I'm willing to

Police said two men wearing ski masks and carrying at least one rifle invaded West End Christian School about 8:40 a.m., shortly after classes began. Police Lt. David Hartin said about four hours after the school siege started, one of the two men surrendered to police.

James Hooper, acting chairman of psychology at the University of Alabama, which is in Tuscaloosa, said it was "certainly possible" the man was inspired partly by Monday's hostage incident in Lumberton, N.C., where workers at a newspaper were held hostage by two armed American Indians who said they were protesting the death of a black inmate at a

In a symbolic move Tuesday, the Senate Foreign Relations Committee voted 10-0 to send Reagan's request to the full Senate with a negative recommendation. The panel's Republican members boycotted the meeting as partisan and meaningless, since the aid package will go to the Senate floor automatically if it passes the House.

The Manhattan City Commission Tuesday night amended the Standard Traffic Ordinance to include joggers in the definition of pedestrians. The amended traffic ordinance

By Audra Dietz

Collegian Reporter

requires all pedestrians and joggers to use sidewalks along highways, and if no sidewalk is available, they must walk or jog on the shoulder of the highway facing traffic.

Pedestrians can test the amended ordinance on the new sidewalk approved for construction on Wreath Avenue between Anderson Avenue and Claflin Road. Commissioners approved the project on a 3 to 1 vote at a cost of $25,000. The sidewalk will utilize the existing right-of-way available so more children could parand any easements dedicated by property owners. No date was set to begin construction.

Joggers required to use sidewalks

The Commission also debated dissolving the newly established "After School Kids Club." Parents and children attended the meeting to protest. The club was for elementary children with working parents.

Terry DeWeese, director of the Parks and Recreation Department, said the club was losing more than $500 a week and would lose $25,000 by May if it continued to operate.

"We thought the number of kids paying the full fee would offset the number of kids paying the subsidized fee, but it hasn't," DeWeese said.

The subsidized rate was made ticipate, he said. Eighty Manhattan school children are now members, with 60 paying the reduced fee.

Parents protested that they pulled their children out of day- care centers to join the club, and dissolving it would put their children out on the streets after school, adding that the waiting lists for day-care services are so long they cannot get their children back in.

Commissioner Nancy Denning said she supported the club.

"I've been through this, and it puts parents in a bad position," Denning said. "It wouldn't be easy finding a place for the kids to go after school."

Denning proposed setting up an internship program with K-State to solve the staffing problem. She said she would like to use student interns in child care and related fields to help supervise the children.

Divided House rejects Contra aid plea

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - A bitterly divided House voted Wednesday to cut off U.S. military support for Nicaragua's Contra rebels, rejecting President Reagan's aid request in the hope of fortifying the Central American peace process.

years of overt and covert military support for the rebels fighting the leftist Sandinista government, killed Reagan's request for $36.2 million in new aid to keep the Contras alive as a fighting force through June.

It was a serious defeat for the president, who had lobbied hard on the issue for two weeks and has put the The 219-211 vote, culminating six Contras among the top foreign policy

Only a day earlier, Reagan had offered one final compromise giving Congress more say in the military aid. He argued that failure to extend aid would strengthen communist influence in the hemisphere.

The White House issued a statement saying it was disappointed the House "did not vote to keep pressure

Alumni director to leave, pursue other challenges

By Chuck Horner Staff Writer

The long-time director of the KSU Alumni Association, Lawrence Weigel, is leaving his position.

Weigel, 44, said Wednesday night that he has been at K-State for a long time, and that leaving the top Alumni Association in the Big Eight Conference was a difficult decision to make.

Weigel stressed that he is not resigning, but rather is leaving to pursue University of Iowa, but Weigel said other challenges.

"I'm a true-blue K-Stater. I came here on a basketball scholarship and wound up coaching from 1967 to 1971," he said.

'The board of directors of the Alumni Association has been very supportive of me and that has been one of the best aspects of this job. I feel attached to K-State and the board. and I want to help in the selection of my replacement."

-Larry Weigel

Weigel said he coached under three head coaches, including Tex Winter, Cotton Fitzsimmons and Jack Hartman.

Weigel worked for the KSU Foundation as the director of annual donations for seven years before accepting the position of director of the Alumni Association.

"I'm the sixth Alumni Association director in the history of K-State, so there's a lot of tradition in this position," he said.

Weigel said he has not set a deadline for his departure, but indicated to the board of directors a time frame of six months to one year.

The board of directors of the Alumni Association has been very supportive of me and that has been one of the best aspects of this job," he said. "I feel attached to K-State and the board, and I want to help in the selection of my replacement."

Weigel said he announced his decision to the board because he did not want to examine other career options without informing the board of his intentions. He said no other universities had officially contacted him regarding similar positions, but that he had received some feelers from other people in association director work. It had been reported that Weigel was a nominee for a position at the that position had been filled last fall.

The University has asked the Alumni Association to take on additional responsibilities, which is a good sign, he said.

"At the request of the University, the Alumni Association took on recruitment through the alumni clubs and we are now challenging the alumni clubs to become even more active in recruitment," he said. "Under a concept called the Model Alumni Club, we are also moving into placement."

Weigel said the new position of associate director of the Alumni Association had been created and that the associate director would be working with the alumni clubs on recruitment and placement.

"We have interviewed three applicants for the position of associate director, and the position has been offered to one of them and we are awaiting a response," he said.

Weigel said the Alumni Association would be working closely with the Career Planning & Placement Center in the area of placement.

"We've always had a strong relationship with the president's office, and President Wefald has been outstanding," he said.

"The association has always enjoyed a situation whereby we have a direct link to the president, and it's important we have that link," he said.

K-State President Jon Wefald said he had nothing but praise for Weigel. "Larry Weigel has been an outstanding K-Stater, and has done an outstanding job as the director of the Alumni Association," Wefald said.

"Larry Weigel has more friends around Kansas than anyone else I

Divided House rejects Contra aid plea

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - A bitterly divided House voted Wednesday to cut off U.S. military support for Nicaragua's Contra rebels, rejecting President Reagan's aid request in the hope of fortifying the Central American peace process.

The 219-211 vote, culminating six years of overt and covert military support for the rebels fighting the leftist Sandinista government, killed Reagan's request for $36.2 million in new aid to keep the Contras alive as a fighting force through June.

It was a serious defeat for the president, who had lobbied hard on the issue for two weeks and has put the Contras among the top foreign policy priorities for his final year in office. Only a day earlier, Reagan had offered one final compromise giving Congress more say in the military aid. He argued that failure to extend aid would strengthen communist influence in the hemisphere.

The White House issued a statement saying it was disappointed the House "did not vote to keep pressure on the Sandinistas during the peace sional supporters and others concern- man for the Nicaraguan Resistance, process."

Kansans split along party lines/Page 10

"We thank our many supporters in Congress who worked so hard on behalf of this issue. We will continue consultations with these congresing the future of the resistance and the peace process," said presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater.

A Contra spokeswoman in Miami termed the vote "a serious setback in our struggle for freedom and democracy.

"The vote does not mean we will stop," said Marta Sacasa, spokeswothe Contra umbrella group. She said Contra leaders would "reassess possible strategies" but added, "there's no way a U.S. vote is going to change our determination or will. We will just have to do without."

Snow replaces warm weather

By Vera McMinimy Collegian Reporter

Snow Wednesday morning shattered dreams of spring after temperatures reached into the 60s last week.

Beginning around sunrise and lasting into the afternoon, a storm dumped about 4 inches of snow on Manhattan. The storm hit western Kansas around midnight and moved east, leaving 3 to 5 inches of snow in northern Kansas and a combination of snow, sleet and freezing drizzle in southern Kansas, according to the National Weather Service in Topeka.

An area from Lincoln, Kan., to Clay Center reported 7 to 8 inches of snow, the most in northeast Kansas, said Ron Crandall, National Weather Service meteorologist. The weather service is forecasting temperatures falling to zero tonight and a high in the teens Friday.

The snow caused some problems for people driving to campus. Deb Oltmanns and Monique Lutherland, seniors in home economics education, said U.S. 24 from Wamego was slick and visibility poor at about 8 a.m. Wednesday.

"Only one lane of road was visible, and there had been no grading," Oltmanns said. "As many people come from Wamego, I thought it should be the first place to be graded."

For some people on campus, the snow meant a long, cold day shoveling sidewalks. Peggy Mays, equipment operator for the grounds department, began shoveling snow at 8 a.m. She cleared some areas two times during the day because of snow accumulation.

Usually, some members of the grounds crew would have been called in at 4 a.m. to begin shoveling. But because the snow did not start until sunrise, they came in at their usual hours, Mays said.

The Kansas Highway Patrol in Salina said roads were snowpacked. A spokesman for the patrol said some accidents had occurred - "about the same old stuff with every other snowstorm."

Manhattan's Parkside Conoco did not see any snow- or coldrelated problems, said owner Wilbur Hunter.

Kimberly Waggle, senior in architectural engineering, uses an umbrella to keep the snow off as she walks ■ See WEATHER, Page 10 across campus Wednesday morning. About four inches of snow fell on Manhattan Wednesday.

Alumni director to leave, pursue other challenges

By Chuck Horner Staff Writer

The long-time director of the KSU Alumni Association, Lawrence Weigel, is leaving his position.

Weigel, 44, said Wednesday night that he has been at K-State for a long time, and that leaving the top Alumni Association in the Big Eight Conference was a difficult decision to make.

Weigel stressed that he is not resigning, but rather is leaving to pursue other challenges.

"I'm a true-blue K-Stater. I came 1971," he said.

"The board of directors of the Alumni Association has been very supportive of me and that has been one of the best aspects of this job. I feel attached to K-State and the board. and I want to help in the selection of my replacement."

-Larry Weigel

Weigel said he coached under three head coaches, including Tex Winter, Cotton Fitzsimmons and Jack Hartman.

Weigel worked for the KSU Foundation as the director of annual donations for seven years before accepting the position of director of the Alumni Association.

"I'm the sixth Alumni Association director in the history of K-State, so there's a lot of tradition in this position," he said.

Weigel said he has not set a deadline for his departure, but indicated to the board of directors a time frame of six months to one year.

'The board of directors of the Alumni Association has been very supportive of me and that has been one of the best aspects of this job," he said. "I feel attached to K-State and the board, and I want to help in the selection of my replacement."

Weigel said he announced his decision to the board because he did not want to examine other career options without informing the board of his intentions.

He said no other universities had officially contacted him regarding similar positions, but that he had received some feelers from other people in association director work. It had been reported that Weigel was a nominee for a position at the University of Iowa, but Weigel said that position had been filled last fall. The University has asked the here on a basketball scholarship and Alumni Association to take on addiwound up coaching from 1967 to tional responsibilities, which is a good sign, he said.

"At the request of the University, the Alumni Association took on recruitment through the alumni clubs and we are now challenging the alumni clubs to become even more active in recruitment," he said. "Under a concept called the Model Alumni Club, we are also moving into placement."

Weigel said the new position of associate director of the Alumni Association had been created and that the associate director would be working with the alumni clubs on recruitment and placement. "We have interviewed three applicants for the position of associate director, and the position has been offered to one of them and we are awaiting a response," he said. Weigel said the Alumni Association would be working closely with the Career Planning & Placement Center in the area of placement. "We've always had a strong relationship with the president's office, and President Wefald has been outstanding," he said. "The association has always enjoyed a situation whereby we have a direct link to the president, and it's important we have that link," he said.

K-State President Jon Wefald said he had nothing but praise for Weigel. "Larry Weigel has been an outstanding K-Stater, and has done an outstanding job as the director of the Alumni Association," Wefald said.

"Larry Weigel has more friends around Kansas than anyone else I

Kennedy confirmed to Supreme Court

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - The Senate on Wednesday swiftly and unanimously confirmed Anthony M. Kennedy to the Supreme Court, ending a ferocious political battle that began seven months ago.

Kennedy, a federal appeals court judge who was President Reagan's third choice to succeed retired Justice Lewis F. Powell, was approved by 97-0 with Democrats and Republicans alike praising him as a moderate, open-minded conservative.

Reagan, in a statement, said he is "extremely pleased" and declared Kennedy "will make an outstanding addition to the

His confirmation, after a pro forma onehour debate, was in marked contrast to the stormy fight touched off by the nomination last July of Robert H. Bork.

Bork, Reagan's first choice to fill the vacancy created by Powell's June 26 retirement, was denounced as a rigid right-wing ideologue who threatened individual freedom and civil rights progress. The Senate rejected him by 58-42 on Oct. 23.

Reagan, calling Bork the victim of a lynch mob, then picked Douglas H. Ginsburg, who withdrew from consideration after admitting

Israelis, Arabs continue battles

BETHLEHEM, Occupied West Bank - Israeli soldiers killed a Palestinian and wounded six others, and Arabs armed with slingshots and stones injured five Israelis in battles Wednesday in the West Bank, witnesses and officials said.

Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir meanwhile rebuffed a call from President Hosni Mubarak of Egypt for a six-month freeze on Jewish settlements in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip as a prelude to peace talks. Violent protests broke out Wednesday night in the West Bank city of Tulkarem after Moslem preachers announced through mosque loudspeakers that Jewish settlers were rampaging through the area, the army command said.

Baby M awarded to father

TRENTON, N.J. - New Jersey's highest court today awarded custody of the child once known as Baby M to her father and his wife, but ruled that the surrogate parenting contract under which she was born was invalid.

Wichita deputy dead after raid

WICHITA - A veteran Sedgwick County Sheriff's narcotics investigator shot and killed during a drug raid will be buried Saturday.

Detective Terry McNett, 36, was killed Tuesday night while helping serve a search warrant at a northeast Wichita residence. Sheriff Mike Hill said. McNett was permanently assigned to a U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration task force that also includes Wichita officers and federal agents.

McNett became a sheriff's deputy June 18, 1979. He spent most of his career on narcotics investigations, Hill said. Before joining the department McNett held jobs as a state court marshal and a lieutenant on the Haysville Police Department. He was a 1969 graduate of Belle Plaine High School.

The detective was a hard worker who was well-respected,

"If I ever got into a situation where my life was on the line, would have wanted him backing me. He was that kind of individual," the sheriff said.

House passes division of assets

TOPEKA - A measure that would allow elderly couples to split their assets when one spouse becomes seriously ill so that medical expenses don't cost them all of their property won unanimous House approval Wednesday.

The 125-0 vote was expected, and the measure now goes to the Senate, for consideration of extensive amendments added in a House committee. The Senate is scheduled to take up the bill Thursday, with approval likely, senators said.

The so-called division of assets bill is perceived as impossible to vote against politically, especially because all 165 legislative seats are up for election in November. Gov. Mike Hayden and Republican and Democratic leaders have endorsed it.

Parents to sue K.C. hospital

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - The parents of a 4-year-old girl who died while being treated for a nosebleed, and the parents of an infant who died from an overdose of Valium administered at the hospital have filed lawsuits against Children's Mercy Hospital in Jackson County Circuit Court.

Rosalinda and Ray Reyes of North Kansas City contend in the first suit that the negligence of the hospital staff in caring for their daughter, Rene, contributed to her death.

According to the suit, Rene died Sept. 3, four hours after being taken to the Children's Mercy emergency room for treatment of a nosebleed.

The suit alleges that medical staff failed to stop the girl's bleeding, did not treat her for lost blood, did not monitor her vital signs and failed to treat her for shock.

The second lawsuit was filed by Cindy and Mark Einhellig of Lenexa, Kan. in the March 9 death of their infant son,

According to that suit, Justin died in the arms of the hospital's nurses after an overdose of Valium was administered to him.

Snow removal expensive

By Robert Clasen Collegian Reporter

Snow removal may not be as easy as some people believe it is. "Two inches of snow doesn't seem like much until you put it in a pile and start filling trucks," said Charles Beckom, KSU Police chief.

Even if all of the parking lots, including those at the residence halls, were empty, it would take more than a day to clear them off, he said.

Five years ago, the University spent about $140,000 removing snow from campus roads, sidewalks and parking lots. This year, $65,000 is budgeted for parking lots alone.

"(The cost) varies each year, depending on the snowfall," Beckom

The KSU Police Department is responsible for clearing snow off campus parking lots.

The University has spent more than $30,000 on snow removal so far this year, not including Wednesday's work, he said.

'We've been lucky the past few years," Beckom said. "We've either had snow when school was not in session or light snow."

Normally, work isn't done on the lots until two inches or more has fallen, he said. If less than two inches accumulates, sand is used.

Beckom said a combination of sand and general traffic tends to melt the lighter snows, eliminating the cost of using heavy equipment.

"It goes against our operating expenses account," he said.

Kent said his department has one grader, one loader that will handle a large snow blower, one sanding truck with a plow on the front and three smaller tractors for driveways and areas the big equipment can't reach.

The sidewalks, handicapped curb cuts and building entrances are handled by Facilities Custodial Services.

This department uses tractors with brooms on the front to clear the sidewalks, and shovels and brooms for the stairs and entryways of buildings. During the summer months, the tractor's broom is replaced with a blade attachment for mowing.

University employees do most of this work during regular hours. Only heavy snows or occasions such as basketball games bring them in for

Bruce McCallum, public works director for the City of Manhattan, said the city doesn't have a specific budget set up for snow removal. The city primarily uses its own equipment, consisting of six snow plows and two graders, he said.

"If it gets to the point where we can't handle it with our own equipment, then we contract out," McCallum said.

HAVE THERE BEEN ANY CHANGES IN YOUR SCHOOL PAPER SINCE THE SUPREME COURT RULING?

On time, money and life Deadlines one of world's scourges

And they complained about deadlines. To the group of high school students sitting in the room discussing ways to increase staff morale, a common factor surfaced in their complaints: They all wanted more time. And don't we all?

It's a sad fate the world has evolved to when the important things in life are measured in dollars, cents, hours and minutes. Starting as early as kindergarten, children are taught to pay special homage to the clock. Remember all the times a parent or teacher said: "When the big hand gets to the six ...?" At young ages, children are conditioned to literally obey the clock's commands.

And, as these high school students are finding out, the vicious battle with the clock never seems to end. By the time kids are old enough to read a clock - and with digital clocks that's not real old - children are attached to watches, their very own portable clock. I say children are attached to them because a watch is something affixed to the outside of the body which then goes on to regulate most — if not all — human actions.

Once kids are hooked up to the watches, they find themselves embarking on a neverending journey of meeting deadlines - the scourge of mankind. In the beginning, it's simple enough. The child learns to watch the clock for time marking the beginning of another school day, also anticipating the time when school is over.

One hundred and eighty days a year the average child wakes at a certain time, leaves home at a certain time, listens to the school bells ring at designated times and returns home at the same time, day after day. How can society be run by the manacle of time which chains us to becoming a societyconformed clone?

Doing away with clocks or time would, of course, be an easy way to end culture as it Commentary

now stands. Scholars would tell us that societies that functioned with little regard for immediate time - hours and minutes as opposed to months and years - never made it. Whoever heard of an Indian with a watch or an aborigine yelling that he's going to miss his 3 o'dlock appointment? Many of these original cultures spent more time appreciating life than trying to race it to the finish.

But to these high school students, deadlines and the watches they wear have become a web tying them down, sometimes pulling them away from possible achievements or accomplishments because "there's just not enough time." And isn't that what life is really all about - time? Shouldn't people be worried about spending their time wisely on earth instead of rushing to school, work, committee meetings, appointments and all the other places people are continually rushing

These high school students are forced to balance school, homework, work and a myriad of other activities, usually using the watch as a quality/quantity guage. The guage works in this manner: After a certain amount of time, their quantity requirements are fulfilled. Using time, once again the student reasons, "I've spent 30 minutes working, therefore I will get an A on the quiz

Whenever people talk about how ready they are to take a test, or how much they've helped with some cause, the person asked will usually reply in "hours." For example: "Oh, I put in 20 hours helping," or "I studied all night." But does this reliance on time as a quality guage really inform people about how much they helped or how much they studied? Some people can help, study or work better or harder than others, but time is a common denominator so society uses it as a crutch.

After masquerading the manacle most wear on their arms in colorful plastic or elegant gold, it's almost easy to forget the watch isn't some piece of jewelry instead of the taskmaster it has come to be. Deadlines and the importance of time are things this society, no doubt, could not do without.

Without the monitor of time people would walk about in a daze, trying to think what they must get done in order to survive. Without a deadline hanging over most of our heads, few things would ever get accomplished. People, it seems, have the tendency to take the Scarlett O'Hara approach to life, deciding to worry about "it" tomorrow.

But of equal importance is the idea that the shackles can be taken off. Take your watch off for a complete week; try living without it. It will hurt at first, but by the seventh day you begin to appreciate time spent wisely. You appreciate a job well done because you quit when the job was done, not because the alarm on your watch beeped. You will appreciate the time you have to do something constructive instead of watching your watch.

These high school students were right: Deadlines are a scourge to be reckoned with, and time is a commodity society has put a high price on for many of the wrong reasons.

NCAA betrays academics, athletes

What's with the NCAA? Division 1 schools made significant progress toward establishing legislation that would demand better grades from their student athletes, only to reverse themselves and cancel the motion by the end of the meeting. The legislation called for a certain degree of academic progress for a student athlete to continue competing in his or her sport at the intercollegiate level. After the first season of competition, an athlete would have to have a 1.6 grade point average in order to be eligible for a second season of competition. This would rise to 1.8 after the second season in order to be eligible for the third, and then to a 2.0 to continue in the sport.

The members voted the measure through by a slim majority, broke for lunch and returned to the meeting to vote it down by an equally slim margin. Maybe lunch didn't agree with them. ... Along the way to fame and fortune, it would not hurt a student athlete to crack a book or two. That is what the failed measure is about, and we hope it will get another tryout sometime in the

Why not put an ox on next coin?

Our life revolves around money. Although there are a variety of sayings that attempt to convince humans that being so reliant on money is wrong - like "Money isn't everything," or "You can't buy love (or happiness, or friends or family)" - it has become a basic fact of our existence that money is essential to actively participate in society.

Americans like money. They like it just the way it is. No one really wants to mess with little Susan B. Anthony dollars that always get confused with quarters or with cumbersome $2 bills that seem unnecessary. The Anthony dollar was such a flop that the U.S. Treasury, which minted 800 million of them, still has 500 million sitting around that nobody wants. As far as $2 bills, it's probably been two or three years since I have actually seen anyone using one to purchase anything.

Everyone seems pretty happy with our money the way it is. However, the government, always trying to improve the life of the average citizen, has come up with a new plan to both save money and make the dollar a little bit more interesting.

Two new bills introduced into the House and Senate last fall are trying to change the face of the dollar bill forever. They're not only going to change the face on the bill, but the entire dollar, trying once again to create a dollar coin.

Whoa. Now with the recent 1979 failure of the Anthony dollar, what makes these politicians think we're going to be any more willing to accept a dollar as a coin now? Well, one thing actually. Eighteen months after the introduction of the new dollar coins, the bill calls for the elimination of all paper dollars. Therefore, like the new dollar coins or not, you will have to use them.

CATHERINE DOUD Collegian Columnist

The dollar coin idea actually makes a lot of sense. The coins only have to be replaced once in 20 years, as opposed to the 12- to 18-month lifespan of paper money. Therefore, the coins will end up saving the treasury about $50 million a year. I must grant, of course, that people will no doubt hoard the old bills they have, thus opening up a new market for collectors.

The coins do have a lot going for them. The new coins will be multi-sided to aid blind people in their recognition. Also, being 90 percent copper, they will have a distinct gold color that will make them much more difficult to confuse with other coins.

The benefits of such a coin are numerous. Recently, other countries - like Canada, Australia, Belgium and France - have switched to using a large denomination coin. Canada is especially a good example since it not only introduced a dollar coin, but also phased out its paper dollar note, with excellent results.

This bill will make the troubled copper industry happy, blind people happy, the treasury happy, vending machine manufacturers happy - in fact almost everyone will be happy about it. So, why am I unhappy?

It's not the idea of the coin itself. It's the way it will look.

The new coin will bear on its side a design of Christopher Columbus discovering the New World. This makes no sense at all. Why would the United States of America want a man who not only was not American, but who never even set foot on the continental United States on its coins? While this man spent time discovering Haiti and other Central and South American countries, he was also engaged in various wars with the natives and was eventually shipped home in chains to Spain after Spanish authorities came over to investigate his cruel dealings.

This man is a poor choice to display on our national coin. It's time to be daring and choose important people from our own country to honor on the dollar coin. Let's choose someone representing our ethnic heritage, like Martin Luther King Jr., Sitting Bull or Amelia Earhart. Or if the legislators are set on an explorer, how about someone who actually explored in the United States, like Lewis and Clark or Hernando DeSoto?

Our coinage system contains enough pompous old heros without adding one more almost mystical explorer to the ranks.

If this is the type of person Congress is going to choose to grace the coins of our country, I would suggest that we have very unimaginative lawmakers. I suppose if we ever mint a $5 coin we can look forward to a similar choice of design as well. Since the $1 coin is going to honor the great discovery of America by Columbus, although he wasn't the first, and didn't really discover it, perhaps we'll have another great hero like Paul Bunyan and Babe the Ox on the $5 dollar

Tenure requires well-rounded success

Department considers research, public service

By Shelly Tierney Collegian Reporter

Student evaluations are a reflection of a professor's ability to teach, but they are not always the major concern of tenure-track faculty members.

Besides being evaluated on teaching capabilities, the faculty member seeking tenure must live up to the department's expectations in areas of research, scholarly activity and community service.

A department's tenured faculty decide whether other faculty members should be tenured, said John Keller, president of Faculty Senate.

the tenured faculty, the recommendation for tenure is advanced to the dean of the college, who takes it to the council of deans. Next, it is presented to the provost, and it goes to the Board of Regents for final approval.

Teaching evaluation is based on "evidence of faculty-student success," Keller said. "Every person must submit solid evidence that they can do successfully what their particular job description indicated when they were hired at the University."

It's difficult for a tenure committee to analyze student evaluations that are returned with a rating of mediocre to poor, he said.

"A lot of my teaching evaluations aren't terribly valid because my classes are small,"

Each department has to devise ways for the faculty members - particularly those hoping to gain tenure — to prove their competency in teaching, he said.

The department head makes a recommendation every year to the dean for or against reappointment of untenured faculty members, said Richard Busch, assistant professor

"If an instructor is not a good teacher, that information could possibly be withheld and not passed on to the dean," he said. "The results of my teaching evaluations have never been passed on to the dean."

"It is forced upon untenured faculty to test their competence and willingness to contribute to the department and to the University as a whole," he said. "There have been many committee assignments I didn't like, but I did them anyway.'

The tenure committee also considers scholarly activity and research before giving its decision for tenure.

"Scholarly activity is more than publishing," Keller said. "For an architect, it may be evaluated by national competitions - it depends on the field." Sponsored research is dependent upon how much a faculty member generates new or original work in his field. "In some fields, such as physics or chemistry, this could stop you from being tenured,"

Denial of tenure is a black mark against a career, Busch said. "Two years from now I'll be granted tenure or denied," he said. "If denied, I would certainly have trouble finding another job in a tenure-track position."

At K-State, the probation period for tenure is seven years.

Group aids prisoner's release

By Janelle Larson Collegian Reporter

When a 59-year-old metallurgical engineer at Sarajevo University was released from a Yugoslavian prison on Nov. 18, a group in Manhattan may have been partly responsible.

Ismet Kasumagic was imprisoned March 24, 1983, as a "prisoner of conscience" for "spreading hostile propaganda about the Yugoslavian government from a position of Muslim nationalism.

Manhattan-Area Amnesty International was Kasumagic's sponsor, said David Schmidt, assistant professor of computer science and adviser for the group.

A prisoner of conscience is imprisoned for political opinions, religious beliefs, racial or ethnic background; not for using or advocating violence, Schmidt said.

A member of Yugoslavia's Muslim minority, Kasumagic was one of 101 prisoners pardoned by the Yugoslavian government on that country's State Anniversary Day.

The group was informed about Kasumagic's release in a letter from the London office of Amnesty International and in a letter from Kasumagic to one of the Manhattan

New trash cans designed

By The Collegian Staff

Out with the purple, in with the redwood.

The old purple and white trash cans spread around campus will soon become a thing of the past, as they are being replaced by new redwood trash receptacles.

The redwood receptacles are being built by University Physical Facilities. Their design is based on a design chosen several years ago to replace the trash cans currently on campus.

Tommy Lee, physical plant supervisor of facilities custodial services, decided the department should build the trash receptacles itself because of the $536 cost of buying them ready-made. By building them, the department will save about $150 on each receptacle.

There are currently 30 of the receptacles built and in place, and the department plans to build 50 this year and 50 more next year.

In addition to the receptacles being built for the main campus, the Department of Housing will build 15 receptacles to be placed around the outside of the residence halls.

"We wanted to get rid of some of the unsightly trash barrels that rim the area around the residence plant supervisor in the housing department.

Randy Pfaff, welder in Housing Maintenance, makes a frame for a wooden trash receptacle that will replace the old metal cans. The new containers are being made on campus at a savings of about $150.

The housing department has not halls," said Gene Wiley, physical placed any of the receptacles out as yet, but it is currently assembling several in its shop.

The money for construction of the receptacles is coming out of the grounds maintenance budget and housing maintenance budget.

The grounds maintenance department plans to get rid of all the metal cans on campus, but keep metal cans in the parking lots.

Louisburg bank 2nd to fail in '88

By The Associated Press

LOUISBURG - The Bank of Louisburg was declared insolvent and closed Wednesday and an Ottawa bank was allowed to acquire it, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation announced.

The bank will be operated as a branch of the Peoples National Bank and Trust of Ottawa, said FDIC spokesman Bill Olcheski. It is the second bank to fail in Kansas this year and the 17th to fail nationwide.

Louisburg, a community of about 1,700 people about 30 miles south of the Kansas City area, had two chartered banks. Ottawa, a town with a population of about 11,000 people, is 30 miles east of Louisburg.

Depositors of the failed bank will automatically become depositors of the assuming bank, subject to court approval, Olcheski said. The bank had about 3,700 depositors and total

State Banking Commissioner W. Newton Male named the FDIC as the bank's receiver after he closed it. A spokesman for Male said the bank failed because its loan losses exceeded its capital. He did not elaborate further.

Olcheski said, "This is not an agricultural bank.'

The FDIC's board of directors approved Peoples' purchase of $13.9 million of the failed bank's assets, at a discount of about $975,000, Olcheski said. The remaining assets will be held by the FDIC, he said.

Olcheski said the FDIC's board has the power to approve such a transaction when it determines one would be less costly to the FDIC than liquidating all of a failed bank's

Piecing it all together

By Chuck Horner Staff Writer

Most people find writing resumes aggravating and worrisome, especially when considering what hangs in the balance -

A resume is your personal advertisement. It is the most widely accepted medium of communication between job seekers and prospective employers.

It differs from most advertisements in that it is not directed at the general public, but rather at a specific employer.

Whether you have been working for 20 years or are seeking your first job, translating your qualifications onto paper - neatly, concisely and in a recognized resume format — is tedious

Wait! Don't despair. There are at least three steps you can take to develop the perfect resume.

A number of books in Farrell Library address resume writing in detail, and reference materials are also available at the Career Planning and Placement Center in Holtz Hall.

If you don't feel up to the challenge of creating your own resume, there are resume services that offer a broad spectrum of options, from typing a prepared resume to turning a handful of job descriptions and a diploma into a complete resume.

The placement center offers a computer program titled Resume Expert, designed for students and alumni to develop their own resumes. "The Resume Expert program is IBM compatible and is licensed to us," said Bruce Laughlin, director of the center. After the program is used to complete a resume, the placement center staff must do the actual printing of the resume. This is a requirement placed on the center to avoid the temptation for people to reproduce the software, Laughlin said.

Staff in the placement center are available to help students use the Resume Expert program, Laughlin said.

Another source for resume information is the hundreds of doit-yourself resume books on the market.

In the book "Resumes That Work," author Tom Cowan lists three basic kinds of resumes: skill-based, functional and chronological. "Resume Writing" by Burdette E. Bostwick provides several variations of the three types.

According to Cowan, a skill-based resume is organized around the skills and areas of knowledge gained in a single job or several jobs, volunteer work, and/or education courses.

Cowan says a skill-based resume is excellent for people who possess skills gained after only a few years or after a series of part-time jobs.

A skill-based resume also lends itself to a format that can cover up a spotty work record or a history of frequent job changes, which might suggest instability, Cowan writes.

In a functional resume, the emphasis is on the positions held and the titles of the jobs, so the resume reader can immediately see what work has been done.

According to Cowan, advantages of the functional resume include being able to show progression in a field, showing the performance of a variety of duties while working for the same employer, and depicting the performance of duties not usually associated with the title of a job - for example, working as a bookkeeper while holding the job title of a secretary.

The emphasis of a chronological resume is on employers and dates of employment. What strikes the resume reader first is the companies worked for and the length of employment, according to Cowan.

The chronological resume may not be very helpful for the first- or second-time job seeker, but it is the most traditional resume format, he writes.

No matter what type of resume is chosen, Cowan says there are two features employers look for: job descriptions and particular accomplishments. The placement center uses a standardized form - known as a data sheet - as a type of resume. The data sheets must be filed with the placement office for job-seekers to be able to use the oncampus interview service, Laughlin said.

Data sheets, when completed, contain nearly all the essentials of a resume and can be used as a starting point for development of a resume, he said.

The staff of the placement center is available for assistance in writing a resume. When considering prospective employees, David Chesher, director of human resources for Farm Bureau Insurance Cos., said, "You have to tell your story without being too wordy."

Chesher recommends resumes be done professionally on good quality white paper and be written in plain, simple English, avoiding the use of jargon.

"Cover letters accompanying the resume should address why you are qualified for the job and what you can do for the company," Chesher said.

Anyone who submits a cover letter without first doing some research on the company and then using the information in the letter is missing the opportunity to make a favorable first impression, he said.

Laughlin agreed with Chesher's assessment of a cover letter's importance, saying he discouraged the heavy use of "sample cover letters" - although some are available for use - because of the temptation to copy, which can result in standardized and superficial cover letters.

He said he has developed a set of guidelines for composing cover letters and encourages students to use them to develop information unique to themselves.

"While the use of colored paper with resumes has been very much in vogue, people I have talked to in the business world prefer the softer shades," said Arlia McManis, owner of Resume

"Whites, off-whites and easy-to-read earth tones are right back in fashion," she said.

The use of fancy borders or colored paper can either add or detract from the resume, she said.

Prices for the service range from about $12 for a one-page, self-prepared resume to $40 for a one-page service-prepared

Sherry Watkins of Claflin Books & Copies said cover letters should always be typed on the same paper as the resume and sent in a matching envelope. Job experience and job descriptions should be carefully worded, with a skillful use of words to describe responsibilities and supervision experience, she said. People with majors in architecture or design often add a border or a drawing to the resume to show employers a sample of their work, but generally, resumes are kept plain so the content remains the dominant feature, Watkins said.

"It is important for people to think very carefully about their resume," she said. "It's the first impression an employer gets."

Will your resume survive?

Resume Musts

- Name, address with zip code, telephone number with
- Personal data (age, marital status, health, willingness to travel or relocate, date of availability).
- Job objectives. Qualifications.
- Experience.
- Education (honors, awards, high class standing).
- Extracurricular activities.
- Languages other than English.
- Summer jobs.
- Military service.
- Hobbies (if interesting).

Resume Omits

- The date.
- Race, religion or political affiliation.
- Salary requirements.
- Matters that are detrimental or awkward to write about.

Resume Criticisms

Listed below are the most common criticisms of resumes expressed by resume readers. While there is no sure way to appeal to every reader, resumes can be enhanced by using the following as a checklist.

- Resume is too long.
- You guessed it; resume is too short.
- Too condensed; it's better to expand the spaces between paragraphs.
- Too wordy; descriptions are verbose. ■ Too slick; obviously written by someone other than the - individual presenting it. ■ Too amateurish; applicants cannot express themselves.
- Poorly reproduced on poor paper or on an inferior
- Misspellings and bad grammar. Omitted reason for leaving last job.
- Date of availability omitted.
- Geographical preference omitted.
- Job objective omitted.
- Resume content is poorly expressed.
- Resume is boastful. Resume is dishonest, claiming expertise not possessed. Resume lacks sufficient data for a proper evaluation.

Cover Letter Format

- Cover letters should be typewritten. Exceptions might include graphic arts applicants whose professional work could regularly involve handwriting.
- Letters should be perfectly typewritten: no errors, no erasures, no misspellings.

Individually type each letter on good quality paper (no photocopies or duplicates). Preferably, the paper used for the cover letter should match the resume and envelope.

- Always include your complete return address and the - Use a letter format from an authoritative guidebook. Be consistent. If you indent one paragraph, indent them all. Always include a salutation and a complimentary close. Don't be overly familiar or too stilted in the use of them.
- Legibly sign each letter in dark ink, not pencil. If you have indicated in the letter that you are enclosing an attachment and/or enclosure, be sure you do.

Cover Letter Guidelines

- Limit the letter to a single page. Three to four paragraphs should be adequate. ■ The first paragraph should be an attention-getter and
- clearly indicate the purpose of the correspondence. ■ The last paragraph should be motivating and should offer additional information and your availability for person-
- al interview. ■ The middle paragraph(s) should clearly demonstrate the potential employment match - not by deciding for the employer - rather, by indicating areas of compatibility. Concentrate on your skills and what you can do for the
- Refer to your enclosed resume in any paragraph, but
- refer to it only once. Content of the letter should reflect that you have conducted considerable research on the employer's product or service, organization, location, method of operation, staffing,

Dean for Vet Med sought; candidates narrowed to 5

By Jeffrey J. Bielser News Editor

A nationwide search for a dean of the College of Veterinary Medicine has narrowed the field of candidates to five, with on-campus interviews beginning this week.

There are two candidates each from the University of Illinois-Urbana and Texas A&M University, with the fifth coming from the University of Georgia, said Russell Frey, chairman of the search committee and head of the anatomy and physiology department in veterinary medicine.

The five candidates are: Raymond W. Loan, associate dean of research and graduate studies in the veterinary medicine college at Texas A&M; John A. Shadduck, head of the Department of Patho-Biology in the veterinary medicine college, University of IllinoisUrbana; Michael D. Lorenz, associate dean for academic affairs in the veterinary medicine college at the University of Georgia; William C. All five candidates were invited to the campus for interviews, Frey said. Loan was on campus Sunday through Tuesday. Shadduck arrived Wednesday and will be here through Friday, followed by Lorenz, Sunday through Tuesday; Wagner, Feb. 14-16; and Gage, Feb. 21-23.

Frey said the search committee, which was formed in September, narrowed the field of 37 applicants to the final five on Friday.

He said University officials will be looking for someone who can become a leader of the academic programs for the College of Veterinary Medicine.

"What we're really looking for is someone to lead the college program into the 21st century," he

Provost James Coffman, former dean of the college, agreed with Frey about finding a candidate to lead the academic programs. "I couldn't be more pleased," he said of the final five candidates.

Coffman said all the candidates come from very strong veterinary medicine schools. He said there was "a degree of randomness" that brought four of the five from two

President Jon Wefald said he has "no preconceived notions" about what he will be looking for when he interviews the five candidates.

K-State keeps streak alive, beats ISU in OT

K-State forward Charles Bledsoe is called for a foul against Iowa State night in Ahearn Field House. Undefeated in Big Eight play, K-State University guard Mike Born in the Wildcats' 79-68 victory Wednesday handed 16th-ranked Iowa State its fourth straight loss.

For a men's basketball squad which has recorded a school record - seven 100-point games this season — Tuesday night should have been an eye opener. The Iowa State Cyclones were averaging 94.6 points per game going into their contest with K-State in Ahearn Field House. But a strong defensive effort by both sides kept the score down. Iowa State finished with only 68 points, its lowest offensive output of the season.

"Obviously, defense dictated the first half," K-State coach Lon Kruger said. "Neither team shot well, and I think good defense can be given credit for that."

The Wildcats shot 25-53 from the field for 47 percent, while Iowa State only connected on 29-of-72 attempts for 40 percent. The Cyclones made up the difference on the three-point (23.2 ppg) below their season line, though, shooting 7-of-27 compared to 2-of-6 for K-State.

The free-throw line may have made the difference for K-State. The 'Cats were 27-34 from the line. K-State tried to match up with Iowa State man-to-man, but learned quickly it didn't work. The Wildcats used a 3-2 zone through much of the game with success, holding the Cyclones' leading scorers, Jeff Gray-er (25 ppg) and Lafester Rhodes averages.

Grayer netted only 14 points against the 'Cats. Rhodes scored 18 points.

"We shot well in the 3-2 zone," Grayer said. "Our outside guys shot great from the three-point line and kept us in the game. We knew they were going to pack it in like that."

Iowa State found it tougher to keep K-State's leading scorer, Mitch Richmond, from getting his 23.6

McCoy paces 'Cats with 25 in 79-68 win over Cyclones

Almost all the monkeys have been removed from the backs of the K-State men's basketball team this

The Wildcats have defeated the University of Oklahoma for the first time in the last five tries at Ahearn Field House, they also snapped the 10-game losing streak against the University of Kansas, and against Iowa State University on Wednesday they posted their first overtime win of the season.

About the only hurdle left for the 'Cats, currently ranked 21st, is a top-20 ranking in The Associated

"We'll see (who deserves) to be there in the (NCAA's postseason) tournament," senior center Fred McCoy said.

ISU's center Lafester Rhodes may be thought of as the biggest surprise in the Big Eight Conference this season, but McCoy has to rank right behind him.

McCoy scored a game-high 25 points, including 10 in the extra period, and grabbed 15 rebounds to lead K-State (13-4 overall and 5-0 in the Big Eight) to a 79-68 win over the Cyclones in Ahearn.

"I don't get to (lead the team) too many times in scoring. I might get do this two or three times a year because of the way Mitch (Richmond, who scored 24 points) has been playing," said McCoy.

"Fred played like we need to have him play," K-State coach Lon Kru-ger said. "He hit some big baskets in overtime. We just need to get a bit more consistency out of him."

It never should have gone into overtime, but Cyclone guard Terry Woods went from goat to hero in just 12 seconds. With the game tied, 60-60, 'Cat guard Steve Henson fouled Woods and sent the 5-foot-9 sophomore guard to the line.

Woods missed the front end of the one-and-one, and then turned around and fouled Henson with five seconds left. Henson nailed both charity shots to give K-State a two-point lead.

"We had a chance to win it here and missed a free throw," said ISU Coach Johnny Orr, whose team fell to 16-6 and 2-3. For the game, K-State outshot the Cyclones from the free-throw line 27-4.

Henson said he wasn't sure he made the first free-throw opportunity, as the ball barely trickled over the front of the rim.

"I didn't shoot the first one very well," Henson said. "I looked over at our bench and saw my dad sitting (behind the bench) just shaking his head in disgust."

On the inbounds play, a mixup in defense allowed Woods - who finished with 12 points - to streak the length of the floor for the tying layup which sent the game into overtime.

"We wanted to put two people back on Woods and he ended up shooting a layup. We didn't handle it, but we'll do better next time," Kruger

"We figured they would try and get it into Woods and let him push it down. Buster (Glover) and I were supposed to be on Woods. I was there more just to help out ... more like a centerfielder," Henson said. "Well, it went inbounds to (Jeff) Grayer and I stepped up to stop him and Buster did the same thing and it left Woods

In the first half, K-State struggled to a 22-20 lead as neither team made at least one-third of their shots from the field. Iowa State shot 9-of-31 (21 percent) and the 'Cats made 8-of-26 tries (30.8) percent.

Miller, Bahner lead K-State

Lady Cats end conference skid, beat Cyclones

By Russ Ewy Sports Writer

It had to happen sooner or later. K-State's Lady Cats stopped their Big Eight Conference skid Wednesday night in Ahearn Field House with an impressive win over the Iowa State Cyclones, 83-70.

After a shaky start, the Lady Cats fought off an early five-point Iowa State lead with a hot shooting night and never looked back. K-State ran up an 11-point lead at the half, and led by as much as 23 points in the second half before winning by 13.

"I think offensively we hit a couple of shots early which built our confidence," K-State coach Matilda Mossman said. "I think for the first time all year 'offense' was maybe our word. We just stuck the ball in the hole. We were not taking any different shots than we have all year, but we just hit a couple early and that gave us some confidence."

Confidence may be an understatement. The Lady Cats, who are shooting 30 percent for the season, shot 75 percent in the first half, Mossman said.

Mossman also thought her team's mental toughness played an important role in the win.

"I attribute it (the win) to people thinking that we weren't going to win any games, our kids having a lot of confidence, our kids being competitors and our kids going out there and giving it a gut effort," Mossman said. "Personnally, our kids haven't lost any confidence all the way through this, and in the other games we lost they never lacked any confidence. They still felt they could get the job done."

The Lady Cats, who are 8-12 overall and 1-6 in the conference, are now looking to build on the win one step at a time.

"I would like to say that it is the start of something big, but I thought that a lot of Bahner said. "We gelled together as a team times this season," Mossman said. "I just hope that we can remember what we did and go out and duplicate it again the next time out. We can't think of 'let's go out and win a whole bunch more,' we just have to go out and win one more and one more and one more. I hesitate to say we're over the hump yet, but I think we're in the right direction

Leading K-State with 16 points and grabbing 9 rebounds was freshman forward Diana Miller, who missed only one shot from the

"I felt terrific. I was more intense and was more mentally prepared (for Wednesday's game)," Miller said. "Our teamwork was better. We played more individually before. Last night, we weren't selfish."

"I thought Diana Miller was excellent on both sides of the floor," Mossman said. "(Her play) as a leader (was) more (of a contribution) than anything. She was calling her inbounds plays. She was getting us enough defense. Her concentration was unbelieveable.'

Also gaining Mossman's praise was freshman forward Kristie Bahner, who started at center in place of Stacey Boyle. She defensively shut down the Cyclone's big-gun, Carmen Jaspers, and shot 5-7 from the field and 1-2 from the line.

"I thought Kristie Bahner was superb," Mossman said. "She did exactly what we wanted her to do defensively in the first half and she held Jaspers. I think that was the difference in the first half. We just thought she was getting better and better, and we had some trouble at the post position, so we thought Kristie deserved a chance."

"Everyone played her role more (Wednesday) night and didn't try to do too much," and had a good shooting night."

K-State's next contest will be Saturday against conference-leader the University of Nebraska. The Cornhuskers beat K-State 82-72 earlier in the season, and the Lady Cats are looking forward to the rematch.

"Right now, our kids know that (Nebraska) is a team we played a 10-point game against. Our kids are anxious to play them," Mossman said. "They're leading the league, but we've played as close to them as we have anybody all season long."

Kansas delegates split votes

By The Collegian Staff

The Kansas Congressional delegation split along party lines in voting on the Contra aid package Wednesday. The package pushed by President Reagan received positive votes from Republicans and no votes from Democrats.

Pat Roberts, first district representative, and Jan Meyers, third district representative, all voted in favor of the package. Jim Slattery, second district representative, and Dan Glickman, fourth district representative, voted against the aid.

Bob Whittaker, fifth district representative, could not be reached for

Despite the abundance of mail and phone calls concerning the vote, some legislators said they received no real direction.

"(The mail) generally runs somewhere around fifty-fifty. There are a lot of folks who feel strongly on both sides of the issue," said David Hanzlick, legal assistant for Roberts.

However, for others the mail and telephone responses clearly stated the voters' desires, said Cynthia Rapp, Slattery's press secretary.

"We've received hundreds of phone calls and hundreds of letters. The majority weren't in support of it," she said. "It always surprises peo-

"I see most wreckers going around town without any cars, so I don't think it's just us," Hunter said.

Lois Cowan, administrative assistant at Manhattan Red Cross, said no one had requested help because of problems related to the snow or cold.

While the snow may have been an inconvenience to some, it wasn't enough to cancel classes. K-State's inclement weather policy provides for closing the campus only under severe weather conditions, and the provost's office is involved in the decision-making process for canceling classes.

According to the University's inclement weather policy, President Jon Wefald may declare an emergency for a specific geographic area where classes are held, such as the campus or Fort Riley. The decision is based on travel conditions, the forecast, off-campus classes, safety and other factors related to the weather.

"Today's vote is the end of a chapter," said House Majority Whip Tony Coelho, D-Calif. "The Contra policy is the past. Now we can deploy America's greatest strengths, from aid and trade to diplomacy, to stoke the flames of liberty and secure the future for Central America."

But Republicans bitterly warned that the action would relieve part of the pressure on Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega that has forced him into recent concessions, and that Managua would slip backwards into renewed repression.

"The issue of Nicaragua and Central America will not go away," said House Republican Leader Robert Michel of Illinois.

"If you vote this package down, you'd better be prepared to bear the consequences," Michel said. "And who among you is smart enough to predict the path on which (Nicaraguan President) Daniel Ortega will take you?"

Current aid to the rebels expires Feb. 29, and Democrats pledged to hold another vote before the month is out on an alternative package of purely humanitarian aid to the rebels, and follow that up with a new emphasis on economic development aid for countries in the region which abide by terms of a five-nation peace morally walk away and leave them abandoned in the jungle," said Rep. David Obey, D-Wis.

While the House action killed the proposal, there was still a chance that the Senate could hold a symbolic debate and vote on the measure

The most controversial part of the defeated package was $3.6 million earmarked for weapons and ammunition, which Reagan had said he would withhold until March 31 to see how cease-fire talks go between the rebels and the Managua government.

The presidents of Costa Rica, Nicaragua, El Salvador, Honduras and Guatemala launched a peace effort when they signed an accord last Aug. 7. Those talks are scheduled to resume Feb. 10.

Closing out the debate with the House galleries jammed with spectators, House Speaker Jim Wright, D-Texas, said the United States should let Central America run its own affairs, instead of maintaining heavy-handed interventionist policies.

"Let's join with them, and not against them, in seeking an avenue to peace and let us show by our vote that we are prepared to re-embrace the Good Neighbor policy, and that we're prepared to give peace a chance," Wright said.

The bulk of the aid package was intended to buy "non-lethal" supplies to keep the rebels alive as a military force inside Nicaragua. That included food and uniforms as well as communications gear and leased aircraft to deliver the material.

There have been published reports that the administration had been weighing a plan to solicit funds from foreign governments for the Contras in the event that Congress defeated Reagan's request. But Reagan's national security adviser Lt. Gen. Colin Powell said last Sunday, "We are not looking for other sources of County to ask residents to recycle products Program's goal 'to get people interested'

By Robert Short Collegian Reporter

Manhattan residents will soon be asked to take a closer look at their garbage as part of a county-wide effort to recycle much of the glass and aluminum that is being hauled to the Riley County Landfill.

Sigmund Meier, chairman of the Solid Waste Management Committee's Subcommittee on Recycling, said the main objective of the program is to get people interested in what is recyclable and then tell them where they can take the items. "We are interested in anything that is recyclable or reusable," he said. The Kansas Department of Health and Environment ordered the closing of the the Landfill last July because it was leaking cancer-causing chemicals into the area water table. According to the order, the landfill must closed by July 1, 1990. Meier said up to 25 percent of the garbage being taken to the landfill can be recycled. The committee is working to publicize facts about the recycling process and to make people more aware of its availability, said Monty Wedel, Riley County planner.

Last September, the 24-member Riley County Solid Waste Management Committee formed the recycling subcommittee to deal directly with informing the public about recyclable products, Wedel said.

"Our main goal is to get 100 percent participation in recycling from Riley, Pottawatomie and Geary counties," Meier said.

Since that time the Subcommittee on Recycling has printed more than 5,000 brochures explaining the program and listing recycling outlets, Meier said. The committee is currently working on a Flint Hills Recycling Directory, which will list area businesses accepting recyclable products, he said.

Meier said the list includes not only places where cans and bottles can be taken, but also places that accept books, car parts and unused chemicals.

Newspaper inserts and brochure distribution throughout area schools have been discussed as possible ways of advertising the program to the public. Meier said he plans to print another 5,000 brochures for area distribution.

curb-side retrieval process, very similar to a refuse service," he said. Meier has invited 12 garbage haulers to the next meeting of the subcommittee. Although no agreement has been made for rate reduction incentives, Meier said he is confident that they will offer some good ideas.

Riley County Engineer Dan Harden said recycling is one of three options the county has for dealing with refuse control when the landfill closes. Other options, such as building a new landfill or an incinerator, "Our ultimate goal would be a are also being considered by the

Bennett: Nation's colleges faltering

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Higher education is losing credibility because of "faculty trashing of Plato and Shakespeare" in trendy, soft-headed courses that are displacing the classics, Secretary of Education William J. Bennett charged Thursday.

In a speech that drew sparks from college presidents, Bennett warned that the nation's campuses are "at a crossroads (and) may soon face a day of reckoning.

"The American people are beginning to wonder whether the emperor higher education - has any clothes," the former philosophy professor told 400 presidents and deans at the National Association of Independent Colleges and Universities.

He said newspapers are "chockfull of truly astonishing accounts of curricular debasement at our colleges and universities," including Stanford University's debate over whether to alter a Western civilizaton requirement.

Bennett also cited a Wall Street Journal article that quoted an assistant English professor at Duke University as saying students are no longer taught "there is such a thing as literary excellence."

"Is this what parer asked to pay $18,000 a year for?" Bennett asked.

He said many institutions do "a more sense than nonsense." good job of discharging the educational responsibilities they bear," but "the serious voices are being drowned out by the trendy lightweights in our midst."

Bennett also called some colleges "filthy rich" and stood by his assertion that federal student aid has encouraged the tuition price spiral.

He said a university president once defended rising prices on grounds that "new knowledge costs more than old knowledge. Is the faculty trashing of Plato and Shakespeare the kind of new knowledge to which he was referring?"

"George Orwell once referred to nonsense so bad only an intellectual could believe it. Welcome to some of our universities," said Bennett.

George A. Drake, president of Grinnell College in Iowa, told Bennett, "I suppose every one of us in this room has faculty members that we think speak nonsense."

"It wouldn't be a college or a university unless we provided an arena where nonsense could be spoken ... debated and, conceivably, refuted," said Drake. If the college atmosphere is right, "students will stand up in class and say it's nonsense." Bennett replied, to groans, "I certainly think the colleges and universities should make room for nonsense. But that's not their problem at the present time, making room for it. I do think ... there should be

Defeat of Reagan's plan prompts reactions Democrats discuss new aid package

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Congressional Democrats who dealt a severe blow to President Reagan's Central America policy set out Thursday to produce an alternative that will sustain the Nicaraguan Contra rebels while stimulating regional peace efforts.

"We will make sure those we lured into this battle are not left high and dry," said House Speaker Jim Wright, D-Texas. He promised to bring a new package of purely humanitarian aid for the Contras up for action within three weeks.

The House, with only a dozen Republicans in the majority, voted 219-211 Wednesday night to kill Reagan's request for $36.2 million in new aid for the rebels fighting Nicaragua's leftist Sandinista government.

The package included arms, radios and other logistical military support as well as food, clothing and medicine. Weapons and ammunition accounted for only $3.6 million of the total but were at the root of the

Despite the death of the president's package, the Senate went through the motions of a debate Thursday that gave senators an opportunity to speak and vote on the issue. The lawmakers voted 51 to 48 in support of the plan, but the vote was purely symbolic and had no binding effect. Vice President George Bush, the Senate's presiding officer, and Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., interrupted presidential campaign swings in Iowa to attend the session, which Contra backers apparently believed could serve as a forum for their views.

"After last night's vote in the House, Contra aid is dead in Congress, and the Senate should not waste its time trying to bring Contra aid back from the grave," Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., said in arguing against holding the debate.

Ortega praises Congress

By The Associated Press

Daniel Ortega said Thursday the rejection of further aid for the Contra rebels by the U.S. Congress will strengthen peace efforts, "but it does not make the war disappear."

"President Reagan is meeting with the National Security Council, studying ways to continue the war against Nicaragua," Ortega said in a news conference. His statement came a day after Congress turned down the paign against the Sandinistas since late 1981, Reagan administration's request for $36.2 million for the anti-Sandinista rebels. "If the president of the United States ...

tells the North American people and the international community that he has decided to cut MANAGUA, Nicaragua - President off all kind of military aid and financing to the mercenary forces and begin a direct dialogue with the government of Nicaragua on security matters and direct the Contras to cease fire. Then, yes, we would be able to say we are on the road to peace," he said.

> The leftist Sandinista government generally refers to the U.S.-funded and -trained Contras, who have been waging a guerrilla camas "mercenaries."

New parking permits cause confusion

Staff illustration/Steve Wolgast

Color, design differences too 'subtle' to distinguish

By Nancy Chartrand Staff Writer

Some people may think they're seeing double because of confusion over student and faculty/staff parking permits.

The confusion has arisen because the permits are similar - real similar.

This semester, both the student and faculty/staff permits are the same color - white with purple lettering and Willie the Wildcat logo.

In the past, the permits have been different colors in order to distinguish students from members of the faculty and staff.

The only difference between the two permits this semester is that on the student permit the year "'88" and the word "Student" are written in black. On the faculty/staff permits, these items are purple. The permits were designed by Teresa St. Jean, an employee of the K-State police department.

The original design called for the word "Faculty" on the permit to be written in red, St. Jean said. However, the printers altered this.

"We designed subtle differences on them so people could tell them apart. (But) we have had people call and complain because they don't recognize the differences." -Charles Beckom

One reason the same color was chosen for both permits was that they are rotated periodically and there is a limit to the colors that can be used.

"We designed subtle differences on them so people could tell them apart," said Charles Beckom, K-

State Police chief. "(But) we have had people call and lacked a K-State logo.

complain because they don't recognize the differences," he said.

Faculty and staff members have been complaining that students are parking in their lots simply because they have not looked closely enough at the permits.

One instance of such confusion, Beckom said, occurred when the son of one of the faculty or staff members was seen getting out of a car parked in the faculty/staff lot.

Because he was young, some faculty/staff members thought he was a student parking in the wrong lot, and they called the police station to complain, Beckom said.

Beckom said another reason why the purple and white design was chosen is because this has been a big recruiting year for K-State.

"We wanted something recognizable," Beckom said.

In the past, Beckom said the permits had no real value because they

Father chains son for 6 years

HARARE, Zimbabwe - A man thought to be insane after he ran amok with an ax was shackled in a hut by his father for six years, a newspaper reported Thursday.

Peter Chirimimba, 47, was chained by an ox harness around his neck and arms by his 70-year-old father, Munetsi, in the Rushinga District in northeastern Zimbabwe, The Herald reported. The younger Chirimimba was shackled in the hut in 1982. He was provided with food in the hut, but had not had a bath until Wednesday, when police took him to a hospital, the newspaper said. His father told The Herald his son was treated by a traditional healer, commonly known in the West as a witch doctor, after the violent outbursts, but afterward he continued to assault members of the family.

"I decided to chain him up and lock him in the hut," said the elder Chirimimba.

Police said they were investigating the case, but viewed it with "understanding."

Poet finally receives check

ALSTEAD, N.H. - Edith Newlin Chase jotted down a children's poem while doing housework one day in the late 1930s, and on Thursday she was handed a check for $12,000 for the verse.

"I can probably use it," said Chase, 82.

The poem, "New Baby Calf," was published in a children's poetry collection in 1949. When executives of Scholastic TAB publishing company reprinted the poem in a children's volume in 1984, they could not find Chase and put her royalties into

A recent letter from one of Chase's relatives provided clues that helped locate her, and Amy Rothenberg, spokeswoman for the publisher, said the check was given to her at home.

Chase said she was inspired to write the poem after visiting a school in Cambridge, Mass.

"It came to me clearly and rapidly as I worked on housekeeping, and if I remember it right it required no revision," she said. Chase began writing poems while doing chores on her family's farm in Indiana. She used to pen verses on the tags attached to animal feed sacks. Her verses have been published in two poetry collections and she also has written music lyrics.

Chairman: Dole's acts proper WASHINGTON - A congressional committee chairman said Thursday he saw nothing improper with Republican presidential candidate Bob Dole personally calling a federal administrator to help a former aide secure a government contract.

There's no evidence that I've been able to come up with that indicates any questionable activity on Senator Dole's part personally," said Rep. John J. LaFalce, D-N.Y., chairman of the House Small Business Committee, which has been investigating the awarding of a $26 million no-bid contract to a former Dole aide.

LaFalce's comments came a day after the committee staff released a memo outlining a November 1983 call by Dole to the head of the Small Business Administration seeking help for John Palmer, a black Kansas businessman who in 1986 obtained the $26 million job through the SBA's minority set-aside program.

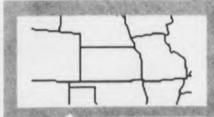

"Every member of Congress makes phone calls every single day to federal agencies on behalf of constituents, arranging meetings," LaFalce said in an interview. "I don't see anything questionable about that."

Man still can't face world

HEMPSTEAD, N.Y. - A man who has lost 450 pounds from his 1,250-pound frame since September found himself unable Thursday to stick to a deadline and set foot outside the house that has been his entire world for 17 years.

"This is something I wanted to do, but the mental block in my head was so great I couldn't do it. I broke into tears," said Walter Hudson.

"Earlier today, I thought I would walk out. But when the moment comes, you just can't do it. ... My legs couldn't carry me."

Lack of paperwork causes fine

GARDEN CITY — The U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service has fined a company $3,200 for hiring an illegal alien at Garden City, and failing to maintain required paperwork.

Ron Sanders, head of the district INS office in Kansas City, Mo., said Thursday the fine against Packers Sanitation Services Inc. was the first in Kansas under the Immigration Reform and Control Act that took effect in November 1986.

Nationally, he said, there have been 26 fines, including one in Missouri last month.

Packers Sanitation, based in Mount Pleasant, Iowa, provides cleanup service under contract with meat packing plants.

Sanders said that in the Garden City case, the company was cited for four alleged violations, including hiring an illegal alien and failing to file required forms on him and two other

Sanders said INS officials have found that most employers are complying with the new law, and it appears that entry of illegal aliens into the United States appears to be down about 30 percent.

Mecham continues to deny allega

By The Associated Press

PHOENIX, Ariz. - Gov. Evan Mecham denied Thursday that he had tried to hide a $350,000 campaign loan, during sometimes-heated testimony before a House panel considering whether to impeach him.

The House could decide as early as today whether to impeach Mecham, said select committee Chairman Jim Skelly, who added he believes there are enough votes for impeachment "assuming no dramatic turnabouts."

Mecham press secretary Ken Smith and legislative liaison J. Randall Thomas said Wednesday it was their "gut instincts" that Mecham will be impeached.

Mecham also faces a recall election May 17 and a March 9 criminal Evan Mecham in an election and $350,000 loan.

The first-term Republican governor's temper flared when he accused a committee member of insulting him by including the names of crime bosses in a hypothetical question.

The inference in using notorious criminals in talking to me is totally objectionable. ... That's an insult to the governor of Arizona," Mecham said to committee member John House Speaker Joe Lane said he thought House members were ready to vote on impeachment right away. Majority Leader Jim Ratliff, also a Republican, added, "A lot of people realize they're not going to defeat trial on charges of concealing the they're going to try to get him out any way they can."

A House special counsel has accused Mecham of concealing the $350,000 campaign loan, misusing $80,000 from the governor's protocol fund by borrowing it for his auto dealership, and trying to thwart an investigation of an alleged death threat by a state official.

Mecham testified Thursday that even though the loan was not itemized on his personal and campaign financial disclosure forms, "It was always on file for anyone to look at."

"It was listed in an aggregate form but there was nothing done to hide it," said the governor, who began drawing critics shortly after he took office just over a year ago when he canceled a Martin Luther King holiday created by his predecessor.

The loan from Tempe developer Barry Wolfson was included in a $465,000 lump sum listed as a contribution from Mecham on the governor's campaign financial disclosure

Asked about a receipt written in November 1986 that showed a paign from Mecham, the governor acknowledged he made no such contribution. Special counsel William French has contended the receipt was a fake document intended to disguise the Wolfson loan.

Law curbs repeat drunken drivers

Illinois drunken-driving laws are tough on offenders and seem to keep getting tougher each year. This year, the state enacted a new law that will help keep repeat dangerous motorists off the roads. The penalties, which went into effect Jan. 1, are called "enhancement" penalties. They increase the severity of the penalty for drivers who repeatedly threaten lives on Illinois

Those strictly selfish, intoxicated motorists will know that if they repeat their drunkendriving escapades, the law requires they lose driving privileges for three years in addition to risking the same penalties for first-time offenders. The more state lawmakers and judges try to clear drunks from the highways, the safer they will be.

Where's the laughter?

Our definition of humor is twisted

After reading my column last week, I was spotted behaving like a Mexican jumping bean by several important (and not so important) personalities on campus. On being inquired about my justification for such socially unacceptable behavior, I ratiocinated that the editing away of my humorous lines had affected some of my brain cells. And I distinctly remember learning in my Biology class that the state of one's brain cells is germane to the proper functioning of that person.

During the process of apparently harmless editing, an article with a significant touch of humor was mercilessly transformed into one with a serious overtone. The fault lies partly with me and partly with the present day world's attitude towards humor.

It was entirely my fault that I submitted a column longer than the maximum allowed length. Thus it was perfectly legitimate for one to either delete or condense those portions of the article which were irrelevant to the principal issue. The humorous lines (at least I thought they would make the reader chuckle) turned out to be the star-crossed scapegoats.

This act, as I am trying to point out, was perfectly justified considering the modern attitude toward humor. The world has almost forgotten how to laugh or smile at subtle humor. Most people nowadays tend to assume a serious overview of everything under the sun.

Under no cirumstances do I intend to ordain that looking at matters seriously is incorrect or unimportant. In fact, we do need serious opinions. Yes, we need serious critics. Yes, we need serious research. We also need serious relationships. We need a serious government, too.

But, this required seriousness in no way undermines the importance of humor. Humor

Commentary

is very significant to our lives. On the planet earth, there is very little sincerity. And humor is an art to drown the outcry of our hearts.

At this point, many readers would claim that they do laugh. OK, so you laugh - but what does it take to make you laugh? Is it not the crude gross jokes, the likes of which were recently showered upon UPC audiences by the film "Beverly Hills Cop II?" Does our humor have to contain four-letter words? Why cannot we chuckle at "lily-livered poltroons" and "a hideous hunk of an overnutrited bufallo," terms used by P.G. Wodehouse, a great humorist of our century.

Subtle humor no longer makes popular reading. The modern public does not care for light reading anymore. Humorists are ridiculed (this is one step short of shooting them down). I would not be surprised if I was termed a burbling faun, because of my light writing style. Though this would definitely diminish my morale and I would not partake of my breakfast for two consecutive days. The next thing you know, you may be reading a serious column of mine on a topic like women in world religions.

In a straight world, to create humor, one has to perceive the world out of focus. But today's world is already out of focus and it is difficult to see things straight. Humor usually involves making fun of a certain crosssection of society. But laughing at someone else's expense is generally considered dangerous, except if it happens to be political

Amid all this, old Johnny Carson is doing an excellent job - my best hat off to him. I cannot make the same statement about other television gags. Six months back when I switched on the Idiot Box (unlike Christopher Kippes, I whole-heartedly despise this piece of equipment), it came up with a really lousy one:

"She: Will you marry me surely?

"He: Stop calling me Shirley." This kind of stuff makes me crave for the old-timers like P.G. Wodehouse, Groucho Marx, Max Sculman, Mark Twain, Oscar Wilde and others. In fact, I would rate these on my Top Five list.

Also, I am not exactly sure what grudge anyone could possibly have against innocent round parentheses. When I read my columns, I find that most of my parentheses are missing. In fact I tend to write most of my humor within parentheses (no pun intended). The very fact that it is inside parentheses makes it all the more humorous. I do this as they are my parenthetical thoughts outside the primary domain of my topic.

Like parentheses, footnotes have been another technique of catching the reader's attention. Will Cuppy wrote all his humorous lines in meticulous footnotes. Another humorist, Garrison Keillor, once had a fivepage footnote to a teeny-weeny paragraph but that is stretching things too far.

Personally, I intend to keep up the good work of making people smile. The world may be ignorant about it, but it does need humor.

Column remark

This is in response to Chris Kippes' column of Jan. 26. Look, kiddo. You have a legitimate gripe

1. You left your dirty laundry back at K-State. 2. You contributed money or food to the supply in the refrigerator. 3. The dishes utilized by you were also washed by you.

4. You can substantiate that shrouding your mind in a television-generated fog outweighs your mother's need for sleep. You'd have to follow your mom around for a day to document this, but you won't. You could never summon the energy needed by the average working mom to get through her 18-hour day.

You probably think of your column as a satiric gem. Somehow, I missed that. What is very apparent is the general attitude of much of "the present generation." Many of you have the "gimme" attitude and operate on a level of "what's in it for me."

Actually, your weekend destination includes not only your house but also the family members living in the house. They are sharers of your familial gene pool who have loved, nurtured and tolerated you for 20 or so years and, in spite of your selfishness, still love you. Think about it.

Cartoon spellings

Regarding Richard Broadfoot's editorial-page cartoon on Jan. 27.

I have one comment. It is unfortunate that Broadfoot cannot use his trusty word processor to check the spelling of words in his cartoon captions. If he could, perhaps he would have been able to correctly spell those notoriously tricky words like "certain" and "university." His creative spellings ("certan" and "unversity") qualify his cartoon as one of the better arguments for the proposed policy of qualified admissions, since Broadfoot is already a student here. Perhaps his antipathy toward the policy stems from the knowledge that he might not have qualified for admission if the policy were in effect when he applied. Certainly, if a spelling test were applied, he would be on the edge.

Student Senate on Thursday heard a presentation from Charlie Thomas, Fred Bramlage Coliseum director, on the capabilities of the new coliseum.

Thomas said construction of the coliseum is 75 percent complete.

The coliseum will have four different entrances and will seat 13,500 fans for basketball games and 14,000 for concerts, he said. Of the 13,500 seats, 2,900 chairback seats on the west side will be reserved for those who have donated to the coliseum's construction. Students will be seated on the east side, beginning at the floor and continuing 37 rows to the top row of the facility.

Thomas said a change will be

In other action, Senate debated researching the effectiveness of a plan to recruit high school seniors with interests in student government through a letter-writing campaign.

The letters would be sent to high school seniors who have shown interests in student government and leadership on American College Testing questionnaires.

Senate voted earlier this semester to send the letters; however, a research plan to show the effectiveness of the letter-writing campaign is scheduled to be considmade in the method of ticket sales ered by Senate at a later meeting.

Coliseum official Reactions to children studied

By Vince Huser Collegian Reporter

The reaction people have to children shows whether or not they like children, according to a K-State

The study was conducted by Mark Barnett, professor of psychology, and a seven-member student research team. Using the Barnett Liking of Children Scale, the team is trying to find out where the feeling of like or dislike originates, Barnett

The test has 14 statements. People indicate on a seven-point scale the extent to which they agree or disagree with the statements. Two of the statements were "watching little children play gives me pleasure" and "I enjoy holding little children."

The 14 responses are then added together for a total score of liking of

"An observation I made (before the test) was that some people will come right out and say 'I like children a lot' while other people say 'I just don't like or want to have kids," Barnett said.

The team spent last spring validating the test and checking to see if variables they thought would be associated with the liking of children actually were.

Before the the final test, two preliminary studies were completed.

The first questioned 93 undergraduates, 46 males and 47 females. They were given the scale test, a sex role identification test that checked for masculine and feminine traits, and a 38-question test that dealt with people's attitudes concerning children.

The second study questioned 46 undergraduates and had them return for a second time to check for testretest reliability.

"We wanted to make sure someone who said they liked children today would say that they liked children a week from today or two weeks from today," Barnett said.

The second group also filled out a social desirability test. This test ensured that people were not just giving answers they considered to be socially acceptable.

The results of the preliminary tests were encouraging, Barnett said.

"The test-retest reliability scores were found to be very high and that's important," he said.

Many students don't realize that although Lafene Student Health Center's in-patient hospital is closed, the clinic remains open on a 24-hour basis.

Dr. Robert Tout, director of Lafene Student Health Center, said many students were going to emergency rooms at local hospitals because they believed that Lafene had closed its emergency service.

Often these students were sent back to the student health center, or the local hospital treated the students at a higher expense. Lafene closed its in-patient services after fall 1987.

Tout spoke Thursday in the Union courtyard as part of the Let's Talk About It series sponsored by Union Program Council's Issues and Ideas Committee.

Tout said that 59,000 to 60,000 visits are made to Lafene each year. However, records do not show how

"I'm concerned there's a lot of students out there not utilizing the services, not knowing what's available and the quality of care that is available to them," he said.

Lafene's nine doctors are in student health because they want to treat students, Tout said. Most of them have been in private practice and have chosen to devote their medical careers to treating students.

Lafene's pharmacy fills about many different students that 37,000 prescriptions each year for Prescription prices are marked up about 35 to 40 percent at Lafene, but local pharmacies have a mark up of about 70 to 80 percent, Tout said.

Many students believe paying $60 a semester for student health fees is too high when they don't use the services, he said.

However, the cost of one trip to a local emergency room with a

He believes students should at least use Lafene's services to have a yearly physical, he said.

Thursday night. Richard Rhodes, author of "The Making of the Atomic Bomb," will speak on "The Arms Race, the Background of Hope" Tuesday as part of the Lou Douglas Lecture Series.

Ken Klabunde, professor of history and one of four panel members, said the development of the atomic bomb was inevitable.

"Science is not always discovering things that are useful, but discovering them because they are discoverable," Klabunde said.

As a result, nuclear weapons have proliferated worldwide, said John Daly, professor of history.

The United Kingdom, France, China, Israel and Pakistan all have nuclear weapons, and 57 countries utilize nuclear power, Daly said.

Dudley Williams, professor of physics, helped build the atomic bomb that was used in the first test of a nuclear weapon. He was responsible for measuring the amount of uranium-235 that was shipped in, and he also tested the heat radiation from the explosion. After the successful testing of the nuclear bomb, Williams said it was hard to believe that something the size of a croquet ball could cause such a reaction.

DJs host African program

By Greg Vogel Collegian Reporter

Every Saturday morning, on the airwaves of KSDB-92 FM, pop, jazz and other forms of modern music can be heard.

Not so unusual, but the difference is the form the music takes -

"We play African jazz, pop, reggae, tribal and Afro-Cuban music," said Robert Guei, graduate student in plant breeding and genetics and a native of Ivory Coast, a country on the western coast of Africa.

The show lets people discover and see what African music is, he said. "The goal of the show is to promote Africa," Guei said.

The program also lets Americans and international students know about Africa, he said.

Music is not the only subject matter dealt with on the program. Guests are regularly on the show to talk about Africa.

These guests are usually African students, telling about their native countries, Guei said.

"We talk in general about where to go in Africa, about African problems and about different countries, because people in America don't know much about Africa," he said.

When guests are on the program, listeners can call in and ask questions relating to Africa. A past guest on the program was the Director of the International Student Center, Donna Davis. Calls dealing with immigration across the nation have been guests on Rock 'n' roll: Here to stay?

By Jackie Brazzle Staff Writer

Music-lovers may have thought the age of the "golden oldie" had disappeared, but Manhattan radio listeners can still hear plenty of "oldies but goodies."

Most program directors at area radio stations play classic rock, but they differ in the amount they play. They also have different opinions on whether classic rock music is just a trend or if it's really here to stay.

KSKT-FM came on the air in March of 1986 with an easy-listening format, then changed to a classic rock format in November of 1986, said Tyler Jeffries, program director for KSKT.

The change has been very successful, he said.

"We found the niche for this area," Jeffries said. "I think this area was starving for this kind of format. It is paying off really well."

Jeffries believes there is a definite trend toward classic rock music. This type of music is becoming more popular because more and more commercials and movies are using the older rock 'n' roll, he said. "Classic rock is a mainstay for anything people do now. Young people are starting to realize just how good this music is," Jeffries said. KSKT receives 15 to 20 calls a day requesting the "oldies" and complimenting the station, he said. Jeffries said KSKT does several special programs designed solely for classic rock music. KSKT's "12 O'Clock Rock" program features songs of a specific year from noon to 1, with each show featuring a diffe-KSKT also does a show called "Rock 'n' Roll Never Forgets Time Capsule" twice a day, Monday through Friday. For five or 10 minutes, a little piece of rock history is discussed. KSKT also does an all-request show called "Rock 'Till You Drop" on Saturday nights from 9 to midnight.

The show is tailored for those people who like to party, Jeffries said. "This show is just for those people who are partying at that time," he

KMAJ-FM does not have a classic rock format, but it does play songs that fall into that category, said Dave Waters, program director. Classic rock is a segment of the station's adult contemporary format, Waters said classic rock has a stronger showing in larger markets than in smaller markets like Topeka.

KMAJ doesn't have a lot of competition from stations that play only classic rock, he said.

"We have no competition from that type of stations," Waters said. "A lot of rock stations in the larger markets are having some success with it, but not here in a smaller market." Despite Waters' pessimism, KMAJ does two classic rock programs. "Lunch at the Oldies" is a request show during the noon hour, Monday through Friday.

Listeners can call in and request songs from the 50s, 60s, 70s and early 80s. KMAJ began "Lunch at the Oldies" when the station first went on the air in 1980.

KMAJ also features "Supergold," an oldies request show that is broadcast from Hollywood. Every Saturday and Sunday, from six to midnight, the "Supergold" program is aired. Songs from the '50s, '60s and '70s are played.

KMAJ is the No. 1 one station in Topeka and, because it features a variety of music, it is becoming even more popular, Waters said.

"With the combination of everything together, things are going very well," he said. "We are now the No. 1 station in the surrounding area as WIBW-FM also does not have a classic rock format.

Dave Alexander, program director, said they have started to play classic rock songs because of competition.

"Because of the competitive situation in this area, we do play some classic rock," he said.

Alexander believes classic rock has been a trend for about two years. One main reason for the trend is that today's listeners are disenchanted with popular music, Alexan-

"People are disenchanted with today's music. Classic rock has a different feel. People grew up with this type of music," he said.

Despite the trend, he expects it to maintain a level about where it is ■ See ROCK, Page 12

KKSU: 'Best kept secret'

By Angela Hale

Collegian Reporter

"K-State's best-kept secret" is how the people at KKSU-AM radio station describe their organization. Located in the basement of McCain Auditorium, it is a 5,000-watt public radio station at 580 AM. It is owned and operated by the Cooperative Extension Service.

Eric Atkinson, KKSU agricultural director, said the programming is heard all over the state and also in parts of Missouri, Nebraska, Oklahoma and Iowa regularly.

Because of its unique operating agreement with WIBW-AM, KKSU is only on the air from 12:30 to 5:30 p.m. every weekday. Most of the KKSU programming is informational and educational shows, yet it also airs classical music.

"We're a kind of dual purpose," Atkinson said. "We're a public radio station and also a function of the Cooperative Extension Service.

Though KKSU was originally agriculturally based, it is now taking on several other areas including human ecology, current events and community development, Atkinson said.

The types of programs aired on KKSU range from "Agriculture Today," Atkinson's show dealing with such subjects as farming developments and marketing, to a program titled "Voices of Kansas," which features interviews of inter-

KKSU also has two 30-minute news segments during its air time. The station will devote five or six minutes to a story that deserves it, said Ralph Titus, assistant manaesting Kansans.

ger at KKSU. 'We believe our audience wants stories with some meat on them," he said.

KKSU has a free service in which it provides any commercial station with condensed versions of its informational programs. The K-State Radio Network mails the shows out to AM or FM stations as often three times a week.

There are now about 25 radio stations in the Midwest carrying KKSU programs, Titus said.

Though KKSU's programming isn't aimed solely at the University, it does "provide information about the campus," Titus said. The station broadcasts all-University convocations, Landon Lectures and other University conferences. KKSU also has a couple of interns on staff when the money is available, Titus said.

Debbie Lyons, senior in agricultural journalism and KKSU intern, said she has learned a lot about different areas of farming. She's involved in making some of the network tapes, interviews and features for the "Agriculture Today" program.

"It's exactly what I want to do," Lyons said.

KKSU is now in its 64th year at K-State. This station was one of the first educational stations in Kansas and the country.

"They've done a lot of pioneering," Titus said.

It all began when a doctor in Milford started the station KFKB - Kansas First, Kansas Best - for commercial purposes. Three men from K-State got together and saw the advantage of having a statewide radio broadcast for the University.

These three men then asked the doctor if they could use his station for college broadcasts by sending programs over the phone, Titus

Student experiences day as student body president

By Jeff Schrag Collegian Reporter

Wearing blue jeans and a striped shirt, he sat calmly, almost quietly, through the briefing.

He was soaking up information. He is Don Grier, senior in mathematics and K-State student body president - for a day.

The election of the student body president for a day was conducted differently than for the year-long job.

Campaigning was not necessary. Filling out an expense voucher was not necessary. Being grilled on moral standards was not necessary.

Any K-State student can nominate himself or herself during registration. The aspiring chief executive need only write a name and telephone number on a piece of paper, and drop it in Student Governing Association's official "old garbage can," said Charlene Nichols, junior cook," Grier said.

in journalism and mass communications and Student Senate Communications committee chairwoman.

Once the garbage can was filled, nominations were closed. The voting was done by Ryan Routson, 6-year-old son of Sally Routson, coordinator of student activities. He reached his hand into the garbage can, and as democratically as possible, pulled out a piece of paper, and elected Don Grier as student body president for a day.

On Jan. 27, Nichols telephoned Grier's fraternity house, Delta Sigma Phi, and asked the members to notify Grier of his selection when he returned from class. The members of his house withheld the information from him - while saluting him, calling him sir and congratulating him.

'It took me an hour to figure out what they were talking about. I finally got (the information) out of the

He nominated himself during registration.

"I saw the box, and it was just one of those things where you put your name in and never expect anything to come out of it. Personally, I would rather win (a drawing) that gives out a Porsche," Grier said.

His term of office began at 3 p.m. Wednesday when he was briefed by Student Body President Troy Lubbers, junior in marketing, on the structure and duties of the SGA executive branch.

"Troy told me I was going to be more like student body president for an evening," Grier said.

During the rest of his term in office, Grier attended a Student Senate meeting and a cabinet meeting with Lubbers. But because Thursday was an "off" day, he got to enjoy few of the perks of the office, such as invitations to dinners and important meetings.

Cornhuskers next up to try to derail 'Cats

By Tom Morris Sports Writer

Eric Pearson and his friends have some of the best seats in the house when the Wildcats play basketball at home. The Manhattan High School students sit in the southwest corner of Ahearn Field House just seven feet away from the gym floor.

Their primary task during the game is to keep track of the score on a manually operated scoreboard. Their pay for 40 minutes of work is free admission to the games.

Wait a minute.

With the massive scoreboard hanging over center court and the two scoreboards on the east and west walls, why is it necessary for these students to keep track of the score?

"When the games are videotaped, we have to keep track of the score so it will show up on the tape," Pearson said. "It also helps the players out during the game so they don't have to look up at the scoreboard over their heads.'

Pearson and crew could end up with tired arms if Saturday's K-State-University of Nebraska game in Ahearn turns out like the game played last season in Manhattan did.

In the Wildcats' Jan. 10, 1987, 114-82 win, they set records for: most points scored in a game; most points scored in a Big Eight Conference game; most points in one half of a conference game (61); highest 3-point field goal percentage (76.5); and highest 3-point field goal shooting percentage in one half (87.5).

K-State coach Lon Kruger said he doesn't expect that to happen in Saturday's matchup scheduled for 1:10 p.m.

"That was an unusual situation last year. Everything kind of clicked and we hit all our shots. It was not a common half," Kruger said.

K-State is a surprise leader in the Big Eight at 5-0 and 13-4 overall, but Nebraska has climbed into third in the conference race at 3-2 and 12-10 — even after the Cornhuskers' 72-56 loss Thursday at Lincoln, Neb., to Oklahoma State.

"They are playing really well. They are playing with a great deal of confidence and with a great deal of intensity," Kruger said. "They believe in themselves, which is very important."

Nebraska has victories this season against the University of Kansas and the University of Missouri. In both games, the Huskers trailed by more than 10 points late in the second half - but NU coach Danny Nee said K-State is the team to beat in Big Eight play.

"I think the reason K-State is in the driver's seat is that they won three big road games (at KU, the University of Colorado and OSU),"

Nee said he is impressed with the Wildcats' discipline on the court.

"They're not beating themselves. They're playing their roles, and Mitch Richmond is playing extremely well," he said.

Nebraska, which placed third in the NIT postseason tournament last season, is led by center Richard King. The 7-foot-2 freshman averages 23.4 points per game. Guard Eric Johnson, a transfer from Baylor University, is the only other starter scoring in double figures with an average of 10.6 ppg.

On defense, Kruger said Nebraska employs a variety of zones and man-to-mans. "They try to throw you off guard," Kruger

Lady Cats to play league leaders

By Mike Rouse

After ending their eight-game losing streak with an impressive victory over Iowa State Wednesday night, K-State's Lady Cats will try to continue their newly-found winning ways Saturday against the Nebraska Cornhuskers.

The game will be in Ahearn Field House and gets underway at 3 p.m. Wednesday's victory was the first for the Lady Cats in the Big Eight Conference, who stand at 8-12 overall and 1-6 in the Big Eight. The win helped the Cats mentally, said Coach Matilda Mossman.

Today and Saturday, the men's and women's track teams will take part in the Jayhawk Invitational, a meet K-State coach John Capriotti is using as a gauge.

"There'll be 16 teams there and it's non-scoring," he said. "We're just going to use it to see how far along we are this season and what kind of shape we are in. We're looking forward to the meet to see if we're improving."

"We are trying to get healthy and trying to get better each week. So far, it (progress) is going in the right direction."

-John Capriotti

Among the schools scheduled to compete are Kansas, Wichita State, Oklahoma State, Central Missouri State and Southwest Missouri State.

Capriotti said several of K-State's top athletes will be staying home due either to previous commitments or injuries.

"Ron Stahl will be staying and so will Kenny (Harrison), and John Williams has the NFL tryout camp," he said. "And Felicia (Carpenter) is coming off a major surgery last December and is not in good enough shape to compete this weekend."

Staff/Neal Hinkle Sheila Hudson, world record holder in the triple jump, practices with the track team Thursday to prepare for the Jayhawk Invitational.

Back in action for K-State, however, will be four-time All-American Jacque Struckhoff in the mile run. High jumper Brad Speer returns to action after being out with the flu. K-State's women's tennis team returns to the court Saturday when it entertains three other schools in the Pepsi Doubles Invitational.

Action begins at 2 p.m. at the Cottonwood Racquet Club. Semifinal action gets underway Sunday at 8 a.m., with the finals to follow that morning at 10:30 a.m.

Besides K-State, other schools participating include Creighton, Missouri and Wichita State, but the way the tournament is set up, they may not be the only competition.

"It's an open draw (tournament), so at some point in the tournament one of our teams could play another one of our teams if they advance far enough," K-State coach Steve Bietau said. "In fact, that happened last year.

We had two of our teams in the finals.

'We feel like doubles are very important," he said. "It's important for us, because many times in a dual match, we'll be at 4-2 or 3-3 after the singles, and the doubles are the deciding factor. (The meet is) an opportunity for us to concentrate exclusively on doubles, which we don't get to do very often."

Three K-State entries will take part in the invitational which features a draw of 16 doubles teams. The number one team for K-State and the number one seed in the tournament will be Annika Emtell and Sigrid Ivarsson. Other K-State teams competing are Tara White and Shawna Smith, and Thresa Burcham and Mistee Bitner.

"I didn't take this job to be here two or three years and be a loser," Infante told a news conference. "We'll work our tails off. We'll be a winner." Infante, 47, signed a five-year contract, the details of which were not released. Mackovic to coach at Illinois CHAMPAIGN, III. - John Mackovic, former Kansas City Chiefs coach, was chosen Tuesday night as head football coach at Illinois, sources at the university said. Mackovic, 44, was selected during a closed-door meeting of the school's Athletic Association Board, the sources told The Associated Press. Illini defensive coordinator Howard Tippett, who also had sought the job, said Athletic Director Neale Stoner had called him to say Mackovic had been selected. Neale called me about half an hour after their meeting broke up," Tippett said.

He also traveled to Madison, Wis., on Jan. 30 to compete in the Wisconsin Quadrangular. In that meet, he won the long jump with a mark of 25-6% and the triple jump with a leap of 54-2%. Both of these marks were field house records.

Concrete streets cheaper than asphalt, study shows

By Robert Manchon Collegian Reporter

It costs about as much to maintain 100 miles of concrete streets in Manhattan as it does to maintain 13 miles of asphalt, according to a study presented at the 11th Annual Scholer Concrete Conference Thursday in Forum Hall.

A mile of asphalt costs about $4,125, compared to $400 per mile for concrete, said Randy Riley, director of engineering and technical services of the American Concrete Pavement Association, who presented the study.

Concrete streets are not only cheaper, Riley said, they also reflect 'Concrete is not a perfect product. It has its problems, but where else can you get 50 years of service?" he said. "One of the nice things about concrete is its reflectability."

Asphalt surfaces need twice as many lights for visibility as concrete surfaces do, Riley said. Studies show that the higher reflectability of concrete streets has saved some communities more than $20,000 in street lighting costs. It has also saved $1,000 in construction and maintenance costs.

Concrete streets also last longer than asphalt, Riley said.

"Concrete pavements have been around for a long time and they have given excellent levels of performance. The first concrete street was built in Bellsville, Ohio, in 1893. Today this street needs only minor restoration," Riley said.

Riley said although some concrete streets don't look as good or ride as smoothly as they used to, with minor restoration, they can last from 50 to 75 years.

There is a method that combines asphalt and concrete, Riley said. White topping is when concrete is placed on existing asphalt. "This process, called fast tracking, shows great promise. A road can be open within 24 hours if necessary,"

The average maintenance cost for concrete streets nationwide is $400 per mile and $4,000 per mile for asphalt streets.

Patients remain in hospitals longer than necessary for care

By The Associated Press

CHICAGO - Hospitals with the most competition have been most likely to let surgical patients stay longer, boosting America's "medical arms race" and adding to high costs, a study has found.

Doctors and patients prefer longer stays for major surgical procedures, to ensure adequate preparation before an operation, adequate recovery afterward and to reduce the nursing burden on family members, the study says.

But researchers who studied 1982 data on almost 500,000 patients were unable to find medical reasons for longer surgical stays at highcompetition hospitals, they said in Friday's Journal of the American Medical Association.

"Classic economic competition would lead you to believe that the more competition, the lower the cost," said one researcher, health economist Harold Luft of the University of California at San Francisco.

"In fact, what we found was the more competition, the higher the cost," he added in a telephone interview Thursday.

The study adds to previous evidence that hospitals respond to competition largely by adding fancy equipment, extra beds and other amenities - in effect, participating in a "medical arms race" that duplicates services and drives costs up, the researchers said.

tion, which represents more than 6,000 hospitals nationwide, had no immediate comment on the study, said spokeswoman Andrea Mann.

The picture has changed since their study, the researchers acknowledge, because new spending limits set by the Medicare program starting in 1983 and similar pressures from private health plans have "dramatically reduced" lengths of stay. But overall costs are still going up,

The American Hospital Associa- and the researchers now are investigating "whether there is still a differential between competitive and noncompetitive" markets, said James Robinson, assistant professor of health economics at the University of California at Berkeley.

Robinson and colleagues found that in 1982 "hospitals in the most competitive markets reported average lengths of patient stay 16.9 percent higher ... than comparable hospitals that had no nearby neighbors.'

The heat is on.

This summer may be your last chance to graduate from college with a degree and an officer's commission. Sign up for ROTC's six-week Basic Camp now. See your Professor of Military Science for details. But hurry. The time is short. The space is limited. The heat is on.

Even if you missed the first 2 years of ROTC, you can still graduate as an officer.

Ladell Payne, president of Randolph-Macon College in Ashland, Va., said some of Bennett's criticisms were based on "misleading and inaccurate information."

They "leave us less than comfortable with the notion that you are seriously interested in the problems," Payne said.

Richard Berendzen, president of American University, said afterwards, "There are even a few government officials who say foolish things. I think I heard one this morning."

Berendzen said in an interview he thinks Bennett "is caught in a time warp. He thinks it's the 1960s and he's at Berkeley. ... He's flailing at a villain most of us can't quite find."

Bennett charged last month that "academic intimidation" was going on at Stanford, where officials are considering changing the Western Culture course requirements.

The outlines of the new Democratic aid package remained vague. House Majority Whip Tony Coelho,

D-Calif., said, however, it is likely to reach beyond the short-term needs of the rebels, whose U.S. aid ends Feb. 29, to encompass a long-term economic development package for the

In addition, Coehlo said the legislation may address the issue of whether private American citizens should be permitted to raise thirdparty contributions as a way of keeping military aid flowing to the rebels an action seen by anti-Contra forces as potentially undermining the peace process.

"We want to be for something, as opposed to just being against something," Coelho said. "We are for continued involvement in Central America ... The question is whether there is progress on the peace process. The peace process is the key."

now, Alexander said. He doesn't see the station increasing the number of classic rock hits played at 97-FM from about one or two an hour.

"I have never seen a market where the classic rock format is No. 1," he said. "The problem is that classic rock gets old after a while because there are just so many classic rock hits out there."

Alexander said 95 percent of the requests are for current songs, but certain classics get regular requests. Three programs are aired by 97-FM featuring classic rock.

At 9 p.m. on Sundays "Classic Call" is aired. A "classic" group or performer calls a list of people who want to ask them questions.

At 11 p.m. on Sundays, "Classic Cuts" is broadcast. A "classic" song and information about that song is presented. The performers then sing parts of the song or album.

Midnight on Sundays, "Classic Discs" is aired. The station plays a classic album that has been redone on compact disc.

KOLA-FM operates on a mass appeal format, playing selective hits every hour.

"We highlight classic rock once per hour," said Kevin Wagner, program director.

Even though KQLA would never go to a classic rock format, this music does have its audience, he said. "Classic rock has a very narrow audience," Wagner said. "This trend hit Manhattan a little late. Actually it is burning out. It is a very short-lived format."

KQLA does do a Sunday morning program called "Cruisin' America," that features '50s and '60s "be-bop"

KMKF/KMAN reaches two different segments of the market — adult contemporary (KMAN-AM) and the 18-24 segment (KMKF-FM).

Roger Hamilton, program director for the two stations, said they usually play nine or 10 contemporary hits and three classic rock hits in one

The stations usually change part of their formats to adapt to what is popular, he said.

"We may change some part of our formats to meet the trends of the time. We never say never," Hamilton

In general, women said they liked children more than men did, and people with high femininity scores tended to say they liked kids more than did those respondents who had high masculine scores.

Demographically "people from rural backgrounds tended to have higher liking of children scores," Barnett said.

Respondents from large families also tended to like children more, he

People who said they liked children also believed men and women should get paid leave of absence from work when a child is born. They also found pregnant women more attractive.
